I was extremely tired when I stopped at the tube station and faced the woman behind the cage marked information. Our trip from Dover to London had been a grueling one, for I had not yet become accustomed to driving on the left and the steering wheel of our little car was on the "wrong side." But since I was anxious to make every moment in the great city count, I had dragged myself out of bed in order to go downtown.

"Please," I said, "could you tell me how to get to Piccadilly Circus?"

Without lifting her eyes from the novel she was reading, she replied with a jumble of incoherent sounds I could not understand. The sounds bubbling up from some deep cavern within her ample frame reminded me of the noise produced by an old-fashioned sausage grinder on grandfather's farm.

I tried again. "Please, I want to get to Piccadilly—"

Again she replied with the same incomprehensible polysyllables, and the deep frown on her pasty face assured me that I would be insulting her if I inquired again. But fortunately a gentleman saw my problem and offered to help. He showed me how to get a ticket by dropping the proper coins in a slot. Then he escorted me to the lift, descended with me to the proper level, and pointed to the train I should board. And all of this was done with a smile!

Receiving unintelligible directions is a common experience. Every traveler learns that when he hears "you can't miss it," that that is exactly what he will do. The basic problem is that we assume everyone knows all we know, and we act accordingly. And most unfortunately, many who are seeking the abundant way are often confused by eager directors who do not speak plainly enough to be heard or understood by nonchurchgoers.

When Francis Gardner found herself in church for the first time, she had no idea what was happening. When the leader asked for witnesses and testimonies she thought she must be in some kind of court, for in her mind "witnesses" and "testimonies" were legal terms.

Christian nations are filled with people who have no idea at all of religious terminology. To Joe Doaks a feast is a table loaded with edibles, not a session at church where one is inspired by a missionary. Likewise, to millions the word Jesus is merely a swear word. It does not flash before their eyes the image of the "only begotten Son of God paying for the sins of the world."

The art of effectively witnessing through plain speech is an art that all of us should study. Jesus was the master at this and He led the way.

If you will study His sermons and interviews you will find that He reached people through words and ideas that they understood. As He spoke to His disciples by Galilee
He referred to fish; on the roof of a house with the wind tugging at His gown, He spoke to Nicodemus about the source of the wind; and when He spoke to a group out in the fields He talked about seed. Moreover, He spoke in very simple terms and knew how to get the interest of a prospect at once. As He rested on the edge of a well, He asked the Samaritan woman for a drink; and then after He had slaked His thirst, He remarked: "Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again. . . ." Nothing could have been plainer or more simple than that. Many of us might have considered it to have been beneath our dignity to have made such a remark. But as the result of those simple words a revival was kindled and many found the abundant life.

Would-be writers seem convinced that they should be difficult. They scorn the simple declarative sentence and the short Anglo-Saxon words. Instead, they produce long, complicated sentences filled with Latin derivatives. And as a result the only thing they receive for their labor is a printed rejection slip. The speakers and writers and leaders who last are the ones who know how to make difficult things plain.

At Gettysburg, Edward Everett started his nearly two-hour speech with a long, finely balanced sentence; while Abe Lincoln started his with the simple words: "Fourscore and seven years ago. . . ." Edward Everett's words have been forgotten while those of President Lincoln have become immortal.

Newell Dwight Hillis made a comment on the contrast that sums it up very well. "Everett's oration was a bushel of diamonds carefully polished, Lincoln's a handful of seed corn that has sown the world with the harvest of liberty."

Few preachers have been more effective than Alexander Maclaren of Manchester. His scholarship and evangelistic zeal drew large congregations. When an agnostic started to attend, Dr. Maclaren prepared a series of sermons which he hoped would remove the man's doubts. And then toward the end of the series the agnostic marched forward and took a public stand for Christ.

"Which one of my sermons won you?" asked Maclaren, eagerly.

"Oh, it wasn't any of your sermons at all," replied the man. "It all happened when a lady dropped her umbrella on the church steps. As I picked it up for her, she said: 'Have you learned to know my Jesus? He means everything to me!' The look of joy on her face convinced me."

But perhaps the most subtle mistake many of us make is that of confusing the prospect by leading him beyond his depth. We outline John 3:16 for him, and then about the time he understands this we take him down the "Romans road"; and then we make a detour into First John. The seasoned Christian understands all of this. He knows that the various analogies describe the one single way. But the poor inquirer who may not know the difference between the gospels and the epistles is only confused.

Being in a hurry to reach my next appointment, I asked my host to draw a map to show me the way. I followed him carefully as he told me just what to do. But just as I was about to understand, his wife spoke up. "That's all wrong," she said. "This is the way." I then concentrated on her system, and it did seem a little easier. But this wasn't the end, for just as I was about to leave a daughter came in and announced that both her mother and father were wrong, that there was a much better way.

Thoroughly confused, I stopped at a filling station and followed the directions given by the attendant.

The basic way of salvation is a plain way. Isaiah declared that it would be so plain "the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein." Isaiah 35:8.

Those who know how to make it plain are following in the steps of Peter, Paul, and Jesus!

The Practice of Prayer

"Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice" (Ps. 55:17).

Two things are primary for life — one is air and the other is food. Prayer is called the Christian's "vital breath" the Christian's "native air." The Scripture is called the "bread of life" and the "milk" on which we are nourished. Prayer promotes our spiritual life and growth as nothing else, except feeding on God's Word.

David knew the importance of prayer. He knew that the only way to be triumphant over the pressures which pull us down and the cares which distract and cause doubt, is by constant watching unto prayer. It is still true that the prayerless person is a powerless person.

Those who know least about the practice and persistence of personal or corporate prayer have the most doubts as to how prayer works. When prayer is not practiced its effectiveness is doubted, its worth is questioned, and its joy is not understood.

But those who practice prayer do not question its effectiveness even though it cannot be explained in natural terms. Those who pray in sincerity do not doubt its worth because somehow in His own way God works His will. Those who pray know the joy of prayer and don’t waste much time on how prayer works. And if Jesus, Lord of all, needed to pray, how much more we need to pray.
Making the Word Flesh

One basic religious question has a new answer in every decade. It is, What is the primary task of the congregation? It must be asked not only by the congregation but by Christian education leaders if they are to be helpful servants to the congregation. The simple answer, "spread the gospel," is no answer because it does not consider the context in which the good news is to be spread nor how the Word is to be made flesh in this particular decade. To those who say, "But the gospel doesn't change" let me answer, "You are wrong." For the medium is the message. It is one package. The Word is the Word only when it is made flesh to people in a particular time and place and in a way that they can understand it.

Those congregations which refuse to change their medium to match the seventies have no message for the contemporaries of the seventies — only for the people whose psyches were formed in the fifties or the forties or the thirties. Those who refuse to change the medium are usually unaware that their message has become empty when they don't. The congregation must make the Word flesh in every decade. When they don't, they are unfaithful.

The place where congregations are missing it most at the moment is in communicating the gospel to a generation of young people who can't stand linear discourse. Lately I heard more young people than ever say, "We have heard enough of talk." Unless talk is matched with appropriate action it is to this generation a sick trumpet in the wind. That should be our first cue. It is a time for less talk. It is a time for action.

Every generation of Mennonites must be regenerated in the fires of its own convictions. We must discern where the conviction is so we can see where God is working. There is the place for us to help the congregation to get moving again.

Once John Wesley was conversing with General Oglethorpe when word was brought that a certain subordinate of Oglethorpe's had been found guilty of minor disobedience. Scowling at Wesley, the general growled, "You know, Mr. Wesley, I never forgive."

"Then I hope, sir," replied Wesley, "that you never sin!"
— William P. Barker in As Matthew Saw the Master (Fleming H. Revell Company).

By Still Waters

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee" (Is. 26:3).

We lack peace when we let our mind center on ourselves. The fitful, frustrated, and fear mind is centered on self. As selfishness can never bring satisfaction, so putting our own concern first will never bring peace. The psalmist says the secret to peace is to center our minds on God — that is, who He is, what His will is, and the accomplishment of His will. Strange as it seems, yet it is strikingly true to life, that joy comes, not in doing our own will but in doing the divine will.

We lack peace when we let our minds center on circumstances. Circumstances distract and doubt our doubts. We doubt God's care when we fix our minds on the adverse, the unexpected, and the ill-happening rather than on the God who knows the end from the beginning. Temptation and trial is the time to turn our minds on God. The promise of security is not for the fearful and doubting heart but for the heart which puts all its confidence in God. And He promises us perfect peace.

Makes Me Love Everybody

There is an old gospel song that says, "The old-time religion — makes me love everybody." Maybe this old song needs to be brought back into the worship service and for sure its message of loving everybody must be brought back.

The "old-time religion" is the religion that Jesus taught and lived — and died for. Nothing is more heartbreaking than to see people of the church failing to love everybody. Nothing in the whole world is so beautiful as to see a person whose heart goes out in compassionate love for all people.

I think I hear more condemnation these days than ever before in my life. Politicians, preachers, and people from all walks of life are showing their real feelings of rejection of their fellowmen. You do not condemn a person into being a good citizen or Christian — you love them into it. All of the "gaps" that threaten to destroy mankind are made wider by our condemnation.

We disagree and begin to hate. We misunderstand and withdraw fellowship. We say we have heard enough of this "love stuff" and reveal the real feeling that is down in our hearts. We do not just condemn a person's action that may be wrong — we condemn the person.

I ask the church to join with me in daily prayers that the people of God may come to "love everybody." This is the saving salt — this is the light set on a hill. This is the body of Christ living in a sinful world. This is the only hope for bridging the gaps that separate mankind from each other — and God. — Hubert Covington, Woodbine Church, Nashville.
Try the Spirits

Today is a time when it is doubly important to test the spirits. All kinds of voices are speaking. Some so-called prophets are even making predictions with a fair amount of fulfillment. Who is a true prophet? Who is false?

It is good to recall the Scripture concerning the last days. Many shall arise speaking great things and doing great things and shall draw many persons after them. Yet these things do not necessarily say that those who say and do them are of God. So our call as Christians is to try the spirits to see what is of God and what is not of Him. For this testing we have the Scriptures themselves, the Holy Spirit who leads to truth, and fellow believers whose lives preach and portray love for Christ and His will.

A number of guides are given in the Old Testament to help test the true. In Deuteronomy 13 Israel was told that even if a prophet's prophesies come true yet he draws attention away from God or lessens love for God, he is not God's prophet.

In Isaiah 28 false prophets are characterized as living in reveling and riches. They demonstrate their devotion to themselves rather than to God because they care first for their own pleasure and profit.

Jeremiah says in chapter 23 that false leaders let people under the impression that no punishment will result from their sin. Their story is that God is all sweetness and light, that He will overlook sin.

According to Ezekiel 13 a genuine prophet speaks on behalf of another. He speaks not his own message, but is a medium of God's Word. A false prophet however speaks a message people like to hear.

Micah in chapter 3 says that the false prophet says peace to the rich who feed them well but has no answer from God on the issues confronting the people. The concern is food and money and for this he distorts and even suppresses the truth and is ultimately unable to discern the truth. Such ignore the problems of the time and pay little attention to the Word of God. Such also lack power and consistent honesty.

Zephaniah chapter 3 says that a false prophet does not preserve the distinction between the holy and profane. He is a braggart, extravagant, and arrogant about his own ideas.

Help to discern or test the spirits can be sighted in the New Testament as well. In addition to the numerous Scriptures which tell us who are the sons of God and the sons of Satan and those which tell us that Christ's follower is one who does not rob Christ of His deity and divinity or of his atoning death, there are other signs that one is led of the Holy Spirit. The following are a few although, of course, not all.

One under the control of God's Spirit speaks of Christ and not of himself. Even the Holy Spirit, the Scripture says, "shall not speak of himself." The Holy Spirit's work is to magnify and to draw attention to Christ. So the one led of the Spirit does the same.

Beware of the person who parades his own program, seeks praise for himself or is a great promoter of personalities rather than the one person — Jesus Christ. Self-centeredness and selfishness is a mark of a false prophet. A false prophet sets a premium on things that exalt man.

In Marks of False Teachers the writer says, "The false teachers hide their lack of the real gospel message by playing up debatable issues. They wrangle about incitements. They call themselves God's special messengers to revive and preserve the truth, which are their man-made doctrines. Usually they claim to have had a vision or dream in which they were given this special commission from God to be a defender of the faith. . . . The false teacher does not make Jesus Christ the center of his message, but plays up some mysterious doctrine which he claims to have received by special revelation. . . ."

"The false teacher lacks humility, love, and sacrifice. He is anxious to demonstrate his ability and authority. He is driven by a desire to establish himself as a hero. He exalts himself and often humiliates and condemns others. The spirit of brotherly love, and 'in honor preferring one another' is missing."

One led by the Holy Spirit unites rather than divides. Unity is the work of the Holy Spirit — a unity created around Jesus Christ and His redemptive work. It is the unity which the one led by the Spirit will endeavor to keep while a hireling scatters the flock.

One who is led by the Holy Spirit will follow both "peace and holiness." Today everyone seems ready to laud the former. But not so many are interested in holiness. But without both of these we will not see the Lord here or hereafter. That is, without these we cannot be on His side here or eternally. The life in which the Holy Spirit dwells must be holy.

If one thing is clear it is this that many who cry "peace, peace" are not necessarily nudged by the Holy Spirit. The Scripture warns of some who will cry exactly this at the very time destruction is near. So we must link the holy life with the love for peace. Somehow the person who cries for peace and equality yet defends four letter words, pot, and alcohol, doesn't ring true. Both peace and holiness must characterize the life of the true prophet of the Lord.

Finally a simple formula to test the true as against the false spirit is — Is Christ magnified? Is His Word obeyed? Is there love for all and a deep desire to help others on the path of peace and holiness? — D.
In Memory of Rowena Lark

Ed. note — On March 5, 1970 Rowena (Mrs. James) Lark of Fresno, Calif., passed away following a heart attack at the age of 77. Born in Savannah, Ga., Mrs. Lark was widely known for her musical abilities and together with her husband helped to pioneer black urban ministries in the Mennonite Church.

LeRoy and Irene Bechler, now serving with the Calvary Mennonite Church in the Los Angeles area, have been close associates of the Lark family for many years. In the following article, the Bechers tell what Mrs. Lark’s life and passing has meant to them personally.

An Urban Pioneer

Though the Mennonite Church had issued its first eclesiastical protest against slavery on February 18, 1688 at Germantown, Pa., more than 200 years went by before any substantial effort was made to embrace members of the Negro race within the church. Thus it was in the providence of God that James and Rowena Lark became members of the Mennonite Church, and that later Bro. Lark should be ordained pastor and bishop. The couple truly pioneered new territories. Their venturing faith enlarged the vision of the church and encouraged its growing involvement in the nation’s urban areas over the past several decades.

The summer of 1946 I entered Voluntary Service as part of the church’s mission program in Chicago under the direction of the Larks. As a farm-oriented boy, I shall never forget the patience and love they demonstrated to unit members. Their love, dedication, and sacrifice to the Lord made an impact on my life. Their unceasing concern that the Mennonite Church take advantage of the opportunity to share its resources and personnel with a people largely excluded from the mainstream of society made an indelible impression upon me. That summer I dedicated my life to serve my Lord in the ghettos of our cities.

Rowena Lark was one of the most talented and devoted Christians I have ever known. Her life manifested a vital faith and walk with the Lord. She was a devoted wife who shared the visions of her husband. Her leadership was keenly felt among youth and adults alike. Her illustrated lessons, Scripture memorization, and singing led many to Christ.

The Word of God was her shield and sword and she didn’t hesitate to use it. As one entered her home he became conscious that God was speaking through placards of Scripture located at strategic locations in every room.

The words of God to Joshua became her motto: “... as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee: I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee. ... Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest.” Her commitment to the Lord she loved has been used of God to challenge my life again and again.

Sister Lark was truly a great urban pioneer in the Mennonite Church. Just as she gave so sacrificially of herself to Christ and the church to meet the needs of her day, I pray that we as a church will give of ourselves for the continuing challenges of today. — LeRoy Bechler

A Contagious Love For Jesus

The day was hot and muggy. The school auditorium was crowded with children ranging in age from kindergarten through high school. Some were well-dressed and disciplined; others were restless with the marks of life in the ghetto clearly visible. But everyone was singing! Eyes were fixed upon neatly written song charts. More than that they were inspired to sing lustily under the energetic dynamic leadership of a vital Christian woman. Her eyes and manner challenged the group to do their best. They sang hymns and choruses, followed by Scriptures and prayers. That was the summer of 1950 as I was teaching Bible school in Chicago at Bethel Mennonite Church.

My mind again reels back a number of years. Another group of children are gathered together in the basement of a country church. As the Sunday school begins, all the curtains are drawn back and once again kindergarten through grade eight children are singing. Everyone is alert, for special guests are present. It is the first time most have seen black people at our church. The dynamics are the same. The eye contact and vitality are such that everyone wants to sing his very best for Jesus.

Then Mrs. Lark and her young son sing, “Blessed Jesus, hold my hand, I need Thee every hour. Through this pilgrim land, protect me by Thy power. Hear my feeble plea, O Lord, abide with me. For I need Thy light to guide me day and night. Blessed Jesus, hold my hand.” That was 1944 or 1945. I was a teacher of a junior class at the East Bend Mennonite Church in Fisher, Ill.

The Missionary Conference is in progress; the first for a newly formed group of believers. The audience is not large, but one couldn’t tell this by the singing. The song leader is older and thinner than she once was, but the eyes sparkle the same and the contagious love for Jesus brings an enthusiastic response from those who follow her as she leads.
them in singing. "Deeper, deeper in the love of Jesus, Daily let me go; Higher, higher in the school of wisdom. More of grace to know."

Then it's special music time and the strains of "Precious Lord, Take My Hand," and "We shall walk through the valley in peace" are so clear that I can hear them yet.

This "Mother in Israel" has left me with many wonderful memories. I shall remember her love for God's Word and her concern for people, especially children. Music was often the tool she used to bring the two together.

Thank you, dear Lord, for Sister Rowena Lark's ministry in my life. — Mrs. Irene Bechler

The Predicaments and Concerns of Youth  By Lois Conklin

America's young people are being sold short and with tragic results. Everybody is concerned about juvenile delinquency and about the lost and beat generation. The older generation must share part of the blame. Of even greater concern is that large group of young people who are not considered delinquents but who are looking at life aimlessly, without moral and spiritual values that are a vital part of the Christian character. Our young people are being let down in multiple ways and the harvest of neglect will be reaped in the years that lie ahead.

An honest appraisal of the situation forces us to admit that the plight in which many young people find themselves is not of their own making. We as young people do share numerous concerns. An elderly person once said to me, "You know, Lois, the kids of today are like concrete. They're all mixed up and permanently set in their ways." Nevertheless, we are convinced that the average young person wants to know the score and is hungering for meaningful relationships and reality.

I feel that one of the major concerns of students today is that of self-identification: "Who am I?" "What am I doing here?" and "Where am I going?" Self-identification can occur when one knows who he is and what he wants. Two outgrowths of this self-identification are the capacity for tenderness towards others and a respect for competence. In our empirical world, a youth who does not know what he is good at, will not know what he can do in order to know who he is. Someone has said, "The youth of today should never be afraid to trust an unknown future to a known God." And yet there is an ever increasing amount of teenage suicides which give evidence of their ever-present tension.

Another concern of youth today is the desire to belong. To put it another way, most of youth's peculiarities can be understood by adults if they see them as efforts to belong. Fads in music, language, hairstyles, and fashions are all intense efforts on the part of the teenager to find acceptance. He wants to be in touch on a personal level and he lives in the present tense of now. Involvement is more important to him than information. Experience counts far more to him than exercises. Abstract theology and credo correctness are not crucial to him. Repudiating the errors of liberal theology is so-called dullsville. It's the heart of things, not the head of things that concern them most.

Teenagers want to know Christ personally. It's not enough for them to know that Christ didn't condemn the woman caught in adultery, for they themselves want to know forgiveness and freedom from guilt. We are an intensely personal generation and it is often this intensity which causes adults to become uncomfortable.

Another concern of students today is that of freedom and independence. Society can not permit the youth to indulge indiscriminately. For example, any educational institution which does not make the teaching of self-discipline one of its chief goals is ultimately doomed for chaos.

Most significant about the willingness of our youth today to march, to sit-in, or to agitate for what they believe, is youth's understanding that the freedom to participate in the reshaping of society is of all freedoms the most necessary to obtain. Daniel Webster once said, "If we abide by the laws taught in the Bible, our country will go on prospering. But if we neglect its instructions and authorities, no man can tell how suddenly a catastrophe may come upon and bury us." Unless the youth of today practice the self-discipline necessary to understand the problems of society, they have the power to shatter our instilled way of life, and they probably will. Wild oats need no fertilizer.

Many freedoms come cheaply, such as the freedom to run and the freedom to talk. But the freedom to run the four-minute mile or the freedom to sway large masses of people by the magic of the greatest orator carry a high price tag. Let us pray for our youth of today for as someone has said, "All of the flowers of tomorrow are in the seeds of today." And may God help the youth of today realize the necessity of Him in their lives.

I feel that perhaps the greatest concern of students today is that of the problem of bridges versus barriers. Or in other terms, parents versus teenagers. One might ask why is there so much friction in this parent-teenager situation? I feel that there is no single answer, but we must all agree that these differences do at times become acute.

Walter Wenger has said, "Teenagers vibrantly in love with life have a way of annoying people for whom the sands of time have begun to settle, and these annoyances are mirrored in a way that our youth are being understood by the harsh judgmental attitudes toward them."

I think that parents and older folks of today should remember that both running up hills and running down young people are bad for the heart. The way to judge youth is by its highest expression, not its lowest. This period need not be such a troublesome one if we simply follow some basic Bible truths. Colossians 3:20: "Children, obey your parents ... for this is well pleasing unto the Lord."

The Bible clearly expresses obedience to our parents even if we don't always see their point of view. Exodus 20:12: "Honour thy father and thy mother." This means much more than just mere obedience. I feel that if we would all—parents and teenagers alike—go to the Lord and seek His answer in prayer, many of these parent-teenager problems could be solved.

One might ask, where does this Christian witness fit into all of this? The Christian youth will certainly receive some persecution from people of antichristian viewpoints, but then, so did Christ. When a Christian young person possesses the mind and heart of God, when one communicates with God through the Holy Spirit through His Word and through prayer, and when one lives in anticipation for Christ's return—then one can live a Christlike, unified life even in an antichristian environment.

Christ knew this problem before He ever left this earth, and because He knew it, He was thinking of all His future disciples to come when He prayed, "I am not praying that you will take them out of the world, but that you will keep them from the evil one. They are no more the sons of the world than I am—make them holy by thy Truth for your word is the Truth. I have sent them to the world just as you sent me to the world." (Jn. 17:15-18).

I feel that the predicaments and concerns of youth have no quick or easy solutions. It requires prayer, dedication of parents, and the church as a whole. The gospel of God's grace is not bound and it continues to be the power of God unto salvation. In it are the moral and spiritual values by which alone man can live. By it alone can the predicaments and concerns of youth be solved.

In conclusion, I would like to close with a prayer for youth of all ages. "Dear Lord, give us political leaders who will really lead, who will encourage us to give instead of take and to care for others as well as ourselves. Leaders who are not afraid to rock the boat. Whose aims are to serve and follow You knowing that they will be supported by thoughtful and committed voters.

"Lord, help us to realize that we can never be successful on a national scale unless we first become successful individuals, and that our success is measured and governed by our closeness to You. Lead us into personal relationships with You that suit our different personalities. Wake up Your church to the needs of You and to the needs of the world. Let us forget about doing only the ceremonial things which make us feel good and get down to caring, worshiping, and serving You.

"Lord, make us a nation that searches for peace and then in our time lead us to this peace. May we be an example to the world of disciplined peace researchers. Let us neither regress nor support aggression and may we strive as much as we have it in us to live in peace, in peace with our fellowman.

"Oh, Lord, these prayers seem like an awful lot to ask, and we ourselves don't have a great deal of faith, only a tiny mustard seed. But we feel that these are the things that stand behind and that given the right kind of servants, You can get them done.

"As young people we are often selfish. Our leaders are often shortsighted. And we are pretty halfhearted most of the time. So Lord, we are depending on You to stir us up to an intellectual and active commitment to these goals. Stir us us to heartfelt commitment to You and make each day we live a free and vibrant experience of love and service to You. Amen."

How Do We Know?

"That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith" (Eph. 3:17).

One of the sad things is that, to many professed Christians, Christ is no more than a historic person. He lived. He died centuries ago. What he has to do with today is unknown. The cross, His atoning death is as far as many go.

But we need to know something much more than that. We need to know the living Christ is the Christ who died and rose again; the Christ who ascended to heaven and the Christ who, in the person of His Spirit, came down to earth again to dwell in us and to change us from one glory to another into the very image of Christ.

What a difference this truth makes when it really hits us. We "serve a living Savior. He's in the world today. I know that He is living, whatever men may say." How do we know? Because He dwells within us which is the hope of glory. Because He shows us what is Christ's will and what is not His will. Because He fills us with His love, His own compassion, and the same concerns He has. For one of the best tests as to whether we know Christ as the living Lord and Savior is just in this: a growing consciousness of His will and the power to do His will.
Much has been printed lately in popular magazines and newspapers on the problem of communicating with, and understanding of other people. It is often implied that this breakdown is essentially a problem between youth and their parents, although it is usually more colorfully phrased along the lines of "the acknowledgment of a breach of understanding between idealistic youth with visions of change vs. the status quo establishment." This so called generation gap is supposedly broadening or deepening to the extent that we really should not expect those from "the other generation," who are set in their ways, to ever be able to understand our "today" world, according to some. Recently, I have encountered some people who feel this problem exists in our church to an even greater extent than the world in general. I disagree. While it is true, the Mennonite Church is changing (who wants a stagnant church?) and communication isn't always easy, I, as a youth, do not think we should shrug off this problem as a "generation gap."

I am not saying communication problems don't exist, and obviously, some do involve different generations, but basically, the problem is not just age differences. Let's take a close look at ourselves. Each of us develops into a unique person, from a vast intermingling of various inputs, such as background, personal experience, reading, imagination, and memory. No two people ever have the same inputs to combine in building the self. Your own personal set of experiences in life are influential in determining your own personal opinions, attitudes, and personality. Therefore, since no two people have exactly the same inputs, there will always be some differences in opinions, attitudes, etc. In addition, major events in our lives, such as marriage or occupation, often drastically change our immediate outlook and eventually other more abstract areas such as opinions and attitudes. We see then, in addition to each of us being different, we are also in a continual changing process. We could greatly enlarge the list of factors influencing our actions (culture, habits, group pressure, etc.), but I think the point is clear—we each have a unique set of tools with which to form our perception of life, values, change . . . you name it. This is one reason why we as individuals of similar cultural background, who speak the same language, still perceive and understand the world differently.

One breakdown of communication comes from the fact that some people have failed to learn that there are other people, who perceive the world from a different point of view, who may be equally correct in their perception also. This does not imply we should succumb to every differing opinion, but rather we must humble ourselves enough to realize that our perception of things may not be the one and only correct way—we should be able to add enlightenment to each other's thinking.

We must all grow beyond ourselves, realizing our own unique and minutely small segment of the total world is based on when we live, where we live, the places we visit and travel through, the things we read, and our occupation. In primitive worlds, views were simple and consistent enough for most individuals to share most of the substance. Today, our highly specialized Western society is diversified to the extent that no one really grasps more than a small fraction of the public, theoretical communicable world. The world is also transient: the world I live in is neither the world my parents knew nor the one my children will know. Horizons of knowledge are expanding faster than any person can keep up with. Therefore, it becomes increasingly important that we learn to accept others as they are. But this alone is not enough. In order to really begin to understand others, I feel we must endeavor to put ourselves in the "shoes" of that person.

Allon H. Lefever, Lancaster, Pa., is a student at Millersville State College.
In my own experience, I have been piqued by attitudes and opinions differing from my own. It is easy to become offensive in thinking (how could anyone really think that . . .) and reject differing substance as subjacent or inferior. Yet, if I stop and consider why the individual feels as he does, thinking of how I would see the issue from his vantage point, it often becomes possible to see his view. Conversely, when that person endeavors to understand my small world of events and experiences which have shaped my thinking, he quite often can understand my feelings, though he will still feel his particular opinion is best for him. This process of putting yourself in another's place is not easy — in fact, in the technical sense, it is impossible. But if we make an honest effort to see beyond ourselves, we have taken a giant step toward bettering communication.

In thinking of generation differences, this certainly applies. We, as youth, sometimes condemn and deplore the "thing" society of the previous generation; we want to see more feeling for others — a "people" society. But before we accuse, let's imagine growing up during the thirties, as our parents did, when "things" were scarce, when families needed to scrape for the necessities of life, and nice little extras could not always be purchased for the children. Our parents grew up determined to work hard to provide for their children the extras they could never enjoy. Today's youth have grown up with so much, that "things" have lost their value. See how one aspect of life, differing economic conditions, for example, can change attitudes? Or, take the changing economic conditions which cause youth to pursue occupations quite different from their parents. Differing occupations between generations is one of the hardest gaps to overcome; in fact, I often feel the occupational gap is a more realistic communication breakdown than the generation gap. The old saying, "Birds of a feather flock together," applies as well to occupations as to anything. I find it easier to communicate with professors over sixty than with farmers my own age. I also suppose a young farmer finds more communicable viewpoints with farmers over sixty, than with teachers his own age. Yet, if I stop and try to realize what constitutes importance in a farmer's life, I can understand him better, although I certainly am unable to comprehend completely, his way of life. If each of us could live a day or a week in another's life, we would probably see things differently. Sometime you have a day free, try spending it with someone whose normal daily activities are quite different from yours (in occupation, rural or urban living, etc.). I have found this to be an enlightening experience, especially in realizing that my own world is indeed a very small, but yet a unique segment of the whole. Reading and travel can be other ways to help us live beyond our limited experiences if we train ourselves to be aware of others. This process sounds almost trite, or simple, in a way; yet it seems there are some who have never been able to reach beyond themselves.

Recently a survey was taken at the school I attend in regard to the so-called generation gap. One result of particular significant interest to me (reaffirming my belief that a dangerous generation gap does not exist) was as follows: The students were asked if they felt most college students experienced a generation gap with their parents. More than four out of five answered yes. The next question was, "Do you feel a generation gap exists between you and your parents?" Less than two out of five answered yes. Combining this information, we see better than four in five imagine a generation gap exists generally, but less than two in five actually feel themselves included. Either our college is exceptional or the "generation gap" is less than imagined. I'm quite sure it is the latter.

Let's try then not to fall for the "generation gap" theory. Rather, we must realize that differences can usually be lessened by truly endeavoring to accept others for what they are. Attempting to understand why others feel as they do or by putting ourselves in the shoes of others will enable better communication. Brothers in Christ should be setting the example in love and understanding. Let's each do our part to dispel the "generation gap."

Stories of Faith

By Otto Dirks

Here are some stories of faith that one hears of or participates in not too infrequently.

One of our missionary language students was told by several language experts in America that he would never learn a foreign language — "absolutely no gift for language." But he felt that the Lord definitely called him to Taiwan. He discerned himself in the language, studied night and day, even lived on a Taiwanese farm for four weeks. I heard him preach an excellent Taiwanese sermon only a year and a half after he came. He is now out in a smaller city working right among the people. Faith in God won the day.

Peter Kehler, a General Conference Mennonite missionary, visited the home of one of his English students. The father said something like this: "What have you done to my boy? You have given him much more than English. Before he went to your classes, he was depressed, purposeless, and ready to commit suicide: now he is full of hope and seems to have found a new life."

A German Sister started visiting one of the many poor sections in Taipei and after a while some home Bible studies sprang up. The Holy Spirit moved in and a people's movement started. Many lives were changed. One father, for example, who had previously gambled, drunk, beaten his wife, and mistreated his children, met Christ. His neighbor soon noticed that things were different around the home next door. The children, for example, wore better clothes and had more to eat. One day he went over and said, "Hey, neighbor, level with me. You must have had a 'windfall.' Where did you get the money?" He was told that his neighbor had met Christ.

Yes, our Savior and Lord is mighty to save and redeem, to renew and build up.

Comments on a Much-Used and Abused Gospel Text

By John W. Miller

It is quite possible that the parable of the last judgment in Matthew 25:31-46 is the most widely quoted gospel text in our time. It is cited constantly in sermons, books, and articles and bids fair to become the chief proof text of a new theology. I have long felt that it is also one of the most widely misunderstood of Jesus’ teachings.

The climactic words of the parable are those spoken by the great King, first to those on His right hand, then to those on His left: “Come, O blessed of my Father . . . for I was hungry and you gave me food, I was thirsty and you gave me drink, I was a stranger and you welcomed me, I was naked and you clothed me, I was sick and you visited me. I was in prison and you came to me. . . . Depart from me, you cursed. . . . for I was hungry and you gave me no food, I was thirsty and you gave me no drink, I was a stranger and you did not welcome me, naked and you did not clothe me, sick and in prison and you did not visit me.” Both those on His right hand and those on His left are astonished at this verdict. When did they serve or refuse to serve the Lord of all the earth in this way? The Judge replies: “Truly, I say to you, as you did it to one of the least of these my brethren, you did it to me.”

The now almost standard interpretation of these simple, powerful words goes something like this: “In every man or woman in need Christ Himself confronts us. Christ so identifies Himself with the world’s poor and their needs that in our response to them we make our response to Him. On the day of judgment we will not be asked about our creeds, our pious practices, our sophisticated theologies. On that day one question and one question only will be important: Did we or did we not feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the sick, and succor those in prison? And on that question will hang our eternal destiny.”

But is this really what this parable is saying? A doubt arises when we consider that this rather novel line of thinking can be found nowhere else in the teachings of Jesus. To be sure there are dominical words calling us to compassionate sharing. Who hasn’t heard the story of the Good Samaritan? But where else in the Gospels is it even suggested that every hungry man, every stranger, every prisoner, by virtue of his hunger, his loneliness, or his being in prison is a “Christ” figure? And where else is the totality of Jesus’ message summarized under the one mandate of charity toward the destitute? Would that not be to reduce Christianity to one vast material aid society, a possibility that Jesus rejected in His first temptation?

Turning to the parable itself, it would seem that insufficient attention has been paid to the meaning of the words: “my brethren” (v. 40). Jesus identifies the hungry, thirsty, homeless, and imprisoned ones mentioned in the parable as “my brethren.” The now popular interpretation reads this as though Jesus were here calling all the world’s destitute His brethren. But that is nowhere explicitly said. What the parable does say is simply that these particular sufferers are “my brethren.” And when we check elsewhere in Matthew’s Gospel on the use of these words, we discover this is the way Jesus always and exclusively speaks about His disciples! Would He use the word “brethren” then in just this one place in a different way? That is most unlikely. It is in fact impossible when we bring under consideration another fact. There exists a striking parallel passage in Matthew’s Gospel to the one under consideration. If anyone wants to understand the parable of the final judgment in Matthew 25, the first place to which he should turn is Matthew 10:40-42, and there he will read:

“He who receives you receives me, and he who receives me receives him who sent me. He who receives a prophet because he is a prophet shall receive a prophet’s reward, and he who receives a righteous man because he is a righteous man shall receive a righteous man’s reward. And whoever gives to one of these little ones even a cup of cold water because he is a disciple, truly, I say to you, he shall not lose his reward.”

“Whoever gives to one of these little ones even a cup of cold water because he is a disciple, . . . .” Does not that make it perfectly clear who Jesus is talking about in Matthew 25? Both here and in the parable of the last judgment Jesus is speaking of disciples, and He is saying that these disciples are His representatives in the world. And this is an idea which is to be found throughout the Gospels and the New Testament. Jesus is present "in the midst" of two or three gathered together in His name (Mt. 18:20). This is the core idea of that great Pauline figure of the church as the body of Christ. "Saul, Saul," the stunned persecutor of the church heard the voice from heaven saying, "why are you persecuting me?"

But if then those suffering, persecuted people in the parable of Matthew 25 are Christian disciples, who then are those being called before the throne of judgment? The parable identifies them rather precisely. They are the nations (v. 32)! And no one in the first century would have read into this the idea of "Christian nations." No, these are the peoples of the world who know nothing about Israel, about Jesus, or about His movement. It is no surprise then that they did not know that their treatment of Christ's followers amounted to a response to Christ Himself. They had no idea that in confronting these poor, lowly, and persecuted disciples they were confronting the one who sent them.

It is not Christians who are depicted in this parable as being called to trial on the basis of their service or lack of service to the world's destitute, but the nations who are being tried on the basis of their actions toward destitute Christians.

Far then from being a word of challenge more or less specifically to wealthy Christians this parable calls the whole position of Christianity in the Western world into question. It speaks to us out of an era when Christianity bore the cross of Christ in the reality of persecution, hunger, homelessness, and imprisonment. It speaks to us of a Christianity that knows itself to be on a prophetic mission to the world in the name of Christ, and to which the words apply: "He who receives you, receives me."

And that is why, of course, we have misappropriated this parable. We are no longer in touch with a Christianity of that kind. And that too is why it is so fearful to contemplate that other judgment scene depicted in Matthew's Gospel, the one that concludes the collection of Jesus' words known as the Sermon on the Mount. Here now, it is not the nations who are being called before the tribunal of the Lord of history. Here now we can read of the final judgment of the disciples (Mt. 7:21-27). And they are judged, not alone on the basis of their compassion toward the poor, but on the basis of their obedience to the whole range of Jesus' remarkable insights and imperatives collected together here and elsewhere in the Gospel traditions.

On the occasion of the birth of her first granddaughter, a very wise old mother wrote the mother of the child as follows: "Teach her as many of the 700,000 words of the English language as you can, but be sure she knows the greatest word is God; the longest word, eternity; the swiftest word, time; the nearest word, now; the darkest word, sin; the meanest word, hypocrisy; and the deepest word, soul."

Faith Amid Conflict

By Stanley and Delores Friesen

War is a turning point; a decisive happening with many implications for the future. Today in Nigeria, there is a growing dissatisfaction with the Western mission presence; not only because of the political involvements of foreign Christian organizations in the civil war, but also because of a growing sense of self-reliance and increasing self-sufficiency and competence among Nigerians. This is as it should be. Already before the war, Christians were feeling and saying that a new era is dawning. The withdrawal of mission personnel and funds accelerated the church's reliance on its own initiative, leadership, and resources.

While there are signs within the church showing that the church has been molded by the fears and suspicion aroused by the war and political climate in the country, there are also evidences of the leaven of the gospel. Christians have been salt and light in society, bringing healing and reconciliation. There seems to be a deeper understanding of the Christian faith as a life of service and truth rather than an institutional organization.

The creation of additional states within Nigeria has brought ethnic and clan loyalties to the foreground. Unfortunately, within the Mennonite Church there is a related fear of domination by the larger ethnic group, and therefore the smaller Abak area is struggling to form a separate or more autonomous conference. This church, like many of her sister churches elsewhere, needs to be permeated by a deeper vision of a brotherhood where the separating walls of race, tribe, and language can be broken down in Christ.

From the same area comes one of the strongest testimonies of faith. From March to November of 1968, the Abak area was the war front and people lived as refugees, fleeing from one village to another as the war front shifted. When they returned to rebuild their homes — as a thank offering to remember God's grace during those months — they decided to build a Bible training school. As an act of faith, this school was opened even before the war ended, and students from several different denominations are attending.

In the Uyo area, when Ikot Ekpen was the war front, many refugees settled in the Ibiono area. Such persons were taken into their homes, and Christians from other denominations were given the right hand of fellowship in their congregations.

There has been a significant growth in numbers and an active evangelistic effort in several congregations. Christians have also become a praying community in a deeper way than before. Worship services include a time of praying for one another and laying on of hands for those with special needs.

Point of View

In the village country store a stranger saw the local patriarch sitting on a flour barrel, whittling. A bystander informed him that the old fellow already had passed his hundredth birthday. Impressed, the man exclaimed, "That's amazing!"

"We don't see nothin' amazin' about it 'round here," was the laconic reply. "All he's done is grow old — and he took longer to do that than most people would!"

Two men observed the same thing and drew quite opposite conclusions. It seems to me that this is where we are concerning most things today. You can get a sharp difference of opinion about most anything.

But there may be virtue in an honest difference of opinion. An actor put it this way some years ago when he said, "Love me or hate me, but whatever you do, do not ignore me."

The church, Christianity, government, and society as a whole seem to be sitting on the proverbial flour barrel. For some Christianity is the hope of the world; for others it is an absolute farce. The same analogy may be made concerning the church and other areas of life.

Let us hope and pray that out of conflicting points of view God may speak. Perhaps He will do so once again in and through the cross of His Son. The cross said and keeps saying, "God cares." Surely there will not be a difference of opinion here. — James E. Talley, Hopkintonville (Ky.) Newsletter.

Spring Garden

In my spring garden I would first plant five rows of peas. Preparedness, promptness, perseverance, politeness, and prayer.

Next to them I plant three rows of squash: squash gossip, squash criticism, squash indifference.

Then I put in five rows of lettuce: Let us be faithful; let us be unselfish; let us be loyal; let us love one another; let us be truthful.

No garden is complete without turnips and mine would have: Turn up for church; turn up with a smile; turn up with a new idea; turn up with real determination. — Newsbulletin, First Church, Longview, Texas.
Love is called a lot of things. But what do you call what survives in a marriage gone sour? Not much that’s polite. Problem is, sour is the flavor in a lot of marriages in our society.

So where do Mennonite Broadcasts come in? When people write—because couples with marriage problems keep coming to us for counsel. They hear about love in our broadcasts—and new hope stirs for a little love at home. We try and help any way we can, with letters and phone calls and literature to read. On husband-wife problems. Parent-child relationships. Decision making. Boy-girl troubles. We’ve even got a pretty good cook-book—and if that isn’t going the second mile to build love back into a marriage, what is?

Because that’s where the people are who catch our programs. In their everyday situations, problems and all. That’s why we work so hard getting to them during the week when they’re listening. Instead of Sunday, when it’s religious.

And couples with problems don’t need “religion.” They need the love of God. Born new in their hearts. With a dose of love like that, even a sour marriage can sweeten up again. Love can survive, with Jesus Christ there to help.

IN MARRIAGE?

WHAT. Our objective: To let Jesus Christ meet modern nonChristians where they are, on His terms. Our basic concept: That God reveals Himself to those who turn to Him in the crises of personal needs. Family conflicts. Housewife boredom. Generation gaps. Not only do we want to help people through these problems, but we also want to help them discover the love of God.

WHO. Our audience: Modern nonChristians, who will try another station on their radios if a hymn comes on. But talk about how rough it is to live where they live in the 70’s? They’re all ears! So we build programs for their listening habits — and air them during the week.

NEW PROGRAMS

Family Life TV Spots — this year’s theme: “building understanding in families.” To bridge the communication gaps, between husbands and wives, parents and children, with the resources God can provide.

Family Service Radio Spots — next release goes with TV Spots, same theme. Other recent themes: Sex—and the relationships God intends; Resolving family conflicts.

Choice for Men — three-minute daily programs for the man on the street whose moral and ethical choices are explored in the light of the principles of Christ.

In a day when a good many clergymen are running away from the parish church and the preaching ministry Methodist Bishop Gerald Kennedy of Los Angeles says he has a longings to return to it.

"The heart of the Christian gospel is the proclamation of good news," he told the Honolulu Advertiser in an interview by mail. "This is what the preacher is supposed to do. I do not find any less interest on the part of the laity in preaching than was true when I began my ministry 40 years ago."

The noted bishop said laymen are "fed up" with the kind of preaching they are getting, "but then, so am I. Social action becomes a very thin thing, indeed, unless it is grounded in the theology of God's revelation in the Incarnation."

Dr. Kennedy also said the new "theology of hope" is an attempt to get back to the Christian position and away from what has been a "lopsided point of view."

"Christian theology is always full of hope and it always believes in the future," he said. "I take a dim view on most of these new theological trends in general. They come and they go and the man whose faith is firmly grounded in the revelation of God in Christ has neither time nor interest for them. Whatever the present theological school seems to be, you may be sure that if you wait a little while, it will be gone and a new one will take its place."

The median salary for Disciples of Christ ministers in 1969 was $7,620, or some one to two thousand dollars less than most young people paid upon graduation from college, the denomination's Pension Fund reported.

According to the tabulation, the average salary also includes parsonage allowance or a markup of 15 percent where housing is not included.

The pension unit said starting salaries for college graduates average $8,532 in nontechnical fields and $9,828 in technical positions.

More than 1,000 Christian leaders gathered in Kansas City, Mo., for the twenty-eighth annual convention of the National Association of Evangelicals (NAE) to chart a course of action for "saving the seventies."

In his president's message, Dr. Arnold T. Olson of Minneapolis called upon "evangelicals of all ecclesiastical, cultural, theological, national, and racial backgrounds" to join together in a "united witness."

"In this day of polarization, the world is looking for a united witness" that will speak with authority, Dr. Olson said. Such a witness could be given by evangelical Christians if they will surrender their inclination to isolation and dedicate their services to "our common mission" he added.

Evangelical Christians are remaining in the inner city in greater numbers and moving into the inner city in greater strength, it was repeated during the twenty-eighth annual convention of the National Association of Evangelicals.

Deploring "a whole generation of ministers who do not know how to combine their ministry with social action because they were never taught," Peter Pascoe of Taylor University in Upland, Ind., challenged commission members to see to it that denominational resources be geared "to instruct and prepare ministers for involvement in the social issues of the day."

Convention delegates heard Mennonite representatives call social action "a vital part of the effort to reach people for Christ." The Mennonite Church is currently enlisting full-time social workers to labor alongside missionaries engaged in more traditional occupations, said Jacob Froese, chairman of the church's committee on Social concerns.

During 1970 the world will gain 72.6 million people—more than during any other year in history, and more than the current combined population of the Middle Eastern countries of Iraq, Syria, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, South Yemen, Yemen, and the United Arab Republic.

The Population Reference Bureau noted that this increase will represent the difference between an estimated 123.4 million births and 50.8 million deaths.

The human family is presently gaining an average of 1.4 million members a week, 199,014 a day, 8,292 an hour and 138 a minute. In the period from July 1, 1965 to July 1, 1970 the world population will have grown by 345 million people—a record five-year total, the Bureau stated.

An upturn is beginning for "mainline Protestant denominations, but worse days lie ahead for the Roman Catholic Church, according to James A. Gittings of Philadelphia, associate editor of Presbyterian Life.

Evangelistic efforts to reach the masses through crusades, such as that practiced by Billy Graham and others, never had and never will have any relevancy to the black community, the president of the National Negro Evangelical Association said.

The Rev. George M. Perry, at the close of NNRA's four-day seventh annual convention, insisted he was not singling out Evangelist Graham or others in similar work.

"We believe in the content of the Graham message," Perry said in an interview with George Dugan of the New York Times, "but we can't go along with its suburban, middle-class white orientation that has nothing to say to the poor nor to the black people."

The National Negro Evangelical Association is the black voice of conservative, Bible-believing Christians much as the National Association of Evangelicals is the white voice of Biblical conservatives. Mr. Perry pointed out, however, that conservatism in theology was never to be confused with conservatism in politics.

"We preach the whole gospel to man," he said, "a perfect marriage of the social gospel and theological Bible-believing Christianity."

The subtlety and insidiousness of America's growing drug traffic was demonstrated at Marina Del Rey, Calif. where unsuspecting partygoers were served potato chip snacks which has been salted with LSD.

In Portland on a swing around the country, Mr. Gittings said:

—Protestants "hit bottom" six or eight months ago.

—Both extremes in mainline Protestant denominations have practically walked out of the churches and the loss of thousands of members has become a "winnowing out." Members who remain are more tolerant, more homogeneous, and more willing to work together, he said.

—Many ministers are "striking a new note, declaring that being Christian should be fun." People are "responding to this, and the attitude is spreading through the church."
Mininger Honored at Commencement

Paul Mininger, president of Goshen College, was honored in a special ceremony during Goshen College's commencement on Sunday, Apr. 19.

Daniel Kaufman, chairman of the college's Board of Overseers, presented Mininger a citation for his creative and faithful leadership in college, church, and community during his 16 years of administration. Dr. Mininger is retiring from the presidency on June 30.

The Board wrote, "You have served with distinction. . . . You have begun new things. . . . You have been a stimulating leader. . . . We commend you as a faithful steward of one of the Mennonite Church's largest enterprises. We acknowledge that you have set us a vigorous example of innovation, flexibility, dedication, and thoroughness. And we salute you, Paul Mininger: president, educator, Mennonite churchman, and Christian gentleman."

The citation was presented "with affection" and was signed by all 23 current and former members of the Board.

280 Seniors Recognized

At the college's 72nd annual commencement exercise, 280 graduating seniors were recognized. The only graduation ceremony during the year, it honored August and December candidates, as well as those who fulfilled all requirements for the degree in April.

John H. Yoder, president-elect of Goshen Biblical Seminary, delivered the commencement address, "Turn, Turn," to the seniors and more than 1,800 parents, friends, and alumni. The service was held in Union Auditorium, which was filled to overflowing.

Announces First Professorship

The setting up of the school's first professorship and first-named endowment was also announced by President Mininger. The Sanford Calvin Yoder Professorship in Christian Life and Service, Goshen College's first chair, honors a former president of the college and a prophetic voice in the Mennonite Church. It is a tribute to his fine spirit and steadfast devotion to the total cause of Christian higher education.

Commemorating Yoder's leadership of the college and the denomination, the chair will be held by a member of the faculty who will also be on the staff of the newly established Center for Study of Christian Discipleship. Because Bro. Yoder, 90, a resident of Pleasantview Home, Kalona, Iowa, was not able to be on hand for the presentation, the citation was given to his daughter, Mrs. LaVerne Hostetler, of Goshen, Ind.

The setting up of the Ernest E. Miller Endowment for Intercultural Education will perpetuate his persistent and successful efforts for worldwide Christian service and responsibility, Mininger said.

According to the citation, Miller, president emeritus and Mininger's predecessor, has "throughout his life borne a profound concern for the world mission of the church and exemplified 'Culture for Service' to generations of young persons. In promoting civil- ian service training for work of national importance and in launching the church's first relief workers' training school, he anticipated Voluntary Service and Pax, forerunners of the Peace Corps. In establishing an inter-Mennonite exchange program for international students and in encouraging European tours that combined study, travel, and work, he set the foundation for the Study-Service Trimester abroad and a college-level program for the culturally disadvantaged."

Dr. Miller, 76, a resident of Goshen, was on hand for the presentation.

Other Weekend Events

Other events of the weekend included the senior nurses' class program on Saturday afternoon which honored 36 young women prepared to be professional nurses. They were awarded their pins by Dr. Pete R. Classen, chief of the medical staff of Elkhart General Hospital, in a traditional candle-lighting ceremony.

The service of dedication of the Jacob F. Rupp Memorial organ, a gift of Mrs. Fannie B. Severson, of Rockford, Ill., a 1912 graduate of the college, in memory of her father, was held before an overflow crowd in the 1,200-seat Church-Chapel on Saturday evening. Mr. Richard Litterst, of the organ faculty of Rockford (Ill.) and Beloit (Wis.) colleges and minister of music and organist of the Second Congregational Church, of Rockford, was the recitalist. Performing with him were the music faculty of Goshen College, the college orchestra directed by Lon Sherer, and the college Chamber Choir directed by David V. Falk.

Paul Mininger preached the baccalaureate sermon, "The Reconciling Person," on Sunday morning before an overflow crowd.

Bachelor's Degrees Awarded

Goshen College awards Bachelor's degrees in the arts, education, and nursing for satisfactory completion of four years of college work.

Counselor Visits Imprisoned Students

More than 500 inmates at the Virginia State Prison in Richmond listened to a message by Paul Roth the morning of Apr. 12. Roth is Home Bible Studies director for Mennonite Broadcasts in Harrisonburg, Va. "The Optimists," a singing group from Eastern Mennonite College, also participated.

Roth was especially eager to visit the 1000-inmate prison, because 36 men in confinement there have either taken or are taking Home Bible Studies courses from Mennonite Broadcasts. He visited 16 students who were anxious to personally meet the man who has spent so much time communicating with them by mail.

According to Roth the attendance at prison church services usually ranges from two to four hundred. He believes that such good attendance on a voluntary basis is due to the effective work of the prison chaplain, Mr. Walter Thomas. Thomas encourages prisoners to take the Bible study courses if they show an interest.

Roth was excited by the evidence of changed lives among the correspondence course students. One 27-year-old man is especially grateful for Home Bible Studies because it was during his study, with the help of a local Mennonite pastor, that he found freedom from his struggle with guilt feelings.

Another man, who has been in a death row cell for six years, expressed a firm belief in Christ and gratitude to Roth and The Mennonite Hour staff. He said, "After taking your Bible course, and after much prayer and soul-searching, I have decided to dedicate my life to God and His ministry. . . . God has kept me alive for six years here on death row so that I could enter into His service."

J. L. Burkholder Named GC Prexy

J. Lawrence Burkholder, professor at Harvard and former resident and professor in Goshen, has been elected by the Mennonite Board of Education to be Goshen College's tenth president, Paul M. Lederach, president of the Board, announced on Apr. 28.

Burkholder will assume responsibilities of the office on July 1, 1971. During the interim year, Carl Kreider, dean of the college, will be acting president. His election by the Mennonite Board of Education was also announced in late April.

Henry D. Weaver, Jr., professor of chemistry and director of international education, will be acting dean during the interim year, according to action by the Goshen College Board of Overseers.

Paul Mininger, whose resignation from the office of president is effective on June 30, has served as chief executive of the school for 16 years.

Goshen Graduate

Burkholder is a 1939 Goshen College graduate. He received the bachelor of divinity degree from Gettysburg Theological Seminary in 1942, the master of theology degree from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1951, and the doctor of theology degree summa cum laude from Princeton in 1958. In 1965-66 on a sabbatical leave from Harvard he did research at Cambridge University in England.

Ordained by Bishop D. A. Yoder in 1942, he was pastor of the Croghan (N.Y.) Mennonite Church for two years, when he volunteered for relief work in China. After a year of service in India, he administered the China relief program of Mennonite Central Committee and Church World Service until December 1948 when he and his family were evacuated from Shanghai.

He returned to the Far East in 1954 as relief commissioner to Vietnam under Church World Service.

In 1949 he joined the faculty of Goshen College, where he taught for 12 years. In 1961 he accepted a post at Harvard Divinity School to develop a new program in the structure and mission of the church, a program which emerged as a new department of the church. In 1964 he was named by Harvard President Pusey to the chair of Victor S. Thomas Professor of Divinity.

Also at Harvard he has organized an extensive field education program for the Divinity School plus a postgraduate program in continuing education for ministers. He is a member of the President's Committee of Clinical Psychology and is helping to set up an interdisciplinary program in clinical psychology and public practice at Harvard.

Pastor and Writer

When the Burkholders moved to Harvard in 1961, they immediately organized a Mennonite fellowship, which meets regularly in their home. Burkholder serves as one of its pastors.

An author, he has written numerous articles for theological and denominational publications, plus a variety of booklets, and contributed to a number of books. Currently in process are two articles and a book, "The Third Way."

In 1969 Burkholder was appointed by the denomination-wide Board of Education—the same Board which elected him president—as the Conrad Grebel lecturer. His lecture series in church renewal was delivered at a number of places, including Goshen College.

Brings Experience

Peter Wiebe, a member of the President Selection Committee, said, "J. Lawrence Burkholder as president of Goshen College brings a breadth of experience in church-service programs, educational ventures, administrative know-how, and personal commitment to the church. His warm and friendly demeanor will permeate student and faculty and win its way into the various constituencies supporting Goshen College. I feel Lawrence is God's gift to GC for the decade ahead."

John S. Oyer, elected by the faculty to the seven-member President Selection Committee, said, "It was the committee's opinion that he was clearly the best candidate among many. His strengths include an intellectual and physical vigor; deep appreciation of the Mennonite Church and its various ministries; a first-rate skill at communicating—with the church, students, and faculty; a willingness to handle difficult and delicate issues with tact; and a deep dedication to the church-controlled liberal arts college. Oyer is professor of history.

Elected by the student body to represent it on the committee was Don Troyer, a junior from Goshen, Ind. He said, "Dr. Burkholder has long grappled with the question of what the church ought to be, and particularly with the forms its witness to others should take. I have great confidence that his leadership will activate a fresh insight in Goshen students, present and future, into the nature of the living church."

In talking about the reasons for choosing a particular person, Wilbert Shenk, representative of the board of overseers on the selection committee, said, "The committee was deeply aware of the tests through which the Christian college is being put in this time. The challenge is to keep the educational enterprise connected to our spiritual roots so that the Christian young person is equipped to respond vigorously to contemporary society." Shenk is secretary for overseas missions at Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart.

Delighted with Choice

Paul Mininger, outgoing president, said, "I am delighted with the choice of Lawrence Burkholder as the tenth president of Goshen College. His personal qualities, training, and experience eminently qualify him to lead Goshen College at this point in its development. I commend him to the campus community, the church, the alumni, and the many friends of the college in northern Indiana and around the world."

"Under the leadership of Burkholder I have confidence that Goshen College will continue to provide our youth with a quality program of Christian higher education that includes the best in our heritage from the past and is also relevant to the needs of today and tomorrow."

Dean Kreider, chairman of the selection committee, said, "Because of his experience as a professor of divinity in one of our nation's greatest schools of theology and because of his service as a pastor, many will think of Dr. Burkholder primarily as a churchman. In their unanimous vote recommending his appointment, the President Selection Committee was also deeply impressed by his administrative experience and by his concern for and appreciation of the local community. We are most enthusiastic about our choice and look forward to seeing Goshen College continue to advance on a broad front under Dr. Burkholder’s dynamic leadership.”

Foster World Perspective

Albert Zehr, a member of the board of overseers who met with the president-elect in early April, said, “As a Canadian, I am concerned that Goshen maintains and fosters a world perspective, which sees beyond a shallow provincial Americanism. For his keen insights in this regard and for his forward-looking stance, I am excited about
J. Lawrence Burkholder as our new president.”

Mrs. Edwin Alderfer, elected by the Alumni Association to the selection committee, said, “I believe Lawrence Burkholder to be a man committed to God and the Mennonite Church in its Anabaptist tradition. He is experienced in Christian education, an able leader, a man of personal integrity and academic scholarship and training. For the realization of its ideals, the college requires a president who possesses the capacity for growth in all areas. I have confidence in Burkholder’s ability to serve as president of Goshen College.”

Native of Pennsylvania

Burkholder, 52, is a native of Newville,
Pa., the son of the late Professor and Mrs.
Henry L. Burkholder. Prof. Burkholder was a teacher of philosophy of education at Shippensburg State College.

Burkholder is married to the former Harriet Lapp, daughter of the late George
J. Lapp, who served as interim president of Goshen College 1918-19 and was one of the denomination’s missionaries to India.
The Burkholders are parents of two sons and two daughters. Myrna, a 1963 Goshen College graduate, is a social worker in New York; Howard is a graduate of Harvard University and a candidate for the BD degree at Harvard Divinity School;
Janet Louise is a junior at Goshen College;
and Gerald is a high school freshman.

Burkholder plans to stay at Harvard until February 1, 1971, to carry forward work already begun. Between then and July 1 he will be preparing for his new assignment and visiting colleges and the Study-Service Trimester units abroad operated by Goshen College.

Films Examine Church Renewal

Two films recently acquired by the audio-visual library at Mennonite Board of Missions examine changes taking place in religion and the church, both in terms of corporate worship and individual spiritual discovery and renewal.

Beggar at the Gates, 36-minute color motion picture produced by Westinghouse-owned station WBZ-TV in Boston, covers a broad range of religious concepts and activities from the most conservative to some startling variants not expected within es-established Protestant and Catholic bodies. As a study in contrasts, traditional services are placed in juxtaposition to new forms of worship.

Unusual religious practices captured in the film include a black minister who uses a loaf of bread instead of wafers in the communion service; a sect that seeks God in LSD; a coffeehouse ministry; a Greenwich Village church that has removed the pews from the sanctuary to accommodate experimential worship; and an industrial parish.

“Scenes in the film that will appeal to youth audiences may offend the older church member,” warns a descriptive flier accompanying Beggar at the Gates. But ultimately, all age groups will find them-selfs reexamining their own goals in light of the question, ‘What should be the role of the church today?’

Beggar at the Gates carries a $25.00 rental fee (subsidized rental, $15.00) and is available through Audiovisuals, Box 370, Elkhart, Ind. 46514.

A 16mm film encouraging spiritual renewal through personal involvement in home, church, business, and community needs is A New Thing, produced by Faith at Work. In it, men and women from all walks of life tell frankly and openly what they are discovering in Christ and His church.

Film sequences include Bill Milliken of Young Life in Lower East Side New York; the Pittsburgh Experiment; Keith Miller discussing the power of the personal with Bruce Larson; Gene Herr introducing fellow Christians who have discovered the dif-cerence Christ can make in rural Harper, Kan.; and many other candid glimpses of renewal.

A New Thing, 34 minutes in sound and color, is being released with a $22.50 rental

In A New Thing Keith Miller (right) appears from Box 370, Elkhart. Six additional film and five filmstrip titles recently added to the Board’s audiovisual library are included in a supplemental flier prepared for inclosure in the May monthly mailing to pastors and Mission Board members in the Mennonite Church. Additional copies are free upon request.

Trinidad Listeners Respond

Trinidad is a small island off the coast of Venezuela, South America. For more than one year the Way to Life program from Mennonite Broadcasts has been aired once a week on Radio Trinidad in the capital city, Port-of-Spain.

Mennonite Broadcasts began broadcasting Way to Life in Trinidad at the request of the Virginia Mission Board. The Virginia
Board and the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions are planning to start a project in that country and are interested in establishing contact through radio.

Since there was no one in Trinidad to dliver mail response to the broadcast, Mr.
Hudson Chang of Christian Literature
Crusade offered the use of his post office box to collect Way to Life mail and send it to the follow-up office in Jamaica. Much of the mail consists of Home Bible Studies correspondence courses. Audrey Shank, who handles the response in her Jamaica office, reports that 186 lessons from Trinidad were graded in March 1970.

The plans of the mission boards to send personnel to the island country may soon become reality. If present goals are accomplished, a doctor will be sent to Trinidad late this year or early in 1971. He will be working with the American Leprosy Mission and will also take over the responsibility for Way to Life follow-up work in that country. In addition to response from listeners in Trinidad there is considerable response from the islands of Grenada, Barbados, the Virgin Islands, and others. Follow-up work in these areas will also be the doctor’s responsibility.
All-Mennonite Congress Planned

Plans are progressing for the All-Mennonite North American Bible Congress to be held in Winnipeg July 16-19. This will provide an unusual opportunity to share with members of the total Mennonite family from many parts of the North American continent. The meeting will focus upon selected Bible studies under the competent leadership of Bible scholars J. C. Wenger and David Schroeder. Inspirational sessions will be held each evening.

This is an invitational conference. Invitations have been extended through the district conferences. Each Mennonite and Brethren in Christ conference has a designated quota of delegates. There will be room for additional delegates in this quota beyond the district conference quotas. It is planned that there should be a balance of representation as follows: men (20 percent), women (20 percent), ministers (20 percent), and youth (40 percent).

Persons interested in attending, but not included in the district conference designations, are invited to write to the chairman of the Planning Committee, Howard J. Zeh, Mennonite Building, Scottsdale, Pennsylvania 15683. Registrations will be recognized in the order received up to our quota. Persons interested are therefore encouraged to write immediately.

Named Alumnus of the Year

A 1959 graduate of Eastern Mennonite College who served three years as a surgeon in South Vietnam and one year in the now-defunct state of Biafra received EMC's fourth annual "Alumnus-of-the-Year" award on Apr. 21 during the Alumni Banquet at EMC.

Linford K. Gehman, a 37-year-old bachelor from Barto, Pa., was presented the citation for his "courageous and selfless service to innocent victims of war in two countries" by Walter Slabaugh, a Harrisonburg surgeon who graduated from EMC's junior college in 1943.

In Vietnam Gehman served under Vietnam Christian Service at the Evangelical Hospital-Clinic in Nhatrang. The citation noted Gehman's "Christian compassion and professional competence" amid "an escalating war... and ever-increasing numbers of patients."

In Biafra Gehman "served with unfailing dedication and crucial organizational skills," according to the EMC citation. Military activity caused him "to move from Abiriba to Ohaifo to Azu Abam to Obizi." In addition, "securing and distributing food was part of the medical care, and death followed life all too quickly," continued the citation.

Other winners of the "Alumnus-of-the-Year" award have been Elizabeth Erb, missionary nurse in Dhantari, India; Paul Roth, counseling pastor at Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., in Harrisonburg; and Hubert R. Fellman, EMC professor of English currently teaching on a one-year leave of absence at Goshen (Ind.) College.

Mennonite Music Festival Held at Belleville

The eighth annual Mennonite High School Music Festival was held the weekend of Apr. 11 and 12. The event was hosted by the Belleville Mennonite High School of Belleville, Pa. The facilities of the local public high school were used for the activities.

The activities of the weekend included a lot of hard practice, a Saturday evening social, and two programs on Sunday. The attendance for both programs was estimated to be about 1,000.

Each year a guest conductor is chosen to direct the six numbers sung by the mass chorus. Chosen this year was Mr. Lowell Byler, head of the Music Department at Hesston College, Hesston, Kan. Mr. Byler brought with him much experience and talent and was greatly appreciated by everyone involved.

Students always look forward with much anticipation to the festival weekend. It is not only an opportunity to travel but a real opportunity to meet so many other people, to learn a bit of how they think and believe and to share with them both socially and spiritually. It is a time that will not soon be forgotten. A few comments from participating students were: "It was really great to be able to sing with over 300 young people," and the day after one was heard to say, "I wish it were just beginning instead of just over."

The festival is sponsored by the Mennonite Secondary Education Council and is hosted by the member schools on a rotating basis. The 1971 festival will be hosted by Christopher Dock Mennonite High School of Lansdale, Pa. The festival has been an annual event since 1962.

Radio Spots on Sex Acclaimed

Many of the 550 radio stations which received Mennonite Broadcasts' Family Service Spots on sex responded quite favorably. Here is a sample of their comments:

Stan Buchanan, Station KIDD, Monterey, Calif.: "We expect to get plenty of comment from your series about sex. We thank you for this 'unique' approach to the topic."

KWFC, Springfield, Mo., reports using spots four times a day: "Make more! [Campaign] will get old fast at this rate — so how about lots more, fast."

WYCL, York, S.C.: "Your organization produces some of the very best material available. We've used it for years."

WWGO, Erie, Pa.: "A little shocking at first, but very true. If it's life and will benefit the public, we'll play it thanks!"

WTJS, Jackson, Tenn.: "Terrific series of announcements."

KELR, El Reno, Okla.: "Here is a message which our generation needs."

WCTW, New Castle, Ind.: "Our listeners are appreciating them."

The spots were designed to help correct the many false attitudes toward sex which prevail in modern society. Each spot comments on the quality of love God intends for wholesome marriage relationships. Writers for the disc of ten spots were David Augsburger and James Fairfield.

This release is No. 19 in the ongoing series of Minute Broadcasts — or as they are now called — Family Service Spots.

Bible Study Resources Offered

John E. McGuigan, chairman of the Social Science Department and professor in history and sociology at Maryland State College, highly praised David Augsburger's Mennonite Hour series, Be All You Can Be.

"I just heard your message concerning love and trust which I believe is contained in Be All You Can Be," writes Mr. McGuigan.

"I was born and raised a Catholic, and I am now in an 80 percent Negro college. I cannot overemphasize the good that your message could do for my students. Please send me a copy of Be All You Can Be. I wish to use it in class and I assure you I will give you credit for being its author and for the wonderful work that you are doing."

Be All You Can Be is a 12-chapter paperback published by Mennonite Broadcasts as a supplement to the new Home Bible Studies course, "The Mature Person." The 12-lesson course and the book are available to pastors for congregational use at 75 cents per package. Order from Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., Box 472, Harrisonburg, Va. 22801.

FIELD NOTES

David Fretz, Perkasie, Pa., will assume his duties as Assistant Secretary for Information Services in Eastern Board headquarters, Salunga, Pa., on June 1.

Donald Jacobs and Jacob Loewen will serve as resource persons in a Consultation on Indigenous Tribes to be held in Guatemala City May 25-30. Missionaries and national Christians in Central America are seeking suitable approaches in communicating the gospel to those who have not yet been absorbed into the dominant Spanish culture. Harold Stauffer will direct the seminar. There are 25 advance registrations.

Raymond Jackson, 2108 N. 20th Street, Philadelphia, Pa. 19121, was installed as assistant pastor of the Diamond Street Mennonite Church, Philadelphia, Pa., on Apr. 26. Richard Pannell, pastor of the Seventh Avenue Mennonite Church, New York City, was guest speaker for the occasion.

The Good Shepherd Mennonite Church, 1114 Sherman Ave., Bronx, New York, dedicated its new facilities on Apr. 26. Pastor Carl Good was in charge of the service. Richard Pannell delivered a sermon, and Nelson Kauffman led in dedicatory prayer.

Carl B. Harman, R. 5, Harrisonburg, Va., will assume the new position of Director of Alumni Relations at Eastern Mennonite College on June 1. During the past year, he served as business manager for Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., in Harrisonburg.

The telephone number for Abram N. Hoover, Lebanon, Pa., has been changed to 717 867-2914.

New Every-Home-Plan churches for Gospel Herald: Mt. Vernon Mennonite Church, Grottoes, Va.; Central Mennonite Church, Indiana-Michigan Conference, Henry Dyck, pastor; Lawndale Mennonite Church, Chicago, Ill., J. Weldon Martin, pastor.

Spruce Lake Retreat, Canadensis, Pa. 18325, announces the following: "Walking in the Spirit," May 29-31, John M. Dressler; Single Women's Retreat, June 13, 14, Mrs. Evelyn Mumaw; Pre-Mission '70, June 27-29, Simon Gingerich; Family Week, July 3-9, Rowland Shank.

Change of address: Arthur R. Torkelson to 7719 Brink Road, Laytonsville, Md. 20760. Phone: 301 926-2781.

Sixty-first Bible Meeting at Manchester (Pa.) Mennonite Church, May 24. Lewis Coss, Hagerstown, Md., and Lester Martin, Pine Grove, Pa., will be the speakers.

C. Richard Friesen left Elkhart on Apr. 27 for Spanish language school in San Jose, Costa Rica. After six months there he will proceed to his service assignment at Santa Rosa, Argentina. Dick's current address: Apartado 2240, San Jose, Costa Rica.

Robert Otto, Brussels, Belgium, reports: "April 12 was the last night of the Billy Graham Crusade with two Belgian cities renting large halls seating about 3,000 each. . . . I am more than pleased with the way that most Protestants are collaborating in this effort. Christian youth made an honest endeavor to lead non-Christian youth to the coffee-bar, open each afternoon from 3:00-11:00 p.m. I was asked to help the counselors and to be on hand every night."

Dawn Buckwalter, Ruth Kanagy, and Gloria Shenk will return to the United States this summer from their homes in Japan. All three will attend college in the States this fall.

The estate of A. Barbara Gingerich, Elkhart, Ind., formerly of Freeport, Ill., recently bequeathed the sum of $10,000 to Mennonite Board of Missions. Goshen (Ind.) College also received a $10,000 legacy from the Gingerich estate.

Readers Say

Submissions to Readers Say column should comment on printed articles.

We thank you for the variety of subjects covered in the Gospel Herald. We are constantly encouraged, challenged, and inspired by articles you share with us.

God gave you one article at just the right time. "We Adopted a Negro Child" appeared in the March 24 issue when we were in the process of adopting a mixed-race child. We were glad to hear of another family's experiences. Our desire to give a home, love, and identity to a child who didn't have these led us to the county welfare agency. We were told of the many children who because of their race are very hard to place into adoptive homes. We prayed God would direct us through the social workers to the child He had for us. Today our prayers were answered. — Wilmer & Barbara Good, Hyattsville, Md. . . .

How beautiful and meaningful the full page illustration on page 345 of Gospel Herald. Could we have it in poster size, and in color, maybe? What a reminder of our commitment as we would see it each day. — Thomas J. Zook, McVeytown, Pa., Locust Grove cong. , Belleville, Pa., and Norma M. Howe, Elverson, Pa., Rockville cong., a lot of false "piousness." Thanks so much.

Night Preacher

Illustrated by Allan Eitzen

This is a book of historical fiction about Menno Simons written for youth, ages 9 to 14. The story of all that happened as Menno went about preaching is told by his children, Betje and Jan.

The story about this Anabaptist preacher is one of suspense and action because of the constant threat of arrest. One Mennonite historian who read the story said that it was a "lively, accurate, highly readable" story of Menno Simons. This book is by the author of THE SECRET CHURCH, THE BIBLE SMUGGLER, and KEY TO THE PRISON. 0-8361-1606-2: $3.00

Belmont’s Gideon Band

By Robert J. Baker

The Belmont Mennonite Church’s budget for 1966-67 was $35,503. As we rolled into September of 1967, the church year screaming to an end, it looked like we were not going to meet that budget. Our offering on September 17 was $1,477, nothing to be sneezed at. But on September 24, the last Sunday of the church year, we would still need to give $3,202.30 in order to reach that budget goal. It looked like an impossibility. Alternative to not meeting the budget figure? Cut the mission giving. Sad, but how could 170 members of a church dredge up another $3,000? We had been skimping and saving, stretching and struggling through all of August and into September, the stewardship rubber band had been tuned to the breaking point. And only a week remained. Yes, it was sad, real sad.

Several brethren at Belmont, however, refused to call it quits. They were willing to admit that such a large sum would not be raised through the regular church offering, but they had a backup stewardship plan ready to throw into action. It was to be a lay operation completely. Three brethren of the church geared themselves to make an all-out effort on September 24, 1967, to raise $3,202.30. The men were Norwood Schnucker, Elmer Miller, and myself, Bob Baker. We contacted our pastor, Ray Bair, briefed him on our plans and reserved 15 minutes of the Sunday morning service, a tiny time segment squeezed between church and Sunday school sessions.

The church bulletin on that morning carried the following item: “Last week, attendance, 197; offering, $1477. The response over the last eight weeks has been thrilling to see. We thank God for it. This is the last Sunday of the church year and we have $3,202.30 to go if we are to meet the budget we accepted last fall of $35,503. This is a large challenge but not larger than God can or would desire to do through us.”

When the offering was taken that morning, Norwood arranged to get a quick count on it. It came to $2,326, leaving us short $876.30 of the $3,202.30 we needed. I had been elected to make the pitch. We had prepared 100 small pink cards which read as follows:

Each card was sealed in an envelope. Only three laymen, one pastor, we four and no more, knew what was to come next. And after that, we would leave it in the hands of God. That was a good place to leave it.

Before the Sunday school was to begin, before a single person left the main auditorium, I had 15 minutes for our commercial. I read Judges 7:1-8, the story of Gideon choosing his army to defeat the Midianites. We had prayer.

I mentioned that Gideon’s army was a select army. It did not involve all of the Israelites. I told them that we were here to choose Gideon’s army and invited all Belmont wage earners to stand. They stood.

Our committee had sent a letter out that week to every Belmont home expressing concern over the budget deficit. I then said to the wage earners standing, “Now we would invite those to sit down who received their letter this week and felt that it had no bearing on their life. As such a person you were not concerned. You feel that our budget shortage is of no consequence. We have given enough, to give more would threaten us. Now, such people, you fearful people, you unconcerned people, sit down.”

No one sat down. A wave of excitement swept over the church and collided with a wave of apprehension.

I then announced, “Now, brethren, this is the army of Gideon. And we are to conquer the Midianites. The ushers will distribute our weapons. Do not open the envelope, do not reveal your weapon.”

Every wage earner standing received an envelope with a pledge card inside. I then said, “The budget deficit is the Midianites.” I gave them the results of the morning offering, $2,326, the need for $876.30 more. Then playing the general role to the hilt, I ordered, “Army of Gideon, break your pitchers!’ The envelopes were ripped open and the pledge cards taken out.

I then simply told them what we asked. We asked Belmont wage earners to buy $20 shares in the kingdom of God. We would need some 44 such shares purchased. I asked every wage earner who possibly could to buy one. I suggested that Sunday school classes could purchase one. We wanted cash by September 30, IOU’s within thirty days. IOU’s would be honored immediately since our committee had arranged to borrow money at a local bank to meet such money pledged for the future. Pledge cards were to be filled out in Sunday school classes and would be picked up in a few moments.

And thus Gideon’s army scattered to their assigned positions, marching against the budget deficit, our Midianites for 1967. And God began to work among us. Twenty .dollar shares and portions thereof were bought in God’s kingdom. One brother ignored the printed card and wrote a check for $100, turning it in without our neat little pink gimmick. We cared not, the Spirit was there, touching, moving. The Intermediate Class pledged $27. The seventh graders promised $6.00. Some gave who should not have given. One person turned in three tightly rolled dollar bills and wrote on his pledge card, ‘This is all I can give.’ Postdated checks were written. Some cards were turned in, no money pledge, but a pledge of prayer support for the pastor. One brother pledged $270 worth of stock. Another pledged one share, reconsidered, retrieved his card, made it three. Some mortgaged their future with IOU pledges.

When the dust had cleared, the Gideon cash on the barrel amounted to $895. IOU’s came to $513, and the stock transfer was for $270. That Sunday morning, September 24, 1967, was one of God’s finest hours in the Belmont community of believers. We began the day with a shortage of $3,202.30 in mission funds, ended it with a surplus of some $800 as a result of second-mile giving. Total offering for the day, regular giving plus Gideon giving, slightly over $4,000. On that last Sunday of the church year, instead of worrying over what mission item in the budget to cut, we had the “problem” of what to do with $800 in extra funds. It was a nice switch. We smiled at our “problem.”

On the Herald Press church bulletin for that morning were printed these words:

You are a chosen race,
A royal priesthood,
A holy nation, God’s own people,
That you may declare
The wonderful deeds of him
Who called you out of darkness
Into his marvelous light.

Once you were no people
But now you are God’s people.

Our experience in stewardship that day made us feel more like we were God’s people. We found Him at work in our midst.

What You Can Do

Maybe you can’t feed hungry millions around the globe. But you can:
— see to it that the undernourished in your neighborhood or town get enough to eat;
— contribute personal assistance or financial aid to organizations trying to relieve human privation and suffering;
— back international aid programs that promote the welfare of developing nations and do not exploit them.

Maybe you can’t provide jobs for the hard-core unemployed. But you can:
— examine your attitude toward sharing your knowledge and skill with someone who has neither;
— brave unpopularity at union or business meetings to speak up for the job rights and advancement of qualified Negroes, Puerto Ricans, or Mexican-Americans;
— cooperate wholeheartedly with company training for those who are handicapped or are not yet qualified; or press for the initiation of such projects.

Maybe you can’t solve the problems of 24 million functional illiterates in the U.S. But you can:
— tutor one child who is having difficulty in school;
— urge at least two friends to do the same;
— attend school board meetings and back reasonable expenditures needed to ensure quality education for all students in your district.

Maybe you can’t be a delegate at international peace talks or disarmament negotiations. But you can:
— be a peacemaker in your own family;
— let your Congressman and Senators know your convictions about the expenditures and risks involved in the arms race;
— pray and work for peaceful communication between people of different racial backgrounds, both on a personal and group basis.

Maybe what you do is just “a drop in the bucket.” But you can:
— keep this a nation “under God” by supporting loyal public servants; uphold the right of respectful dissent; remind others that citizens of every nation belong to the larger brotherhood of humanity.
— suppress the urge to denounce rebellious youth and encourage at least one college student to seek a career in which he can serve the physical, intellectual, or spiritual needs of mankind.
— keep in mind that God has given you a mission in life that He has given no other, that He will be with you in lonely moments of crisis.

Random Notes on Youth and Women

Considerable evidence indicates that the seriousness with which young people were heard at Turner, Oregon, last summer has had a profound effect. More questioning youth than we know have given the church another chance because of it. We must make the best use of every available occasion to give youth an authentic voice.

Most of us are hardly aware of the youth phenomena. In terms of numbers, militance, conviction, informedness, and sometimes sophistication we are talking about a whole new thing. It is encouraging to see that some young people about to turn the church off care enough to confront the church with its irrelevances and inconsistencies.

It is amazing how blind we have been to the second-class brotherhood we have given to women. The next five years will see considerable change. Christian education leaders have a responsibility to work for equality. Part of the responsibility is to help women become aware of the contribution they can make as persons in churchly decision making.

Both the youth phenomena and the increasing vigor of women in congregational life will make vast changes in the shape of the local church in the 70s. This more than new constitutions, renovated buildings, increased budgets, or organ preludes will be used by the Spirit of God to breathe new life into the congregations. New life will express itself in new patterns of worship, new kinds of action, and a completely different congregational profile.

One of the things that is changing already is the Sunday morning “worship service.” It is invigorating to see a whole new dimension of “celebration” emerging in some of the more venturesome congregations. There is hope after all that the deadness and rigidity can end. I think “celebration” can be recaptured in the denomination. And I am certain that it should be.

— Arnold Cressman

A company that manufactures belts says that belt sizes provide a barometer of business. During the depression a size 31 measured the girth of the average American. Today he takes a size 35. Also, it seems that average sizes vary with the country’s geography. Washington runs to large measurements, as does Chicago; but men of the deep South are thin-waisted. In Texas and California, figures are trimmer, too. In New York a 34 or 36 is normal for the mature man.

A poster in the waiting room of a pediatrician expressed accurately the importance of good home and family relationships in preparing a child for adult life. It read as follows:

If a child lives with criticism he learns to condemn.
If a child lives with hostility he learns to fight.
If a child lives with ridicule he learns to be shy.
If a child lives with jealousy he learns to feel guilty.
If a child lives with tolerance he learns to be patient.
If a child lives with encouragement he learns confidence.
If a child lives with praise he learns to appreciate.
If a child lives with fairness he learns justice.
If a child lives with security he learns to have faith.
If a child lives with approval he learns to like himself.
If a child lives with acceptance and friendship he learns to find love in the world.

Did’ja ever notice that those people whom we class as charming are the same ones who seem to think we are geniuses?

The bigger a man’s head, the easier it is to fill his shoes.

The Electronic Blizzard

Everybody is interested in communication. So much is being said about communication that it may be difficult to say anything new and stimulating.

However, the electronic media continue to play an ever more important role in our "global village." Therefore, I would like to suggest that we need to consider seriously what the role of these media is in our midst today.

When you start to reflect about this, you may agree with Dorothy Forbes, a Canadian religious broadcaster who did a major research project on Mass Media: "Man's Responsibility and the Church's Role." Miss Forbes says that it is common to talk about a communication explosion in our time. Her own opinion is that it would be more apt to talk about this as a "blizzard." She goes on to say "that if man is to stay alive — physically, mentally, emotionally, as a truly human being, he'd better begin to understand the mass media blizzard and find more human and creative ways to use the new communication technology."

Why does she issue this warning? Miss Forbes quotes Patrick Watson about the kind of education being promoted by television. Watson says that some of the themes and values being presented to us via television are as follows:

- A new object is better than an old object.
- Persons are individuals of less importance than a group.
- Controversy and individual thought are dangerous.
- Citizenship is more valuable than personhood.
- Seek safety and avoid adventure.
- Look out for number one — let the other fellow take care of himself.
- Public government is bad and politics are dirty.
- Private business is clean and efficient.
- We are good — they are bad.
- Better dead than red.
- Men are just overgrown boys.
- New products are progress.
- Woman's place is in the home.
- The broadcasters know what the people want.

As you think about these themes and values, ask yourself whether you really believe them. Maybe you might also want to ask yourself why you believe them.

The fact is that we are largely "brainwashed" into accepting these ideas and values. Yes, "brainwashing" is the right term. Erich Fromm defines "brainwashing" as: "suggestive-hypnotic techniques which produce thoughts and feelings in people without making them aware that their thoughts are not their own."

The most serious thing about this state of affairs is that we have passively accepted the influence of the electronic media. Instead of actively using these electronic tools, we have let ourselves be used.

This presents a real challenge to us as Christians. We are in the midst of a blizzard. What can we do about it?

We must learn the language of the media. Unfortunately, we know very little about the media and the majority of Christians have even less understanding of the media.

I believe it is not an overstatement to suggest that the transistor and TV tube caught us napping. We had never dreamed of their impact.

Then when we saw their impact, we became afraid. How could the small Mennonite Church compete with the big industrial giants like GM, Ford, CBS, CBC, etc.?

Somehow we as Christians have been afraid of this giant, as if God might not be God in this realm. It reminds me of a story in 1 Kings 20. There we are told that the Syrians blamed their loss of a battle on the thought that God might be a God of the hills and they had lost against Israel because of fighting on the hills. They should plan for another battle on a plain and then they would surely win. The story tells us that God gives Israel the victory in the second battle also. You see, our God is God of the hills, of the valleys, and of the plains.

Our responsibility must begin with a "response ability." That ability will come only as we accept the challenge. We may be in a blizzard and we may be outnumbered badly. But our God is a God of fair weather and also of blizzards.

Look for ways to tame the tiger. Partly because of our inferiority complex, the media has been misused. And we can very easily contribute to that misuse. By remaining silent, by expecting free time for religious broadcasting, or simply by continuing to be passive consumers, we become a contributing element to the misuse of the media.

We must help each other to actively use the electronic media. I am not denying the validity of radio and TV for entertainment. Most Christians would benefit from doing more laughing. But the impact of the electronic media in our families is no laughing matter. We must get serious about this and challenge the values and ethical goals that are being presented.

If much of what is presented on the media is down in the gutter, it may well be our fault. The industry will never become the church. But we serve the God of the gutter and the mountaintop. It is our responsibility to contribute this added dimension to the industry.

We need to seek God's guidance as we struggle together to conquer the blizzard of electronic communication!

Hebrews

Eleven

for the Seventies

By Roy S. Koch

Now faith must be defined as certainty of the things we hope for. It is a deep conviction that there is a world of reality that is invisible. By this conviction the heroes of long ago and of more modern times have achieved the recognition and blessing of God.

By faith we also can reach an acceptable understanding about God’s relation to our material world and its operation that goes far beyond any mechanistic or evolutionary view.

By faith Martin Luther presented a more excellent system of salvation to his contemporaries than the sterile dogmas that characterized medieval piety, by which he proved that he was a true reformer. God approved of his preaching that men are saved by faith alone by granting repentance and conversion to thousands, and by it, though he is long since dead, Luther still mightily influences the world.

By faith Polycarp, the aged bishop of Smyrna, refused to renounce his faith in Christ after eighty-six years of witnessing to the transforming power of the gospel. By faith he died a martyr’s death because he refused to deny his Lord who saved him.

By faith Augustine, being warned of the follies and indiscretions of his youth, motivated by a godly fear, listened to the voice that commanded him to renounce his sins and be converted. By faith he was able to demonstrate to the world what a talented life consecrated to God could be. Thus he became the brightest star in the Christian church in his own and succeeding generations because of his faith.

By faith David Livingstone, when he received the conviction to become a missionary, went out into the dark continent of Africa, not knowing what would happen to him there. By faith he endured hardships and dangers and finally gave the last measure of devotion to the people he loved because he looked for a black people who might become the people of God. That is why he was buried in Westminster Abbey, the English people judging him worthy to lie with kings and the great men of the earth in his final resting place.

By faith also Florence Nightingale received moral stamina and physical endurance to carry her lamp of humanitarian concern and was used of God to bring healing to thousands of war-injured persons because she was convinced that her convictions came from God. She set a high ideal for a nursing career that has inspired countless women to enter upon that career with human compassion and unselfish service.

These have all since died, pioneers who never took the easy road, but who were assured that they were right, and they persisted in their course because they considered themselves as living not for selfish advancement but for others.

For they who live in this manner make it abundantly clear that they are not living for this life alone but for God. And actually, if it had been their purpose, they could have made a fine success for themselves in life. But they lived above the low level of earthly ambition; that is why God has stamped His approval upon their lives and has confirmed their faith.

By faith Menno Simons, when he was spiritually enlightened, gave up the security of the Roman Catholic priesthood, and became a shepherd to the persecuted Anabaptists who suffered unmentionable horrors at the hands of misguided religious leaders. He was convinced that in the beliefs of the Anabaptists God was pioneering the twin principles of separation of church and state and freedom of conscience which did in fact prove so.

By faith John Wesley felt his heart strangely warmed in a genuine conversion that transformed his entire ministry. By faith he preached day and night, crisscrossing England and America, that revival and blessing might come to the English-speaking people. By faith he established little Bible classes which blossomed into a great denomination that has blessed the world.

By faith George Frederick Handel, when he caught the vision of God’s glory, wrote that immortal oratorio The Messiah, which has inspired all succeeding generations because he dedicated his whole talent to the glory of God.

By faith Abraham Lincoln, when the burden of slavery became intense upon him, published the Proclamation of Emancipation that gave liberty to all the slaves in the United States of America. By faith he endured hatred and calumny and eventual assassination. But now he belongs to the ages, a moral giant who gave his nation a legacy of righteousness because of his courageous faith.

By faith Pope John XXIII threw off centuries of tradition in the Roman Catholic Church and let the fresh winds of new ideas blow upon the people he loved, esteeming the necessity of meeting the needs of the times a greater virtue than the sterile changelessness of conformity to tradition. By faith he forsook the role expected of him and endured the displeasure of those who disapproved of his actions. Through his faith he initiated far-reaching modifications in the doctrines and practices of bishops and priests which those who have followed him have expanded and consolidated.

By faith Dwight L. Moody, a poorly educated shoe salesman, determined to demonstrate to the world what God can do with a life completely dedicated to Him. By faith he allowed God to use his limited education to the maximum of its usefulness and turned countless thousands of people from the darkness of sin to Jesus Christ the Light.

By faith Sir Wilfred Grenfell left the comforts of his native England to bring medical aid and the wholeness of the gospel to the people living on the bleak coasts of Labrador and Newfoundland.

By faith Albert Schweitzer trained himself to become a physician, philosopher, and musician, then buried himself in humanitarian and missionary service in Lambarene, Africa.

By faith John Hus, the Czech reformer, continued to preach the saving gospel of Christ after dire warnings of martyrdom should he not desist. By faith he endured excommunication from the church and eventual burning at the stake and became the morning star of the reformation.

By faith John Knox espoused the love of Christ and his people and prayed to God in words of deepest earnestness, “Give me Scotland or I die.” His prayer declared plainly that he sought the glory of God and the salvation of his people rather than his own selfish advancement. And what shall I more say? for the time fails me to tell of Savonarola, and of Count von Zinzendorf, and of John Bunyan, and of John Calvin; of William Tyndale also and of Isaac Watts, and of the mighty army of missionaries; who through faith opened dark continents, translated the Scriptures into difficult languages, established hospitals, changed entire civilizations, wrote immortal songs, stirred the consciences of kings, died martyr deaths.

Women broke the traditions of centuries that they might minister to the sick, and others were ostracized not giving up their God-given convictions that they might improve the lot of their fellowmen. Others braved dangerous climates and hostile rulers, yes, even of solitary confinement in prisons. They were beaten, they were brainwashed, they were shot to death; they became refugees owning only the clothes on their backs, being crushed, heartbroken, humiliated.

(They were innocent victims of their times.) They were chased from country to country, suffered poverty and rejection.

These all, having accomplished great exploits through faith, died without seeing the full fruits of their dedication. God has provided other faithful leaders that those of the past with us who are living now, may demonstrate to the world the powers of the life to come through Jesus Christ our Lord.
Mission, Missions, and Judgment

By Wilbert R. Shenk

Confessing Our Confusion

A hazard facing the Christian church is that she will fall prey to her own unalertness. The challenge of the Christian life is the demand made on every follower to be vigilant. The New Testament characterizes the call to the Christian as joining the way, becoming a disciple of Jesus, being part of a lifelong pilgrimage. Rather than being a settled and sedentary life, Christian commitment involves a lifetime of growth and movement.

However, we must confess that confusions creep into our thinking and we lose not only our sense of forward movement but also the purpose of that movement. It is possible, for example, to replace the mission with methods. Techniques and methods for doing our work are indeed important, but they are not the mission. Rather it is the motive-power of mission that must continually be allowed to create the needed forms and methods.

A second confusion that clouds our perspective is the substitution of Christianity for the gospel. This danger is more subtle and powerful than we want to recognize. For nearly two centuries there has been what has come to be known as the modern missionary movement, bringing to the world the good news of Jesus Christ and seeking to establish His church. An important feature of this movement is that it originated in the Western world and has been sustained by the personnel and financial support of the church in the West.

We are also inclined to call the West “Christian” and the rest of the world “non-Christian.” Western culture has been shaped and influenced by the Judeo-Christian tradition. Too easily we slip into the assumption that Western ways and values are an integral part of the gospel of Jesus Christ. In more sober moments we realize very well that the Christian church in the West is today severely compromised by the failure to rise above being a reflection of an essentially pagan culture rather than a living example of a company of people transformed by the gospel who live in creative tension with the world.

A third confusion to which we are subject is mistaken Christian “activity” for the essence of the church. If disillusionment exists today over the meaning of the church it is that, in spite of even more elaborate facilities, organizations, and activities, we frequently fail to experience deep fellowship, encouragement in our faith, and a challenge to be self-giving.

Regaining Perspective

As a start toward clarifying our view, let us consider several statements. First the gospel supersedes any culture or civilization. The Apostle Paul’s affirmation was: “It is God’s power to save all who believe ...” (Romans 1:16b, TEV). The gospel has this power because it encompasses all of life and, therefore, offers a new way. The gospel of Jesus Christ offers a superior moral vision to that of any culture or cultural religion. The gospel has within it the capacity to gather men and women from every civilization, historical moment, geographical location, and social status and bind them together to become a new, united people in Christ.

Second, the church is more than a denomination. A constant temptation of the church—as in any human group—is toward parochial pride, self-satisfaction, and blinding loyalty to the tradition. The witness of history should be ample warning that every denomination needs to maintain a healthy measure of humility concerning its place in God’s plan. The story of the people of God in the Old Testament, as a prototype of the church, depicts a people living in a constant tension—tugged away from God by their disobedient self-reliance and pulled toward Him by His continual strivings and gracious refusal to cut them off.

Third, the mission is more than missions. The mission is Christ’s and in His control. The church is enjoined to share in Christ’s objective of bringing the world to God. “Missions” are the efforts men organize as means of participating in Christ’s mission. Missions are marked by the imperfections and insufficiencies of every human endeavor.

Matrix for Mission

In seeking to understand the mission of Christ in the world, it may be useful to consider the interplay between two sets of factors: those that remain constant and those that vary. The starting point of Christ’s mission is that God’s love... encompasses every man and God has taken unprecedented initiatives that every man might be redeemed. However, man is a rebel who must be challenged to surrender, the prodigal who needs to experience personally the meaning of the Father’s saving and transforming forgiveness and love. The call to follow Christ is the call to discipleship—a way which involves a disciplined unlearning of our sinful egocentricities and a learning of a Christo-centric life pattern.

Being accepted of God means being accepted of His people and joined to His church. There is no private salvation or Christian life lived in isolation. The body of Christ is that group of people in whom the Holy Spirit—Christ’s continuing presence—dwells and which seeks to follow Jesus’ example of testifying to the Father’s love, which has become their love and motivation, through selfless service and inspired witness.

The Christian community is characterized by hope, in the midst of a despairing world, and victory, in spite of momentary setbacks. These are the elements which remain unaltered: God’s love and initiative in Christ Jesus, man’s need and possibilities through redemption, and the church as the vehicle of Christ’s continuing action in the world.

The mission of Christ is to and in the world. This means it reaches people where they are in their history, culture, and heartfelt sense of need. Already within the Book of Acts, the record of the first missionary activity of the Christian church, there is a fascinating display of the way that master missionary, the Apostle Paul, perceived the universal need of man for God but then proceeded, with shrewd insight, to address the Jew in his particular idiom, the Greek in his categories of thought, and so on.

The methods, technologies, and knowledge systems we may use in carrying out Christ’s mission will vary. The institutions and structures of society undergo change. For example, capitalism in the United States in 1970 is far removed from what it was in 1800 or even 1900. Communism in Russia in 1970 is undergoing a ferment that is bound to further alter it from what it was under Lenin; and Russian communism is pursuing a different path from that taken by Tito’s Yugoslavia. Cultures and civilizations come to birth, flourish, decay, and eventually die. Whether one follows Spengler or Toynbee’s interpretation of history—or that of the Bible—the point is that life and death are companions in shaping and changing human affairs.

Mere Earthenware

In 2 Corinthians Paul prods us into a proper humility as we contemplate our part in God’s redemptive design. “Yet we who have this spiritual treasure are like common clay pots, to show that the supreme power belongs to God, not to us” (2 Cor. 4:7, TEV).* All of our human efforts, even “missions,” are inadequate and imperfect. We can never comprehend the totality of Christ’s mission through our systems and structures. The alternative is to allow ourselves to be gripped by that totality so that our efforts move in consonance with it rather than preserve positions and structures which are mere “earthenware.”

It is perfectly obvious to us that it would be impossible for the earth to provide any illumination to the sun. The earth merely reflects the powerful sunrays. It would be equally absurd to pretend that “missions” are anything more than imperfect reflectors of Christ’s mission to the world. Like the builders of the tower at Babel we, too, are tempted by the possibility of being “as gods” (Gen. 3:5). To accept our finitude is to confess our dependence on God and to open the way for His will to prevail.

To live under judgment and to accept our finitude is painful to human pride. But it is through this process that the righteousness of God becomes manifest. Instinctively we recoil from the thought of judgment since it implies being proved wrong and suffering a penalty. However, the Bible reassures us at this point. Biblical judgment does indeed mean that we are faced with the facts in our relation to God; but there is coupled to it the possibility of redemption. We are brought to judgment not simply because we have sinned and therefore deserve punishment. Rather, because we have been wrong we need to be brought to the right and enabled to start afresh. In other words, it is out of judgment that redemption becomes a possibility.

This is the most reassuring of all thoughts. In our human finitude we are never adequate. Whether it be as individuals, institutions, the church or “missions,” we need the purging power of God’s judgment. Only in this way can we be saved from our foibles and be more fully identified with Christ’s mission. Therefore, let us gladly subject our “works” to a gracious divine scrutiny as God’s Spirit moves upon us.

Let Us Pray

Jerry Koosman, the left-hander who pitched two victories for the New York Mets in the World Series, expressed a desire to have interdenominational services for the team before Sunday games during 1970. The pitcher, a Lutheran, made his suggestion as he was honored by the American Bible Society in recognition of his service to the “Bible Cause.” Mr. Koosman stated, “The message of the Bible has been a source of strength and guidance to me many times. Some of us would like to start the custom of an interdenominational half-hour service, conducted by a visiting clergyman on Sundays before games.” The Green Bay Packers have long had a practice of observing Sunday with a Bible and prayer service led by quarterback Bart Starr.
What You Love, You Are!

By David Augsburger

“I love you, darling,” the young man said proposing to the girl. “I’m not wealthy, and I don’t have a sharp convertible and a luxury yacht like Jerome Greene, but I do love you!”

The girl, after a moment’s thought, replied, “I love you too, but tell me a little more about Jerome.”

Now it’s easy enough for us to see through the young lady’s duplicity—even though her poor young man probably can’t. In one breath, she says she loves him. In the next, she shows her real love for solid comfort, cash, and class.

How easy to talk of love, to promise the world to another in one breath, and in the next, say, “But tell me a little more about Jerome.”

And how revealing such words can be! Spot a person’s true love, and you’ve discovered the true person! It’s all too easy to see what a man really is by the things he loves, and to judge a man’s true worth by the things he values. Values enough to live for!

But if we apply that test to others, why not to ourselves?

My! What it might reveal! It would mirror our characters clearly, sharply, in unflattering honesty.

Now if you were required to list your loyalties, to look truthfully at what you love, what would it show you about yourself?

Or even a clear view of your best intentions, of your choicest motives, what might it reveal?

If you are like most people, you’ve probably not used the looking glass of loves and loyalties. You’ve likely avoided stepping back to take a frank look at your true face, mirrored in the things you love.

What do you love most? What things really rate with you? What is in first place? In second? Where are your real loyalties?

Now then—the real question. The embarrassing one. Why do you love these things? Why do you love those people? Do your reasons all simply terminate on yourself? Do all your loves point back to you? Are you in this life for what you can get, not for what you can give?

When your list of the things or the personal relationships you love is complete, look long at it. Look hard. It’s a mirror. There! See your real face?

Not what you thought it would be, now is it? In light of all you love—really love, you don’t really measure up to the man you thought you were, or wished you were, right?

“But does it matter?”

Wait to answer that until after we’ve gone a step further. Until we’ve seen how very much what you love motivates what you do.

You see, what you love determines your motives!

“Motives.”

Shadowy things, aren’t they? Hard to pin down.

Shy as ghosts, and twice as hard to hold. They hide themselves behind a front of good intentions, or a facade of logical excuses. Who of us really knows his true motives on anything he does?

No wonder you’ve got to check up on your affections and motives so closely. Are they ever tricky! Downright deceitful! The real motive is seldom on the surface. It’s usually down underneath somewhere hiding behind some great honorable pretext we have put out front for reputation’s sake.

Questionable motives love to remain anonymous. They will ghostwrite beautiful words for the front man—you—to pass off on others to impress them with your fine intentions.

But if the world could read our real motives, how often we would be ashamed of some of our best actions!

You see, a good deed is no proof of a good motive, and an evil motive can soil the kindest words, spoil the best actions. Why you do or say a thing can make all the difference.

It’s the motives that are the making of a man of character. If the motives of your friends—in their little words—in their acts of kindness—are so crucial, so significant to you, how much more should you be concerned about the clarity—and the purity—of your own motives!

A beautiful girl in love sifts through her lover’s words. “Why does he love me?” she asks. She must know—in part at least. To her, the motive makes all the difference. Does he love the real me, or just my body, my face—my figure? Or is it my father’s money? Could he be trying to win my love because he needs a pretty wife to give him status? A feather in his cap?” So she asks him, “Why do you love me?” And no answer will quite satisfy—except the simple, “I love you for what you are. I love you because you’re you.”

It’s the motive that matters!

Because the motive reveals what you really love.

And that’s what counts. What you love reveals what you are.

All your motives and finally the acts they produce come from what you love!

Your motives may rise of fear that you may lose the things you love, or come from hatred because you have been denied the things you love, or from jealousy because you can’t get the things you love. What do you love? That is the final key to the real you! You are what you love; and what you love, you will be!

All right. So I am no more than the things I love—the true affections of my heart.

And those affections mold and make my motives.

So like every other human, my whole problem boils down to my heart trouble. I love the wrong things. My values are twisted. My urges, my passions, my affections pull me downward, while my better knowledge, in an eternal tug of war, wants to pull the other way!

But how can it be helped? How can we win out over wrong motives? How can we live with right motives, right actions, right loves?

Only by a new affection. A new love.

Only a new affection can really get down inside and effect a change in our motives, our loyalties and loves.

Only a new affection can make a new man.

Only a new love that goes beyond love of self, and reaches outside a man to a worthy object of love.

A new love that transforms goals, ambitions, passions, and convictions.

A love that gets to the heart of man—and to the heart of his problems.

That’s how God transforms a man. God loves a man with such power, with such self-sacrifice, that every man must respond to the flow of love, or divorce himself from it.

But when a man responds, and discovers that God still loves him even though God understands him infinitely better than he knows himself; when a man realizes that God knows how selfish his heart is; how self-centered his loves; how self-seeking his motives are, and yet God forgives, accepts, and loves him; then something dies down inside a man. Something mean.

Something small and selfish.

And a new love is born.

A new love that marks the new birth of life. A new touch of God’s love is planted in his heart. A love that can grow until a man will, as the Bible says, “Love the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your soul, with all your mind, and with all your strength; and your neighbor as yourself” (Deut. 6:5; 13:3; Mt. 22:37, 38; Mk. 12:29-33).

This is the “love of the Father” . . . that transforms “the love of this world and all the things that are in this world” (1 Jn. 2:14, 15) into a new love for God that results in a new love for others. Loving our neighbor as we love ourself.

Know how the Bible describes this change in us that results from God’s love? Listen.

“But when the kindness of God our Savior and his love toward man appeared, he saved us—not by virtue of any moral achievements of ours, but by the cleansing power of a new birth and the moral renewal of the Holy Spirit, which he gave us so generously through Jesus Christ our Savior” (Tit. 3:4-6, Phillips).

This new love—Christ’s love for you, Christ’s love in you, and your love for Christ—this new affection can make you become what God meant you to be. It’s a new affection that will slowly begin its permeating process down into the dark recesses of your self. Changing your motives, redirecting your loyalties, purifying your intentions.

A new affection like this has an explosive power to turn you out from serving only yourself. It has an explosive power—expelling old habits, old slaveries, old passions; all that is unworthy of your new love—your love for God.

Then with new love . . . God’s love!

Then with new life . . . God’s life!

Then with new loyalty . . . God’s new man, you will begin the great adventure of life with God . . . alive with the love of God.

You will become what you love—

What you love, you are!—David Augsburger, Harrisonburg, Va., delivered this message over the Mennonite Hour radio broadcast.

Enjoy Church?

By Don Jacobs

Sometimes church services can be a bit boring. Or maybe I should flip it and say that sometimes they can be a bit interesting. For some, church attendance is like the old haircloth which monks wore: endure it and you are bound to be blessed. Maybe that is why people feel better after a service than during it.

But Ed Weaver and I attended a service this morning which was not haircloth. (I use the word “attend” — I should have said “got involved in.”) We are here in Abidjan on the Ivory Coast attending the third meeting of the All Africa Conference of Churches. Ed has friends all through this part of Africa, especially among the leaders in the many independent churches, churches which have no connections at all with missions, and one of these groups invited us to a morning service. Since the other conference participants were all going to the stadium to sit through another sermon, I decided it would be a good idea to go with Ed.

The taxi dropped us between the sea and a great sprawling market in the heart of Abidjan. As we threaded our way through the colorful stalls, it was like passing through a hundred worlds. For twenty steps the smell of strong African soap lay heavy on the olfactories — then fruit, yards of pineapples, and sweet citrus. Then we passed through a belt of brilliant market-type jewelry followed by an area where all sorts of medicine were sold from the powder of ground-up bones to aspirin. Then we dodged through clothes hanging on line after colorful line. Shoes, tobacco, baskets, buckets, and bustle, that is the market. It is a perfect lobby for a church entrance.

Then through a little wooden door, back a narrow sandy passage, and the church! Some twenty people had gathered and were singing a song about Jesus being Lord.

It was not much of a building, ten feet wide and twenty long, open on the side toward the alley so that the passers-by could see everything. Up front a rail set off the altar which included a table with seven burning candles, a lectern, two chairs, and a little vase with four smiling purple pansies.

Ed and I took our shoes off at the door, as is the custom, and were given two seats up front amid singing and clapping. Scriptures were read, more singing. It seemed like a service in song broken by prayers, Bible reading, and preaching. Our friend preached. It was a simple message on Jesus’ perfect provision for all of life and encouraged the group to stay close to Jesus. We sang a few songs here and there during the sermon, each one ultimately ending in a mild dance.

Sermon over, all those who had trouble were invited to come forward, kneel, and pray. They were directed to rub the pain if they were sick and a prayer was said for them.

One lady shared a vision. She saw many in the group with their hands raised. The pastor interpreted it as a picture of God’s hosts.

Then all the women came up, bowed their heads to the ground seven times, jumped up and down seven times, said seven “hallelujahs,” seven “hosannas,” and then, you may not believe it, seven laughs! Yes, everyone laughed heartily seven times. We could do with a little of that in our services. This was followed by an offering and the men did the same — jumps, laughs, and all. Ed warned me not to put in all my money as other offerings were to follow.

After this, the two pastors walked through the audience and gave specific words of prophecy to a few people. One of them told me that God had revealed to him that I would do extensive travel in 1970 and I would help many people. The traveling I could see, but I was not so sure about the latter. One lady was told to drink specially blessed water for her stomach troubles, another that if she does not pray diligently death will come near her within the next few days, and to another that she must stop quarreling at home. All of these admonitions were given in love and tenderness but very firmly.

Testimonies were then given and all closed with the singing of more songs, with drums, and dancing. I even danced a little. Ed was less inhibited. Then we put our shoes on again and left. Ed was so engrossed that he forgot his books and had to go back for them.

As we made our way out through the maze of market stalls, I felt myself refreshed. The service was an hour and a half but seemed much less. Those people went home with a word of encouragement, a new grip on the Lord, a sense of being continually cared for by the group, and with a song of joy in their hearts. They had brought their total needs to a loving Father and a loving church. Is this not what Christian fellowship is all about anyway?

Christian stewardship calls for faithful management of another’s goods. God has given to us gifts, talents, skills, resources, and abilities for the promotion of the gospel. The church provides the channel for the service of these stewardship resources.

Christian stewardship is an all-involving service. Biblically it begins with the tithe, to this God added offerings and then ourselves, as illustrated in the Macedonian churches when they “first gave their own selves to the Lord.”

MISSIONS -- EDUCATION -- PUBLICATIONS -- ADMINISTRATIONS are all God’s work to which we are asked to respond.

Beauty in Small Things

By Viola Weaver

On a warm July afternoon while the shadows were playing hide-and-seek with the sunshine through the trees, my husband and I decided to plant sweet potatoes. In our garden, the sunshine had won over all shadows and it was quite possible to feel trickles of perspiration run down our cheeks while working. My husband kindly asked me to drive over to the greenhouse which is about a two-mile drive along a lovely country road to pick up the plants while he finished preparing the ground.

Three of the children rode along as far as the meadow where a cool, shallow stream gurgled and laughingly called them to play. I stopped to leave them off and would have loved to cool my hot feet also but left the children to play and dutifully started on my errand.

Passing the church of my childhood, my mind flooded with many precious memories and always my godly grandfather’s image comes to mind. We used to have Sunday afternoon Sunday school then, and I can remember the birds singing an accompaniment to our singing praises with doors and windows wide open.

The road wound around a few more curves and, oh, there was a beautiful patch of wild sweet peas! Would I dare stop and pick a few? Restraint kept me moving on, only to open up another beautiful patch of tiger lilies, free for the picking for God planted them profusely along this bank not near any house. But no, “hubby” will be waiting, I thought, so I kept my foot on the accelerator.

Do you hear that tinkle, tinkle? Down through those bushes a flock of sheep were peacefully grazing near the pond, unmindful of schedules and time. I’d love to sit awhile and drink in this peacefulness and surely “restore my soul,” but I’m on my way for sweet potatoes, remember? Near this next hard curve among the trees I once saw a beautiful indigo bunting. Could I see another today?

Cautiously keeping an eye on the road ahead and taking glances at the treetops I caught sight of Mrs. Cardinal flying by. Perhaps she was on her way to get a small morsel of food for her young, which brought to mind that I’m on my errand as well. I arrived at the greenhouse, looked over the long rows of colorful flowers and plants, and chatted awhile with the gardener.

After receiving my plants, I started back the winding country road which had brought me there. Enjoying all the beauties again, I passed a small house where an elderly couple live (my great uncle and aunt) and saw her busy at a quilt set up in their open garage. Again I had an inner urge to stop and say “hello” and tell her how I joy to see the unselfish diligence of older people like her. For I knew that when that quilt would be finished, it would probably be given to the local sewing circle and then given to some needy person to keep warm on cold nights. And I knew many elderly people sitting idle on our street back home feeling useless.

My mind flitted to our garden and duty urged me on, so the car didn’t stop there, either. Yes, I was back in good time, and we planted sweet potatoes together, my mate and I, anticipating digging a good crop this fall, but I couldn’t help thinking of all the joys I bypassed on that short two miles. “Diligence,” you say, “to keep on the job!”

But I sense something lost of beauty and neighborliness. Again, I hear someone say “But, you can’t live that way and still make good financially. Time means money!” “Oh,” I answer, “eternal values must succumb to material gain, then?”

Somehow, that afternoon I felt I revived a childish joy at the little beauties of life that have been pushed aside by adulthood’s demands. A balance is needed here just as in all areas of life but somehow I felt I’ve left the pendulum swing too far to the left when I can’t find time for art and beauty and friendliness. I’m glad for my small child who lives more free from scheduled living. He can take my hand and lead me to enjoy a spider web, an ant colony, a freshly opened flower, etc., for I’m fearful of losing such simple joys to work and duty altogether.

With these “minute vacations” throughout the day, work becomes lighter and the soul is satisfied with beauty many times over. God instilled this wonder and curiosity in children. Let’s not stifle it all by schedule and work so that they lose their freedom to enjoy the simple beauties around them nor feel silly to hang their toes in a cool stream. A heart-to- heart chat may take time out of a workday, but a psychiatrist may have to listen for hours in later years where we have refused to listen. Let’s teach our children the joy and satisfaction in small things so that beauty in these everyday joys will become a part of them.

What One Person Can Do

Any effort that leads to the betterment of human existence usually begins in the heart of one person who dares to dream and cares enough to right a wrong.

Whether it is a cup of cold water given to a thirsting man or an irrigation project designed to turn a parched plain into productive farmland, it starts when someone says “yes” to God’s mandate to put love into action.

A multiplication, millions of times over, of such “drops in the bucket” can achieve breathtaking change from a world sickened by war, injustice, and hostility into a humanity that bears greater resemblance to the divine image in which it was created.

Many times the pastor or parent of newlyweds desires the right gift in the form of a book. John M. Drescher has made a fine choice available in his Meditations for the Newly Married.

This book is not designed for sex education. Drescher holds the marriage relationship in a broader perspective than sexual agreements. He attempts to put marriage in its spiritual perspective—"What God hath joined" is not to be defiled, is his theme.

Marriage is a dream to be fulfilled, yet new and better dreams appear through the years. Marriage need never lose its romance. It grows with the fulfillment of dreams and reaching the realities reserved for those "God hath joined."

Drescher lists a number of other books for the married couple to read together, and suggests at least one good book per year during marriage. This book should meet in part the demand for a respectable book on the subject of marriage in all its dimensions. For church libraries but really should be a book personally owned. — Glenn B. Martin

This Mountain Is Mine, by Margaret Epp. Moody Press. 1969. 192 pp. $3.95.

This is the biography of a Mennonite immigrant boy from Kansas who became a missionary in China for 50 years. His inspiration to go to China originated outside Mennonite circles, but once he was there he attempted to form a Mennonite Mission in Shantung province. Denominational barriers required the formation eventually of an interdenominational China Mennonite Mission Society board in 1913, which carried on until 1946, when the C.M.M.S. dissolved and two Mennonite denominations undertook the support of the two respective China fields.

Bartel's work in China is a chronicle of astounding courage, patience, sacrifice, and heroism. Despite uncertain financial support from America, chaotic political conditions on the field, and an international war, he stayed with the task of orphanage work, Bible school education, and above all persistent preaching and witness to build up a Chinese church. This book belongs in every Mennonite church library. — Martin Jeschke

Written by David A. Shank, Mennonite missionary to Belgium, this booklet contains five Spiritual Renewal chapel sermons given at Goshen College in February, 1968. Threading the message through five key words, the appeal is both to the minds and hearts of college youth.

Iliusion speaks of man's attempt to cover his loneliness and emptiness with illusory laughter and activity. In answer to man's guilt and lostness there is the historical Intervention of God in Christ. Erosion looks at the Eros culture, a way of life with its own self-destructive force. Another pressure at work is Extrusion, attempting to squeeze man into the world's molds. In answer to these objective forces is Conversion, "the real objectivity that comes from being subjectively committed to God through faith in Christ in the fellowship of the church."

Shank is sharing the message of Christ as he has known it in his life experiences as a Christian witness. The warm message of the gospel is enhanced by the author's skill at scholarly and literary expression. Not all good chapel messages make good reading. These do, and are recommended highly to thinking and inquiring persons, young or older. Excellent for the church library. — Harold D. Lehman

This is one of the series of pamphlets of the S. F. Coffman Peace Lectures, and is a study of world hunger as it is experienced in the latter part of the twentieth century, and an examination of the possibilities of real famine with the increase of population in our world.

The author, a biologist, understands the way in which energy is converted from the sun into plant life, providing food for animals and humans. He has observed the agricultural practices in many countries of the world and is a consultant who is called to underdeveloped countries to assist them in finding solutions to their needs for food.

He mentions on page 15 six reasons for the U.S.A. and the other richer nations to share with the underdeveloped nations, reasons offered by Christian theologians. Beginning on page 17 he reviews some of the more commonly proposed solutions to the hunger problem. The first one that is so frequently mentioned is that of birth control. A second is to put more land under cultivation. A third is simply to increase the yield per unit of area of land. Additional solutions mentioned are reducing losses to growing crops and to livestock; preventing losses to harvested and stored crops; maintaining arable land in a high state of productivity through soil and water conservation and the utilization of better fertilization.
His real recommendation for a plan of action begins on page 19. This he addresses to the Mennonite churches through the organization of Mennonite Central Committee. The first mentioned is to mobilize the best minds of our MCC constituency and engage these persons in study conferences. Second to involve the scientific and specialized personnel of our denomination. Third, he recommends developing a corps of specialists in agricultural production and marketing, and community development. Fourth, he recommends giving more attention to the education of mothers who will put their children and husbands first in their thinking. In our mission outreach he suggests that more attention be given to reaching persons in the upper echelons of society, for they can help to develop their countries. The ideas he recommends must be taken seriously by every Christian. — John E. Lapp.

Lucy Winchester was the first book written by Christmas Carol Kauffman. This revised edition was her last book. After the book was out of print, she received requests for additional copies. She rewrote the book hoping to make the characters come alive in a new way but not to change the story. One biographer says, “She did not write for the scholar; she wrote for the common people.” After reading this book, seeing the characters come alive through her able pen, and finding a spiritual message: I find myself again challenged by Lucy Winchester.

The story begins when Lucy is an early adolescent, searching for a better life. She wants to know God better as well as to find physical comfort and beauty. But Lucy’s life even as a child is filled with heartbeat and hard work. Her father cannot express his love to his family and her mother is trapped by poor health and fear.

Hardship and unhappiness plague the Winchester family and follow Lucy through her adult life. Finally she does find God. Although she never becomes rich in this world’s goods, she does become rich in the things of God. Excellent for church libraries.

The Pax story really comes alive in this volume. The author has the men tell the story of their work in their own words. The reader is caught up in the spirit of service that these men render. The adventure, the meeting of human need, the Christian testimony given is a thrilling story.

The story covers Pax experiences in Germany, Greece, Paraguay, West Pakistan, Algeria, the Congo, Crete, and in Vietnam. In one chapter the author deals with the reason for Pax, the development of the program and the risk in service. In the last chapter there is a presentation of how the Pax program started, the principles which guided it, the qualifications and training of men, and finally how women were also involved in the program. — Nelson Kauffman.

Night Preacher is a story of Menno Simons, the Anabaptist, and his preaching mission as seen through the eyes of his children. Betsy, Jan, and later Mariken dislike the constant flight from one home to another to avoid capture, but they soon learn to hold their tongues and appreciate what their father must do. This fourth book of historical fiction by Louise Vernon is filled with suspense, action, and danger which move the story along. The setting seems to be historically accurate. An excellent book for church libraries, almost a must for Mennonite libraries. — Alice W. Lapp.

This is a delightful book to read. Zimmer, an Earlham College student, is a conscientious objector who refused induction into the army or alternative service because he does not “believe that the state... has the right to compel an individual against his will to serve” society in a positively and explicitly defined role. For this reason he was sentenced to three years in the Federal Youth Center at Ashland, Kentucky. He was in prison from April 1967 until March 1969 when he was paroled.

Most of these letters are to his “Liebe Toni,” a few to his family. They are beautifully written and deal with the profoundest of topics: God, time, evil, government, protest, revolution, love, and faith. Apparently he is the son of a minister but he claims not to be “classifiably religious.” He is very critical of the Peace Movement for its lack of clarity about means. “If we preach love and freedom and peace, we must first love, be free, be peaceful,” and Zimmer certainly fulfills these qualities.

This is an excellent book for an insight into the finest young American idealists. It is a very personal book which means sustained polemics or sociological description are lacking. — John A. Lapp.

This fine collection of short masterpieces breathes spiritual warmth. The choice poetry, essays, prose, and bits of wisdom from many, many sources of literature lift the reader higher and stimulate the good, the pure and noble. Sections of The Family Album deal with such areas as The New Year, Easter, Home and Family, Friendship, and Worship, in addition to others. The volume is very attractive in layout and design. Scattered through the book are beautiful four-color photos and also excellent art illustrations. The volume, neatly bound, makes an attractive and treasured gift—something which can be picked up at a moment’s leisure to add fresh devotion. — John M. Drescher.

The idea underlying this book is that “moral education is impossible apart from the habitual vision of greatness.” Consequently, these fifty biographies are presented as a means of character education. In addition to many well-known Christian heroes, there are the stories of some less familiar persons. Do you know George Helms, the father of Goodwill Industries; Mary Vergheese, India’s doctor to the handicapped; Cameron Townsend, founder of Wycliffe Translators; or Billie Davis, the migrant school girl who became a Christian teacher?

Each story has a unity, a single idea, a discovery, or an attitude about Christian living. The biographies are short, interestingly written, and communicative of Christian ideals. An excellent addition for the church library. — Harold Lehman.

This is one of the best commentaries written to date on the modern man at leisure. It deals with the philosophy of pleasure, analyzing the popular approaches in advertisements with their distored promises of freedom, sex appeal, individualism, tolerance, and success.

The author, after a logical argument and expose submits a constructive and realistic alternative. He maintains that there is true pleasure, freedom, and a wholesome individualism, but it is not found outside the principles of New Testament ethics.

Banowsky is vice-president of Pepperdine College in Los Angeles, and received considerable publicity through his public debate with Anson Mount, Religion Editor of PlayBoy Magazine, in a nationwide telecast. Banowsky has been a guest at Hugh Hefner’s Chicago Mansion, thus gaining his insight through firsthand observation.

This is an excellent source for youth or adult discussions on the modern morality. It should be read by every serious-minded Christian in our time. It is not just another goofy-goody book, but a hard-hitting serious approach to understanding the pleasure-seekers in this affluent society.

GENERAL CONFERENCE SPONSORS CHURCH/STATE CONSULTATION

From her beginnings, the Mennonite Church has been known as a peace church. At the heart of this tradition is the commitment to follow Jesus in every activity of life. The life of discipleship is directed toward the goal of reconciliation of all people to Jesus Christ. Reconciliation and discipleship are the opposites of hatred and war.

Such commitments inevitably create problems in relating to civil authorities bent on self-preservation and who often wage violent crusades to achieve their ends. Peace people, in their attempt to remain free from the entanglements of the violent society and yet witness to the way of love, often have difficulty in defining their understanding of government.

In 1937, 1951, and 1961 Mennonite General Conference developed statements putting in words what it means to be a peace church, how to be a faithful church in wartime, how to express God's will for "good" government. The events of time and history are in constant flux. Trying to relate church statements to concrete affairs creates further controversy. It was in this setting that the Committee on Peace and Social Concerns appointed a subcommittee to study further the church-state issues which have tended to be divisive in the brotherhood.

This two-year study culminated in a two-day meeting at the Central Mennonite Church, Archbold, Ohio—April 15-17. Fifty to sixty persons attended the meeting. Edward Stoltzfus, chairman of the special committee that studied the issues, was also chairman of the larger, extended study process.

Persons who attended the conference represented nearly every district conference. A carload of students from Goshen and Eastern Mennonite colleges helped to provide a voice of younger constituency members.

The focus of the conference was on extending the discussions begun in the committee to the larger group of concerned people in the brotherhood. Most of the input came from the special committee members, J. R. Burkholder, George R. Brunk, John A. Lapp, Sanford C. Sheltzer, and John H. Yoder. The only noncommittee member to present a paper was Emmett Lehman, an attorney from Lancaster, Pa. There was no attempt to be definitive but rather to sketch out where there are disagreements and why and how these disagreements relate to regular brotherhood processes.

Discussion and controversy over such serious issues will be a constant feature of the church's attempt to be faithful to its Lord and to be a faithful witness to the world, including the institutions of government. The subcommittee in its preliminary work began by analyzing the question of one morality or a dual morality. Does God have an ethical standard for the church and another for the government? Is it wrong for the Christian to kill and right for the government to kill? The committee soon discovered that in such discussions there are many additional concerns, many of a subsidiary nature.

The complex of issues raised by the committee and often alluded to at the consultation included the question of what constitutes the lordship of Christ. How is Christ Lord of the world? Another series of questions had to do with the nature of biblical authority, how the Testaments relate to each other, and how the Bible is interpreted. Another set of questions seized on the issue of responsibility both in terms of individuals and the body of Christ—the church. How responsible is a person for actions by institutions in society? How is a person effectively responsible? A major area of discussion dealt with the sources of moral guidance in political and social matters.

Perhaps the most important part of the assembly were Millard Lind's studies of various Old Testament passages which illuminated many of the issues confronting the people of God today. Using pivotal passages like Deuteronomy 4:5-13, 32-35; the Ten Commandments; Isaiah 2:1-4; and Jeremiah 27, Lind pointed out that Israel's relationship to the nations was the Old Testament problem of church and state. The grace of God, so evident in the Exodus from Egypt, was the source of a way of life which included a new politics and an ethical foundation of law which was not found in any of the legalisms found in other ancient Near Eastern empires. Lind asked whether today we really have a reorientation of law in our behavior in the church. In his study of Jeremiah 27 he pointed out how the prophet spoke as an envoy to "my servant" Nebuchadnezzar.

These biblical studies undergirded the discussions which constituted the bulk of the agenda. No final answers for the major issues—"the forms of the church's witness to government" and "the forms of the church's obedience and disobedience to government"—were accepted by all the persons in attendance. But the hearing committee seemed to catch the spirit of the assembly in their suggestion that the process used in this consultation needed to be used more widely and effectively at the regional and congregational level. The "hearers" also urged more specific guidance on such issues be given to local congregations with less emphasis on theoretical niceties.

The consultation members were united in their understanding of the church as a transnational body whose allegiance is to God before country; that the real issues of the moment had to do with reconstituting a Christian style of life which, if faithful to Jesus' message, will suffer as Jesus did. The CPSC was urged to strengthen the informational/educational dimensions of its work and to feed some of the work of the subcommittee and the consultation into the curriculum materials used in the church.

BIBLE STUDY STRESSED FOR MISSION '70

The Gospel of Luke (chapters 3 to 5) has been selected by the Program Planning Committee as the Bible study passage for Mission '70. "The Spirit of the Lord upon Me," the theme for the 64th annual meeting of Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, is taken from this text.

Congregations, small groups, families, and individuals are encouraged to engage in preliminary study of this passage from Luke prior to attending Mission '70. Since the two days of actual study scheduled for Mission '70 obviously do not allow for in-depth examination of this Scripture, it is suggested that persons read the passage in several versions and then outline and paraphrase it. Any written aids should then be brought to the annual meeting and shared with fellow study group participants.

At Mission '70 on the mornings of July 3 and 4, John Lederach of Hesston, Kan., will lead an exposition of Luke 3 to 5. The entire assembly will then be divided into "Strategy Groups" (with 10 to 12 persons in each group) for more intensive study and discussion.

Strategy Group leaders have already been selected from among the membership of Franconia Conference. On Sunday, May 3, these leaders met at Christopher Dock High School—site for Mission '70—for orientation and training led by John Lederach. Other Mission '70 program personnel were in attendance to share the enthusiasm and planning for the upcoming convention.

Lederach also plans to meet with Strategy Group leaders prior to the public sessions on July 3 and 4 to offer further counseling.

Small-group Bible study was an exciting spiritual highlight for most Mission '69 participants at Kalona, Iowa. A similar experience is anticipated for Mission '70, July 1-7, at Lansdale, Pa.

 MEDA: The Development of People **

"Our work has grown and we find MEDA projects on all five continents and in 11 countries," E. J. Peters, chairman of MEDA (Mennonite Economic Development Associates, Inc.), wrote to the members meeting in their annual session in Chicago, Mar. 20, 21, 1970.

"The concept of brotherhood economics as expressed by MEDA is not new to Mennonite circles. It has always been the practice of our people to help their neighbors and each other. Therefore, we were not trying a new philosophy when MEDA was organized some years ago. We merely extended a local practice to international and intercultural problems," Peters added.

Nearly 60 MEDA members, wives, and guests were on hand to hear reports from the various MEDA geographical committees, to discuss finances, and to make projections for 1970.

Lloyd J. Fisher, executive director of MEDA since Oct. 1, 1969, in his report noted that "some may question the value of MEDA's small funds in thousand of dollars as compared to millions the government spends in foreign projects.

"The striking fact is that it is men who have been involved in these huge government schemes who are interested in our small projects. These huge government programs are simply not reaching down to the man of small means interested in small projects."

Fisher went on to note that due to the past association of MEDA with missionaries, schools, and hospitals, it now has rapport with the national people, and that this "cultivates the atmosphere of trust which is necessary for a successful economic development program."

"In many areas of our church in developing nations," Fisher said, "MEDA is working with second- and third-generation Christians who have worthwhile ideas which need our consideration. We want to be careful that we do not force capitalism where it is not wanted. We want to use local initiative in every way possible. We must remember that it is people we are working with and developing."

Fisher himself is a first for MEDA, being their first full-time staff executive director. His office is located at the Mennonite Central Committee's Akron (Pa.) headquarters for at least two years, at the end of which the location is to be restudied. Fisher recently returned from a four-week visit to MEDA projects in Central and East Africa, Israel, and Sicily. Later in April he began a four-week visit to MEDA projects in Central and Latin America.

Fisher feels that one big step for MEDA is the placing of a person in the Congo to work with those Congolese in partnership with MEDA. There are six projects with invested MEDA capital of $11,430. These are largely agricultural projects, with one hammer mill, a woodworking shop, and one large truck used for commercial transport.

The annual meeting of MEDA heard the Rev. Paul McCleary, Evanston, Ill., address them at a banquet. McCleary, chairman of a study committee for the reorganization of the Methodist Church, has had 13 years of experience in missionary work in Bolivia, where he learned to know and work with the MCC in community development programs.

"The church in community development should be interested in getting people out of their confining boxes," McCleary said. "Development is just that — releasing people from their boxes and restoring them to their proper human dignity."

McCleary also referred to the first seven deacons ordained in the New Testament church as the first "social development committee."

Looking toward the future for MEDA, Fisher listed out several items for the MEDA members to consider:

"Here at home we should look at our present committee setup to see if improvements can be made to involve more MEDA members. We should start a few projects with our Mennonite agencies working in minority areas in our own countries. Also, we should cooperate with other organizations to give strength and enlarge our usefulness.

"As for overseas projects, we must listen as well as talk to our project brothers, aiming at strengthening them. We need to be daring and creative with funds and personnel, and open to unilateral opportunities with Mennonites in more-developed countries."

Maynard Sauder, Archbold, Ohio, was elected as the new secretary of the MEDA executive committee, replacing Peter J. Kroeker. The other members of the committee were reelected: Ed J. Peters, Wasco, Calif.; president; Henry J. Parkinson, Mountain Lake, Minn.; vice-president; Olen Britsch, Archbold, Ohio, treasurer; members at large: Peter Enns, Dinuba, Calif.; Milo Shantz, Preston, Ont.; and Howard Yoder, Wooster, Ohio.

Middle East Study Tour Openings Still Available

There is still time to become part of the second Middle East Study Tour sponsored by the MCC Peace Section to be held July 24 through Aug. 14.

The tour will be led by Dan Zehr, MCC (Canada) executive secretary elect. Zehr was a participant of last year's interesting tour. The purpose of the tour is to acquaint North Americans with the problems and tensions of the Middle East today.

Cost of the three-week tour is $980. Nine $200 scholarships are available, five of which are reserved for interested students.

Historical as well as biblical sights will be visited in Israel, Egypt, Lebanon, and Jordan. In addition there will be brief stops in Rome, Athens, and Crete. At each place, knowledgeable persons will give lectures and briefings on the past and present history of the Middle East.

An additional novelty for the tour will be a flight on one of Boeing's 747 jumbo jets, from New York to Rome.

Persons interested in the tour should write MCC Peace Section, Akron, Pa., for more information.

Films Tackle Prejudice

"What's New in Audiovisuals?" asks a film brochure released in May to Mennonite congregations across North America. The answer: six films and five filmstrips that have been added within the past eight months to Mennonite Board of Missions' AV library containing over 200 titles.

Four of the six films advertised in the new supplemental flier—A Problem of Power, Mexican-Americans: The Invisible Minority, Journey to the Sky, and Karen—have already been publicized in various church periodicals. Two recently acquired titles from Concordia Films in St. Louis, Mo., now complete the list.

_Ella Mae and Mrs. Beasley_ is a contemporary story of pride, ambition, and faith at odds with society's prejudice. Ella Mae, an Appalachian girl, moves to the North with her husband, Joe, in search of work and a better way of life. Mrs. Beasley, distrustful and unloving landlady of the shabby apartment where Ella Mae lives, is concerned only with collecting the rent.

When Ella Mae's husband loses his new job, they must admit failure and move back to the South. It is Ella Mae's pride and faith, her refusal to accept charity instead of a job for herself, that ultimately wins Mrs. Beasley's respect and reluctant friendship.

_Writes Open Letter to President_

In an open letter to President Richard M. Nixon, Myron S. Augsburger, president of Eastern Mennonite College, has combined a position of prayer and respect with a call for the cessation of hostilities in Southeast Asia.

Augsburger stated that he was speaking "for the faculty and students in urgent desire and prompt action to end our involvement in the Indochina War."

President Augsburger continued, "We hold from our Christian perspective that a nation with some Christian insight should find the way to serve the world rather than seek to rule it. We shall continue to pray and give ourselves sacrificially in the spirit of Christ to this end."

The 40-year-old EMC president voiced his belief that "violence only begets violence, that a just war is impossible, and that a spirit of friendship and love is the only cure for social and political ills."

In noting world opinion, Augsburger expressed the hope that the United States become "a good nation" rather than "a dominant one."

Prefacing seven specific points, Augsburger asked Mr. Nixon to "give this concern a serious hearing." He asked specifically for the following:

"That you identify more clearly with those who are for peace and good will among men, even at the cost of adjustments."

"That the escalation of the war into Cambodia be ceased, with a withdrawal of our involvement."

"That the earlier planned withdrawal from U.S. involvement in Vietnam be hastened."

"That a coerced draft be ended and a volunteer army of some type be put in its place."

"That any use of the National Guard on the campuses of our land be without the presence of guns."

"That your administration take seriously the thousands of wonderful young people who are against war and violence and deserve to be heard."

"That a program be introduced whereby those of us in higher education in other than 'trouble spots' may share in finding ways to meet the social and moral crisis which is confronting our land."

Augsburger concluded his statement by noting that "former President Eisenhower decried the militarism that is turning us into an armed camp." He added that from his personal travels abroad that "a pattern of meaningful aid will do more for the cause of freedom than war will ever do."

_Gospel Herald_. May 19, 1970
In a clear call for a change in priorities, the EMC president said that we should not build our economy "on a military budget but on a budget that will use our affluence to help others.

Augsburger stated that the EMC campus of 1,200 persons had submitted "both our appeal to you and our pledge of prayers and service to the end that we may have both a better nation and a better world under God."

Agricultural Banquets

During the late fall and winter four agricultural banquets were held in the Lancaster Conference area. Two of these were at Willow Valley Restaurant, south of Willow Street, one at New Holland, and one at Mount Joy.

A total of over 400 persons, including many fathers and sons, attended the agricultural banquets. The major thrust of the program was the need for immediate action in international agricultural development.

Getahun Dilebo, an Ethiopian student, addressed each of the groups regarding the need for agricultural development in his country. He said, "There is no choice; we need help in agricultural know-how and technology in order to feed our people."

Mr. Dilebo also told the groups, "In the past Mennonites have been people of the land, people of business, and people of peace. When they came to overseas countries they brought missionaries, evangelists, doctors, and educators. They have not brought agriculturists who are desperately needed."

Wilmer Dagen addressed the group on the needs of international agricultural development, calling attention to the unsettling facts of hunger, indicating that at least 10,000 people die each day from hunger and starvation. He also prepared graphs showing population increase and the dilemma of the population increasing faster than food is being produced.

Glenn Wyble, ex-VS-er from Honduras, Central America, shared with the group his involvement and practical experience in agricultural development during his term of Voluntary Service.

Don Kraybill, Youth Director for Lancaster Conference, talked to the group about the heritage of agriculture which God has given to the Mennonite Church which needs to be utilized and mobilized immediately to combat hunger. He told the group that urbanization will soon take the trust from us, and that if we want to respond, we must act now.

Displays and literature were available for the participants to browse through and take along. There was very much interest in the banquet. It is hoped that they will be helpful in stimulating young men toward agricultural missionary careers.

NAE Confronted with Prophetic Voices

The National Association of Evangelicals (NAE) met Apr. 7-9 in Kansas City under the banner: "Saving the Seventies." Whether NAE will have any saving influence on the seventies will depend, I believe, in part on whether the voices of visionaries among them are heeded, and whether or not they are honest about giving Holy Spirit-filled youth a voice in the decision and the direction of the evangelical witness.

One hopeful sign at the meeting was the presence of youth. Delegates were invited from colleges and Bible institutes whose student bodies are members of the American Association of Evangelical Students. The NAE had invited student representation in order to acquaint youth with the goals and workings of NAE. Two or three young people were subsequently appointed to each of several Commissions. The Commissions were invariably large.

Students were well outnumbered, and at first I thought the group was quite docile. But I soon found them to be dedicated, alert, and capable persons.

Had it not been for the youth and some of the younger men who appeared on the program, I would have viewed NAE as being largely dominated by older men, men for whom the important issue was reawakening the concern for which NAE was created 25 years ago—an organization to fight liberal Christianity. Even for a long-time evangelical like myself, those issues seem dated. They have little meaning for the young. We need not ignore or forget the past, especially in areas where we have since learned that the church has been on the wrong side of the issue, as has often been the case with respect to the needs of the poor, justice for the blacks, and the waging of wars.

Because of my interest in students I participated in some of their meetings and frequently encountered them informally between sessions. These young evangelicals have thought through many of the issues and have not reached the same conclusion as their elders. For example, students thought that Christian Life magazine was too conservative in presenting alternatives to participation in war. Some older men criticized Christian Life for even raising the question about options to war.

In informal settings over lunch and in the corridors I heard older brethren take issue with both McKenna and William Pannell, young prophets whom I rated as the most relevant speakers in the entire conference. A student caucus had rated Pannell and McKenna at the top of their list and the NAE executive secretary at the bottom. I observed similar differences in discussions about social relevancy and missions. Again the younger men and youth saw less conflict, whereas some of the older men were fearful of becoming social gospellers. However, on this issue one sensed an awakening conscience. The North American Congress on Evangelism was frequently cited, revealing its impact on the thinking of many evangelicals.

If NAE will serve a saving function in the seventies it will be because it hears its young, or its prophets—men like McKenna, William Pannell, and David Howard. McKenna, president of Seattle Pacific College, in a talk, "Where There Is Smoke There's Youth," has keen insight into the current youth and college scene and lifted out what young people are saying to society and the church—"blowing smoke into our eyes." We must listen to the youth revolution to help us understand the world, he said. Likewise the church must recognize, accept, and listen to its Holy Spirit-filled youth who dream dreams just as older men see visions.

At a dinner meeting Bill Pannell spoke on "Together in the Seventies." He first bared his soul on the difficulty that he as a black person experienced accepting the invitation to speak to this issue in the almost all-white NAE setting. He reminded us that he could count all the blacks present on one hand and knew them all personally. He then spelled out what "together" might mean in the seventies for evangelicals.

David Howard, program planner and director of the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship Missionary Convention, shook us all by presenting the images today's evangelical students hold with regard to missions. Even among evangelical students one half hold negative images. They see the missionary as someone who has sold his soul to a mission board, or as a know-it-all, or as one who couldn't have made it at home and therefore he goes abroad. Many students have positive images of the missionary and see him as a friend, as a servant, as challenging, and as a real man of God.

In the context of this discussion the question of social relevancy and missions came to the forefront. But David Howard would not concede to the fear of criticism. His perspective committed itself to our Mennonite view of combining both in ministering to the whole man and to society.

Two moving experiences occurred. One was an evening of testimonies by young people. In the second experience the mayor of Kansas City presented the keys to the city to the Vietnamese head nurse of a Vietnam hospital now administered by the World Relief Commission. — Virgil J. Brenneman, Executive Secretary of Student Services for the Mennonite Church.
Newfoundland Desperate for Teachers

The Canadian province of Newfoundland continues to be in desperate need of teachers. This is the report received from Dan Zehr, MCC (Canada) Peace and Service Secretary, who is currently visiting the island, negotiating placement of teachers who will be assigned to the Newfoundland Teachers Abroad Program this summer.

The big push in Newfoundland is to rid the educational system of unqualified teachers, who till recently have remained an essential feature of Newfoundland's educational pattern. In one school district alone, there are 24 of these "probationers"—teachers without university and teacher training. In this particular district the superintendent will not be renewing the contracts of these probationers until Aug. 15, in hopes that before then some additional qualified teachers will appear.

Both elementary and secondary school teachers can be placed in TAP Newfoundland. Many of the elementary teaching positions will be in the semi-isolated areas, where trained elementary teachers cannot be attracted by the natural process of supply and demand. These schools would naturally be multigrade in nature, where one teacher might teach four or even eight grades. A husband-wife team or two single persons placed as a pair are able to make an excellent contribution to the community by teaching in these small one- and two-room schools. The secondary school positions are located in less isolated settings where there are immediate openings for teachers specializing in music, physical education, guidance, mathematics, and science.

Academic qualifications for assignment to Newfoundland include a college degree with an appropriate major. A teaching certificate and teaching experience is preferred but not required. Canadian teachers with a teaching certificate can also be placed even though they may not have their college degree.

MCC volunteers have served in Newfoundland since 1954, when the first secondary school teachers and medical personnel were assigned. Since then over 200 MCC teachers have served in at least 30 identifiable communities in Newfoundland. Most of these have served for two years. Presently there are 24 MCC teachers in Newfoundland.

Orientation dates for Newfoundland teachers are scheduled for August 17 and 18 at the MCC headquarters in Akron, Pa. The group will then move to Memorial University in the capital city of St. John's for additional briefings on location. For additional information about teaching opportunities contact: Personnel Office, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pa. 17501.

Largest Class Will Graduate

Ninety-eight seniors will graduate at the Christopher Dock Mennonite High School, Lansdale, Pa., during the fifteenth annual commencement exercises to be held in June 1970. The class of 1970 is the largest graduating class in the school's sixteen-year history.

The commencement activities will begin on Saturday evening, June 6, 1970, with a senior-parent dinner in the school dining room. The dinner will be sponsored by the parents of the graduating class. Following the dinner hour, the seniors will present their class hour program for the parents and the public.

The baccalaureate service will be held on Sunday evening, June 7, beginning at 7:30 p.m. in the school auditorium. The baccalaureate address will be presented by Rev. Tom Skinner, from Brooklyn, New York City. Rev. Skinner is a 28-year-old black evangelist, born and raised in the Harlem area of New York City, author of the recently published book, Black and Free.

The commencement program is planned for Thursday evening, June 11, 7:30 p.m., in the school auditorium. Dr. Myron S. Augsburger, president of Eastern Mennonite College, Harrisonburg, Va., will address the graduates, faculty, parents, and friends.

The senior class president, Richard G. Clemens, will present a word of welcome. T. Carroll Moyer, principal, will present the awards. Lee M. Yoder, superintendent, will present the graduates for their diplomas. J. Silas Graybill, president, and Floyd M. Hackman, vice-president, of the Board of Trustees, will present the diplomas to the graduates.

Spanish Broadcast Effective

"Un magnifico trabajo." (A tremendous job.) That is a sample comment Paul Godshall received in Mexico City after he had distributed a Spanish translation of The Greatest Week in History to 104 radio stations throughout Mexico. The series of simulated news reports of events during the first Easter Week was produced by Mennonite Broadcasts in English and later translated into Spanish.

About 20 percent of all Mexican radio stations requested the program and many reported favorable listener response. In fact, one station manager said this: "Congratulations to you from our radio listeners. At the request of our radio audience we repeated the same schedule the following week."

Monte Carlo, Monaco, is the location of Trans World Radio, the station from which Parole di Vita is broadcast to Italy.

Paul Godshall is serving in Mexico under the Franconia Conference Mission Board, but is also working part time as media director in Mexico for Mennonite Advertising Agency, distributors for Mennonite Broadcasts. He is working on such new projects as Spanish radio and TV spots and a Mexican version of Corazon a Corazon (Heart to Heart), a program primarily for homemakers.

According to Lester Hershey, Spanish director, the Spanish "newscasts" were programmed both in Mexico and in many other Latin-American countries. Tapes had been sent to 31 stations in South America, 17 in Central America, 29 in the Caribbean area, 18 in the United States, and one to Trans World Radio in Monaco, for a total of 200 stations using the program in 1970. Eighty-nine stations requested the program in 1969.

Joint Meeting of Churchwide Boards and Mennonite Central Committee, Yellow Creek Mennonite Church, Goshen, Ind., Oct. 20-22.

MCC Peace Section Assembly at Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 2-3.

In the Overseas Missions Committee meeting held April 23-25, the following new OMA teacher appointments were made: Robert and Rachel Hochstredder, to Santiago, Chile; Glendon and Cheryl Heatwole, to Asuncion, Paraguay; and Robert Bishop, to Caracas, Venezuela.

Change of address for the H. James Martin family: 1206 Bellevue Avenue, La Junta, Colo. 81050.

Gene Yoder, Voluntary Service administrator at Mennonite Board of Missions, notes the following urgent personnel needs: a child care worker (husband father) at Stone Mountain Village near Belleville, Pa.; a married couple to serve as host and hostess at International Guest House in Washington, D.C. Secretarial skills and an ability to relate to persons of other cultures are prerequisites for the latter position. Interested persons should immediately contact Yoder at Box 370, Elkhart, Ind. 46514.

Leamon Sowell, a member of the Chicago Team Ministry, was installed on Apr. 26 as pastor of Bethel Mennonite Community Church, 1434 South Laffin on the near-west side of Chicago. The 40-member interracial congregation faced an uncertain future in the fall of 1969 when forced by a community pressure group to close its day care facilities.

Life-Line Book Sales, a Bookrack Evangelism project which is thriving in the United States, is also beginning to bloom in Canada. Darrell Jantzi, former BRE coordinator at Mennonite Broadcasts, has moved to Ontario and is placing racks in his community. He recently reported a new "breakthrough" at Zehr Supermarkets, a chain of 37 stores in Ontario. Racks are now being placed in 14 stores to test the amount of distribution. If these prove successful, it may be possible to place racks in most of the Zehr stores. This could mark the beginnings of an international chain.

Another experiment in Ontario involves working with Mennonite nurses in contacting hospital auxiliaries which operate a snack shop and magazine-book selling operation for visitors, employees, and patients. These may prove to be effective outlets for Life-Line Books.

Each year the second Sunday in June is observed as Broadcasting Sunday. On June 14, Christians around the world will offer special thanks for the modern miracles of radio and TV. Missionary radio alone, using more than 80 transmitters, sends more than 5,000 hours of programming to the world’s 600,000,000 radio receivers. Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., asks for prayer support as they search for effective modes of transmitting what they believe is the most important news of all time.

Speakers participating in a Sharing Concerns Bible Conference to be held at the Bowne Mennonite Church, Clarksville, Mich., June 5, 6, are D. D. Miller, Henry Diener, Sanford Shetler, and Clarence Troyer.

The Lakeview congregation at Wolford, N.D., plans a dedication service for the new church building on May 31. J. C. Wenger, Goshen, Ind., will speak on "The Dedication God Desires."

Myron Augsburger’s address to the U.S. Congress on Evangelism is now available in pamphlet form. Priorities for Action is the title and the message follows the theme of "Making Disciples in a Secular World.

Copies of the address can be obtained without charge by writing: Inter-Church, Inc., 430 West Main, New Holland, Pa. 17557.

William D. Hooley has been named Superintendent of Bethany Christian High School, and L. Wade Bollinger is the new Principal. Mr. Hooley for the past several years has been an Assistant Professor of Education, Dean of Men, and Associate Dean of Students at Goshen College. He will also serve as Guidance Counselor.

Mr. Bollinger has been the Director of Guidance at Jimtown High School, Elkhart, Ind., since 1968. They are replacing A. Don Augsburger who has accepted a position on the faculty at Eastern Mennonite College and this year’s counselor, Oren Horst, who may be teaching full time next year.

Lloyd J. Averill, Jr., Ottawa, Kan., will address the 1970 graduates at Herston College at the commencement exercises on May 23. Averill is professor of religion and sociology at Ottawa University.

Baccalaureate speaker will be Gene Herr, pastor of Pleasant Valley Mennonite Church, Harper, Kan. The baccalaureate service is scheduled at 9:30 a.m. and the commencement address at 2:30 p.m. on Sunday, May 24.

Diamond Jubilee and Horizons Beyond meeting at the Paradise meeting house, Paradise, Pa., June 5-7. This meeting commemorates the first missionary conference of the Lancaster Conference held in the Paradise Church in 1895. Out-of-conference speakers will be J. C. Wenger, Goshen, Ind., and A. J. Metzler, Scottsdale, Pa.

A film, "Run, Jimmy, Run," an up-to-date information on adoption of mixed race children by white families, will be shared by the Prince Georges County Welfare at First Mennonite Church, 4217 East-West Highway, Hyattsville, Md., June 8 at 8:00 p.m.

Penn View Christian School formerly Franconia Mennonite School, 420 Cowpath Road, Souderton, Pa., will hold its 9th Annual Country Auction on the school grounds on Saturday, May 23. Penn View Christian School is an elementary school in the Franconia Mennonite Conference. Classes are held for children of nursery school age through grade 8. The school is a patron-sponsored organization.

Change of address: A. Lloyd Swartzendruber from Kalona, Iowa, to 1565 College Ave., Harrisonburg, Va. 22801. Tele.: 703 433-2269.

New members by baptism: three at Kern Road Chapel, South Bend, Ind.; one at East Zorra, Tavistock, Ont.; ten by baptism and one by confession of faith at Bloomington, Pa.; seventeen at Lakeview, Wolford, N.D.; seven at First Mennonite, Johnstown, Pa.

Each year the Lancaster County (Pa.) Amish, Mennonites, and Brethren in Christ churches band together in a "Food for Relief" project to raise money for the Mennonite Central Committee to send meat and money to needy people around the world. In 1969 the drive brought in over $100,000, and the amount raised in 1970 again exceeded that goal.

Richard Friesen arrived safely in San Jose, Costa Rica, on Apr. 30 for language study.

John M. Miller's "Second Thoughts on the Baptism of the Holy Spirit" (April 21) was incomplete, and in part, strangely composed. In John 20:19-23 why does he pick out the part of Jesus' words on the Holy Spirit, but not comment on the matter of remitting or retaining sins — also Jesus' words there? Why does he go to Peter's Pentecostal sermon to explain Acts 1:5? The verse itself explains "the promise of the Father ... ye have heard of me" — not Peter. Did Jesus ever refer back to Joel in speaking of the Holy Ghost?

1 Cor. 12:13 has "all" twice. One usage refers to water baptism and one to those who drink of the Spirit. If the latter refers to baptism in the Spirit, then by consistently exegeting "all" in the same verse, it means that all who have water baptism have the baptism in the Spirit.

Bro. Miller seems to have worked out a smooth system of comparing two or more passages without fully exegeting any one of them.

According to Strong's Concordance, "baptism" does not appear in the New Testament in the same phrase with the Holy Spirit. Yet many people link them together. To be "baptized with the Holy Ghost" is always contrasted with John's baptism (Mt. 3:11; Mk. 1:8; Lk. 3:16; Jn. 1:33; Acts 1:5; 11:16, and 19:2). Why did he not write of being filled or full of the Holy Ghost? These terms are used at least 14 times in the New Testament. Is this less glamorous than a spectacular "baptism" followed by speaking in tongues and so forth? If we are full of the Holy Ghost (NT sense) will we brag about our baptism? Shouldn't we be more careful to give Christ all the glory? We need more men full of the Holy Ghost who show the fruits of the Spirit, not fruits of the human. — Carl L. Smelker, Kalona, Iowa.

I thank God for the article "Second Thoughts on the Baptism of the Holy Spirit" in the April 21 issue. Since my baptism I have longed to have my Mennonite brothers and sisters enter into this experience. Praise God that many can be exposed through Bro. Miller's article to this wonderful truth. For the Second Thoughts on the Baptism of the Holy Spirit is not a one-time event but an entrance into the deeper things that God has for us. — Mrs. Bethry Kor, Bronx, N.Y.

When Your Teenager Rebels

By Michael Daves

From the cave age to the computer age, teenagers have rebelled. What you experience today with your teenager, your parents faced with you and their parents with them.

There are no easy answers to the storm and stress of adolescence. Nothing will ever completely eliminate the anxiety and pain that both parents and teenagers experience during this period. It's all a part of growing up. But through years of counseling with teenagers and parents, I've formed some guidelines that may be helpful to you.

Accept Teenage Rebellion as Normal. Your teenager's life task is to stand on his own two feet. He doesn't want to be a chip off the old block, Mr. Jones' son. He wants independence. He rebels, not to defy or hurt his parents, but to experience his self-identity. Seventeen-year-old Betty wrote, "I want to be me. I don't know who I am yet; but I am not going to find out by my parents telling me. I've got to experience life for myself."

Mrs. S. had a difficult time understanding what was happening in her relationship with her two sons. She mistook their identity struggle as a personal attack. She lamented, "They're monsters. They've turned against me and don't love me anymore. I'm about to have a nervous breakdown." It was a long time before she was able to see that her attitude was self-centered and unrealistic.

Avoid Sermons Like the Plague. Teenagers resist being told what to do and what's good for them. They turn off parents when we say, "I know just how you feel. Why, when I was your age. . . ." They are angered by stories designed to make us look good and them look bad. And they don't believe these stories anyway. As one fifteen-year-old said, "My dad must really think I'm stupid. Why, nobody's as good as he says he was." Parents who always pick on their teenagers do inestimable damage. Maturity is never achieved on command. Parents need understanding and patience. Sixteen-year-old Mary told her pastor, "My parents are always on my back. I can't do anything right. No matter what I do, they complain about it. It drives me crazy." Encouragement does more to reinforce constructive patterns than carping about faults. Jesus knew this long ago. His directions were positive, not negative. He said that He came to save, not to condemn.

Be Open About Anger. Love includes anger. When you care about someone, you get angry when he is engaged in self-destructive behavior. Paul acknowledged the existence of anger and suggested that we ought to do something about it when he wrote, "Do not let the sun go down on your anger."

Parents and teenagers will get angry at one another. Don't feel guilty for being angry. Don't pretend you're not angry when you are. And don't hit below the belt and insult your teenager.

Patty's mother had tried for many months to get her sixteen-year-old to keep her room clean. Finally, one Saturday afternoon after a very exhausting day, she went into Patty's room to find everything on the floor. Flushed with anger, she said, "Patty, what am I going to do with you? Are you deaf or something? I've told you thousands of times to keep your room clean. If you don't learn to pick up after yourself, you'll never be a good wife or mother."

How much better to say: "Patty, I am furious because you have let your room get so dirty. It makes me mad because I work very hard trying to keep a clean house and you don't cooperate." In this latter exchange, Patty's mother was being honest about her feelings, but not insulting. This approach did not build up resentment and fear in Patty, and it got the job done, too!

Give Your Teenager Responsible Freedom. As the parent of a teenager, you should try to work yourself out of a job. Don't strive to reinforce childish patterns of dependency; aid your teenager in "putting away childish things." As much as possible decisions should be left to your teenager. This doesn't mean abandoning rules, but it means adopting rules that are flexible, realistic, and workable. It also means that your teenager clearly understands that his freedom depends on his responsibility. Consider the father who told his son, "You may use the car, but you must put gas in it and drive carefully."

This teenager had freedom with responsibility, which is the only real freedom there is.

The skillful parent gets out of the way and lets the teenager grow through experience. He encourages independent behavior with statements like: "It's up to you." "You're the one to decide." "You can do what you want to about that."

Don't Be Defensive About Religion. A smart seventeen-year-old boy said, "Parents are hard on senior highs because they aren't too sure themselves what they believe. So they yell a little louder to keep up their courage."

Don't let rebelliousness about religion and the church throw you into a tailspin! If you are threatened, admit it. Then work to grow as a Christian.

Teenagers' questions about religion should be taken seriously. When their faith comes into conflict, they need understanding. No teenager should be made to feel guilty for his doubts about the faith. As a parent, you should spell out the options for him. You should never try to cram one answer down his throat. Be honest about your beliefs, but allow for honest differences in points of view.

One day, your teenager probably will say sturdily, "I don't want to go to church. It's just boring." Many of the church's activities are boring to youth because they are poorly planned and executed. We often talk about the teenagers being tomorrow's church. This is wrong. They are the church today, and we need to give them more power of self-determination. Try to find out why your teenager loses interest in church; then do what you can to restore interest. This may mean that you will take an active part in helping with the youth program. And make sure that you are committed to the church. Action still speaks stronger than words.

Seek Help for Impasses. An impasse means there is no movement either forward or backward. It is entrapment. I have seen many parents and teenagers locked in impasse. Their situation was worsening, yet they were reluctant to seek help.

Betty is a fourteen-year-old girl; her mother is her only parent and she has been ill for years. Betty started staying out late, going with older men and coming home when she pleased. Her mother is completely unable to cope with her, but she doesn't believe in talking to others about her problems. Soon the juvenile authorities may force help on her.

Seek out a doctor, minister, family counselor, psychiatrist, social worker, teacher, or trusted friend. Ask for advice and counsel. Don't be embarrassed. Admitting your need for help is a sign of your personal strength.

Being a parent was never an easy task. It is even harder in our fast-moving world of change and confusion. The wise parent will accept rebellion for what it is: a natural part of growing up. You will use rebellion as glue to cement the parent-teen relationship instead of scissors to cut it apart.

Even if you're on the wrong foot with your teenager, you can make the necessary changes to better your lives together.

A good start is to follow these guidelines: accept teenage rebellion as normal; avoid sermons like the plague; be open about anger; give your teenager responsible freedom; don't be defensive about religion; and seek help for impasses.

In the midst of rebellion, both you and your teenagers can grow in love, respect, maturity, and faith. Who can ask for more?

The Void of Inner Space

By Ellrose Zook

Scientific technology has made it possible for man to begin to penetrate infinite outer space. But what about the void of "inner space" in man today? We are told it costs about $32,000 plus a donor for a heart transplant. But a new physical heart does not satisfy the sorrows and hungers of the "inner" heart about which the Bible speaks. In this day of stress and uncertainty the inner space of man seems to be filled with fear, frustration, and anxiety.

The popular song, "Where Have All the Flowers Gone?" is not a question asked about three weeks after Groundhog Day following a severe winter. Rather it is the lament of a heart for all that is beautiful, lovely, and satisfying. The song speaks of despair. Will the "flowers" ever come back?

One wonders whether the writer of this song knew about Isaiah 40:6-8: "The voice said, Cry. And he said, What shall I cry? All flesh is grass, and all the goodness thereof is as the flower of the field: the grass withereth, the flower fadeth: because the spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it: surely the people is grass. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: but the word of our God shall stand forever."

Technology cannot penetrate the inner space of man. It cannot fill the void that seems to be present in our time of stress, strain, and uncertainty. The popular song asks the right question, a pertinent and timely one. But it does not answer it. The "flowers" are the eternal Word of God that shall stand forever. No one will ever write a song, "Where Has the Word of God Gone?" God's Word is a song not of lament but of joy, not of fear but of courage, not of withering and fading but of eternal beauty, not of weakness but of strength, for ever.

A marriage counselor began to ask a woman some questions concerning her disposition: "Did you wake up grumpy this morning?"

Sharper Focus

What would happen if we gave ourselves a sharper denominational focus for the next five years? If, instead of attempting to do so much, we would select clearly achievable priorities as God would lead us, if all of the brotherhood would get back of them, if our Christian educational efforts were concentrated to undergird those priorities, isn’t it just possible that our total effect on the world and on other Christians could be greater?

It is precisely because we are a small denomination that denominational priorities are possible.

In our effort to grow we may have forgotten the thing that is needed to keep us strong — the brotherhood ideal. There are a great many members on our rolls who would be hard put to tell what a brotherhood-believer’s church is all about. What would happen if our numbers were reduced to those committed to a twentieth-century interpretation of the Anabaptist vision? It is constantly surprising and disquieting how many Mennonites fit beautifully into the category of the “silent majority” because they are of the silent majority. Surely the martyrs who started the movement would be horrified.

It is not easy to prepare Christian education materials or to plan programs that suit those persons who have forgotten what radical discipleship means. It is understandable that they do not want to be disturbed. But whether we should bend our Christian education programs and materials to satisfy them is another question. When we do condition the whole brotherhood to believe that discipleship is something less than it is.

We are told by some that current issues are not the Christian’s concern. They say we should not speak out to the government against the war in Vietnam because God may have something in mind with it. We should stay away, they say, from subjects like race, poverty, injustice, ecology because these are social action emphases. Yet now as always it is likely that the sins of the “good people” are the greatest. They do less than they could.

We could do better if we would put our best efforts into a determined desire to do a few things well. Let us remember that every generation of Mennonites must be regenerated in the fires of their convictions. We must discern where the conviction is so we can see where God is working.

— Arnold Cressman

By Still Waters

“All things work together for good to them that love God, to whom are the called according to his purpose” (Rom. 8:28).

This is a promise we have a hard time believing when adversity strikes or when things happen to us which seem to foretell ill. Yet it is a promise we can never prove true when everything is going good. Paul says God is able to make all things, both good and ill, work together for our betterment, if we keep on loving and trusting God.

Perhaps the place we sometimes fail in our faith is to really believe that God wants the best for us always. He never desires anything which will hurt, harm, or hinder us. Our part is to keep trusting and loving Him although it may appear dark at the moment. What He allows He has a purpose in. And His purpose for us is always pure and perfect. The poet William Cowper wrote:

Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take;
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercy and shall break
In blessings on your head.

Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,
But trust Him for His grace;
Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face.

I Am Distressed

While listening to the President’s report to the nation on the reasons for the military invasion of Cambodia and the justifying of his actions, I was deeply distressed. My thoughts went back to another period of history in which a military power under the leadership of Der Führer in Germany invaded the countries of central Europe. Those moves 31 years ago, led the nations of the world into World War II. I began to suffer much as I reflected upon the possibility of another Worldwide War.

I am deeply distressed because of what the war in Vietnam has already done to our nation, to the nations of North and South Vietnam, as well as the other nations of the world. In our own nation morale is breaking and we may also be facing a serious economic crisis. In the past history of the world, every nation that became a great military power, and tried to either police or conquer the world, has gone into economic ruin. But even worse than the economics is what happens to persons. Our nation has become “a house divided against itself.” The youth, many of whom are intellectuals and students in the colleges and universities are rising in rebellion against the militarism of our times.

The appearance of armed forces on the university campuses has caused me much suffering. Christians cannot condone destructive behavior, nor support violence of any kind. It is indeed disturbing when students use destructive forms of protests. But it is even more disturbing when the armed forces resort to the use of violence, taking the lives of unarmed students. One is impressed with how much it is like the little boy who has a toy. He must use his toy! So it appears as though the “little boys in uniforms” have the same feelings. Even though they may be threatened with destructive weapons, if they panic, the first thought is to use the toys. It is indeed deeply distressing to see the lives of unarmed students snuffed out, regardless whether they be men or women.

I suffer still more when I see Christians support such use of force, saying, “we must preserve law and order within our society.” That some of those who have espoused the faith and life of nonresistance, disciples of our Lord Jesus Christ, should support such use of force and military might is most disturbing. How can a Christian believer put his trust in military might? How can any disciple of Jesus Christ become a partner in a resistance movement? How can one who claims to be nonresistant support the use of violence of any kind?

I am distressed when I think of how some Mennonite Christians have succumbed to accept “so-called” Christian ideas and slogans. When these our brethren accept the word of the President as the only solution, but reject the Word of the Lord as taught by their leaders and ministers! Christians used to accept the word of their ministers as “authority.” But today some question those whom they should trust the most.

Indeed I am distressed with what I see happening in the social order, the nations, and the churches. But I am not disheartened. As a citizen of the kingdom of God I do see a better way, the way of peace, love, and reconciliation. I have not lost hope, because my faith is fixed in a great God, and a Holy Savior, my Lord Jesus Christ. I grew to manhood under the preaching which said, “If the Christians of America would refuse to bear arms in times of warfare, the United States could not wage a war.” I have preached this same gospel and do sincerely believe it. So with my confidence in the Lord of history who says in His Word, “The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever,” I do not lose faith, hope, or courage, because I do believe that in Him we shall overcome. — John E. Lapp.

How to Stop the War

David J. McKenna put his finger on an important truth when he said at the recent National Association of Evangelicals meeting, “One cannot help but note that evangelical Christianity is against every war except the one we’re in. For the sake of youth we need to disclaim a ‘victory at any cost’ march under the name of Christ. The other day someone said, ‘If you want to end the war in Vietnam, just change the draft laws to include every man over 40 who makes at least $10,000 a year.’ Our attitudes start to change when our lives are at stake.”

That’s why many youth today are rebelling. Their lives are at stake. The older and richer go on trying to give justifiable reasons why our youth should be dying in a cause which they know cannot be justified.

America is fighting the longest war in its history. The only answer those in authority seem to accept is the escalation and expansion of military destruction. Loud announcements are made about the large troop withdrawals but little is said about the thousands being sent to Vietnam each month making really a very small decrease in troops.

A speaker at a recent Communications Congress in Chicago said it clearly, “We could stop the war anytime if the church would stand its ground for truth and say it will not fight.” It is striking, as McKenna says, that the church is against every war except the one the country is in at the time. In wartime the church just cannot bring itself to apply the New Testament. And our youth, our land, go on dying. But not only our youth and our land but multitudes more die in the lands where our bombs are dropped and our guns kill and destroy.

I must admit, I too have a feeling that the war would have been over long ago if as many over 40-year-olds, who make at least $10,000 per year, would have died on Vietnam as those under 22. I have the feeling that the war would have been over long ago and real help would have been given to Vietnam if for once the church declared by action that it follows Christ as Lord. — D.
An Open Letter to the Mennonite Church

Dear Friends:

Hyde Park, a Spanish-speaking low-income area of Pueblo, Colorado, doesn’t fit the ghetto stereotype of many large cities. In Hyde Park the houses are not all crowded together, and one doesn’t find any high-rise apartment buildings. Hyde Park actually resembles a small town or suburb: the houses are single-dwelling units, fairly well spaced out, and quite a few empty lots serve as playgrounds.

Hyde Park and a city suburb differ in that here the average home is only valued at three or four thousand dollars. Even though a few nice homes with grass, garage, etc., do exist, the majority do not include these items. Also, there are hardly any paved streets, which means the area is either dusty or muddy almost constantly. There is very limited fire and police protection, and city water and sewer have only become available in the past year.

So why do approximately two thousand people live in these conditions? Primarily because there are insufficient jobs for everyone, and also because many full-time jobs only pay three or four thousand a year, which is simply not enough for a large family. Of course there is welfare, and many families do wind up going this route as a last resort. However, in most cases only widowed or separated mothers with children are able to receive assistance, and even then it’s not enough to subsist on.

The majority of people in Hyde Park do not live in these conditions because they want to or because they are too lazy to change things. It happens because they can do very little to improve their lot. The War on Poverty and other helping agencies operate under the self-help philosophy. This is a very good ideal, but in many cases these people cannot help themselves because they have few resources to work with.

For example, a mother calls the family worker of the Neighborhood Service Center and asks for some help in learning how to prepare better meals. But when the family worker arrives she finds a stove with only one burner working and no temperature regulation, and the pots and pans are so warped and burned that no one could cook with them.

Another example is a mother of six whose husband left home, leaving her feeling rather hopeless and depressed. So the family worker begins counseling her, getting her involved in clubs, etc. Then she decides to look for a job and applies everywhere in the city that might hire her. After no responses for more than a year she decides to enroll in adult education classes, and soon receives her graduate equivalent diploma. However, after looking for three years she still cannot locate a job, even with the help of the employment counselor. By now she has three teenagers at home living on her welfare check of about $135 a month. Of course, this money doesn’t allow for maintenance on the house, so conditions become so bad that icicles hang from the ceiling on the inside of the house in winter.

Some of these needs have led to the formation of the Hyde Park Assistance Project, a recent undertaking of the Pueblo Mennonite Church and directed mainly by VS-ers. In this project we plan to raise money and then use it to purchase materials and needed items to repair houses of needy people in Hyde Park. Already we have raised over $300 — some by donations, a bake sale, and a car wash. The family we have chosen to help first is the one already mentioned in sore need of house repairs. To date we have helped by fixing the roof, repairing several beds, and cleaning and landscaping the yard. We also plan to make other improvements inside the house, and then in consultation with the family worker we will select other needy families to assist.

Pueblo Mennonite Church members and VS-ers plan to supply the labor for the house improvements and to conduct various fund-raising projects. However, we are definitely going to need prayer and financial support from concerned people in other geographic areas, for we are few in number and the needs are great. Contributions may be sent in care of the Pueblo Mennonite Church, 634 Goodnight Avenue, Pueblo, Colo. 81003.

Poverty does exist, and very close to home! Some people are trying to do something about it. Will you do your part?

Thank you for your concern.

Sincerely,

Terry Koppenhaver

The Materialist Myth

By Wilbert R. Shenk

We commonly congratulate ourselves these days on our unparalleled concern for the poor and powerless in the world. However, waves of reaction are being sent back to the prosperous and powerful—notwithstanding their charity—from the less-developed nations and minority groups of the West.

It has become a fad to be concerned; it is fashionable to be socially sensitive. Large corporations in the United States have discovered that it is no longer good strategy to recruit young executives on the basis of how profitable the firm is. The new grad is typically drawn to the company which displays its sense of social responsibility.

Does this mean the new executive is unconcerned about his own salary, fringe benefits, and opportunity for future advancement? On the contrary, today’s budding executive will not accept the salary level considered standard a few years ago. He is demanding and getting a much higher salary.

The majority in our society has experienced material prosperity for so long that we have an unwarranted confidence in material power. The United States government has set an unfortunate public example by the conduct of the foreign aid programs. It was naively assumed that giving money and expert advice to other nations would enable them to quickly and easily modernize and develop. The experience has now left many disillusioned on both sides.

The church is being deeply affected by materialism. First, there are those who extol the “American way of life” because of the obvious material benefits it has brought to those in the majority group. Criticism of inequities which exist in American society is considered unpatriotic because it becomes a judgment on those who are materially secure and who are unconcerned for those who are not.

Second, there are those who want to define as evangelism any and all efforts to raise the poor and dispossessed up to the middle-class living standard. Certainly Christian compassion asks us to help the needy and to open opportunities to those who have suffered misfortune.

The Bible depicts man as both a physical and spiritual being. “Man shall not live by bread alone. . . .” But without bread man dies. It is a betrayal of the spirit and thrust of the gospel to say to the world that the whole of Christian responsibility has been fulfilled when men’s bellies have been filled with food, the children have been clothed, and families have a decent roof over their heads.

True Christian compassion seeks to meet men’s immediate needs. But it is mindful—profoundly so—of the other dimensions to human existence and the men we can become in Christ.

A Parable

By Henry P. Yoder

Now it came to pass that a certain man builded himself a house in that part of town that was newly developed. And he said within himself: “Behold, I shall make sidewalk. My neighbors do not have sidewalk before their houses, but peradventure the town authorities command us to lay sidewalk, I shall already have laid mine, and at less cost.”

Not many days after all had been made ready there fell a heavy snow. And this man, as he was wont, did diligently clear the snow from off his driveway.

And lo, a police officer did pass that way. And calling to mind that the good man of the house did recently lay sidewalk the officer did descend down from off his patrol car and did walk into the driveway to investigate. Seeing that the snow had not been removed from the sidewalk he forthwith drew a ticket from his pocket and, alas, did present the good man of the house with a fine of $15!

And behold the good man of the house did protest vehemently, saying: “Hast thou not understanding? Canst thou not see that mine is the only sidewalk in this block? What profit shall there be to clear my sidewalk if no man treadeth foot thereon?”

And the officer answering said unto him: “But the law commandeth thee to clear thy sidewalk of all ice and snow.”

But the good man of the house replied saying: “I am not ignorant of the law. We are commanded to clear our sidewalk for the protection of those who walk thereon. Since no man useth my sidewalk, surely the law doth not command its obedience for no purpose.”

But the officer made reply saying: “The law standeth and must be obeyed regardless of thy opinion. I confess to the absurdity of fulfilling this command, but law is law.”

And the good man of the house indignantly did protest: “Thou art without mercy. Thou regardest not the intent of the law nor the conditions under which thou renderest unto me this fine.”

“Sir,” replied the officer, “see thou to mercy. I must fulfill my obligation to the law.” And forthwith he did ascend up into his patrol car and drove away, leaving the good man of the house with the ticket commanding him to pay the utmost penny of his fine.
Why Did You Come?

A team of 45 doctors and nurses visited La Ceiba, Honduras, and surrounding communities March 30 to April 11. They gave free examinations, medications, and surgery to folks in need. National Christians, Eastern Board missionaries, and Voluntary Service personnel assisted as evangelists, translators, and general helpers.

The project, sponsored by the Christian Medical Society, was their third crusade in Honduras within a year. Six of the team members were Mennonites. Rebecca Longenecker, RN, Elizabethtown, Pa., summarizes the experiences of the group as she answers the question, “Why did you come?”

“Did you come to fulfill the need in your life to be helpful or because God’s love is overflowing in your heart?” a surgeon’s wife asked the fifteen RN’s seated in a circle in a corner of the mess hall of the Standard Fruit Company of La Ceiba, Honduras.

Four similar groups of medical personnel (surgeons, doctors, medical students, pharmacist, and laboratory technician), who had volunteered one or two weeks of vacation time to the Christian Medical Society, Oak Park, Illinois, were participating in cell group devotions. They were about to begin a challenging ten-hour day of giving medical examinations and treatment to needy people in Honduras.

A few minutes later the director, a Spanish-speaking missionary from the Dominican Republic, announced that 200-300 patients were waiting outside the fence at the La Ceiba Mennonite Church. Physicians’ offices were set up inside the church. The benches served as seats for patient, doctor, and translator.

Sometimes it became necessary for two doctors to use a 7 x 9 ft. office simultaneously. Surgeons adjusted to the facilities of the church benches, the local hospitals, and the VS Center to perform surgery and treatment. An ophthalmologist removed cataracts with the aid of a hundred-watt bulb.

At least 25 eye operations were performed, and about 50 patients had general surgery. A few Mennonite missionaries benefited from the services of these surgeons.

Each day a team of doctors and medical personnel took a bus trip to a nearby village where people gathered outside the local government clinic, the local school, or a private home. On one day 450 consultations were held and free medication was given to patients. In one village three and one-half gallons (in 21/2 cc and 5 cc doses) of worm medicine was ejected into the mouths of recipients. (Anyone working in this “open-mouth-medication” area could see that several dentists should have volunteered their services.)

The team visited a total of nine villages (two of them required an overnight plane trip) and gave a total of about 450 measles immunizations to children under three years of age.

Another phase of the work was literature distribution. Some of it dealt with health problems. Even the nonliterate could understand the colorful pictures, but the brief Spanish sentences added to the descriptive information. Gospel tracts were given to those who could read. On one occasion a team member gave a Spanish-English translation of the Gospel of John to a Honduran translator she had worked with that day. Many hands reached for the four other copies she held in her hand.

One day as the weary, dusty team was returning to the mess hall, they noticed a group of mothers and children gathered along the road. The bus driver stopped and the VS translator informed us they wanted to know if we would visit their town. We could only shake our heads and say, “Sorry.” Their sad countenances asked, “Why not?”

While they were asking that question, some of the team were still asking themselves, “Why did I come?” And there were answers.

The teenage daughter of a surgeon said that she couldn’t go back to the city and be the same kind of a person she had been — always taking things for granted. A medical student said that before she came she wasn’t sure she should be in medicine; now she could understand there was a place for her in the medical field. A surgeon said that one cannot go back home and really “tell it like it is.” One must get his friends to volunteer their services so they can experience it for themselves.

And I say “Amen” because there are many personal incidents not related — like the family with five small children who traveled four days by boat, train, and foot, slept in the street of La Ceiba, and stood for hours without breakfast outside the church fence just so they could see the doctor. Most of us wondered why they came to us. We hope we conveyed to them the spirit of love which prompted our coming to them. — MCC News Release

Home Missions is people like Sammy Santos of New York. Through Home Missions lives are being changed by the Holy Spirit through the preaching of the gospel.

Home Missions is churches like North Side Chapel, Omaha, Nebraska. Persons with changed lives worship, witness, and serve together. They are the body of Christ engaged in His mission in their communities.

Dr. Hudson T. Armerding, president of Wheaton College, was elected president of the National Association of Evangelicals. One thousand leaders and officials of 38 member denominations and clergy members representing some 30 other denominations voted the educator into office at the twenty-eighth annual NAЕ convention held April 7-9 in Kansas City, Mo.

In his acceptance speech Dr. Armerding noted, "We shall need clear vision, strong conviction, and fervent love for our ministry in these critical and yet strategic days."

Referring to the contemporary deterioration of standards and the abandonment of fidelity to authority, the new president emphasized, "It is most important for the National Association of Evangelicals to declare its convictions . . . We are convinced that God has spoken authoritatively in the Bible, and affirm our unconditional allegiance to the Word of God."

An unplanned ecumenical advance, one of mood rather than method, one that has nothing to do with negotiations or merger, was forecast for Christianity by a Protestant scholar who described the coming phenomenon as "an era of proexistence."

"Proexistence means literally living for one another," said Dr. David H. C. Read, pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church and a national radio preacher. He predicted that this ecumenical emergence will come about in two ways: through the Holy Spirit and through Scripture.

"It seems that the Spirit today is active in dissolving the irritants of suspicion and fear that isolate men and women in groups whether by religion, race, or color," he said, "and the movement for Christian unity is something more than a panic realization that unless we hang together we shall hang separately."

Stating that the Christian church is not a "religious bloc" in opposition to the world, nor a "proselytizing task force," seeking unity so to conquer, Dr. Read declared "it exists for humanity. It seeks proexistence well beyond the boundaries of the Christian fold."

The Massachusetts Legislature's bold act in seeking a Supreme Court test of the constitutionality of the war in Vietnam, signed by Republican Gov. Sargent, crowns the courageous efforts of all the youth who have resisted military service in Vietnam on the grounds of conscience. The specific intent of this action is that Massachusetts servicemen need not participate in a war Congress has not declared and which is therefore unconstitutional. The bill instructs the State's Attorney General Robert Quinn to assist Massachusetts servicemen who refuse to fight on these grounds. According to legal scholars, it is not likely that the Supreme Court will accept the case on grounds that the question is political rather than legal. Nonetheless this does not weaken the importance of the challenge. The large portion of Irish and Italian Catholics in Massachusetts exposes the sham of the Nixon-Agnew thesis that dissenters are "efete snobs." The pressure is on to do the same in other states.

The courts-martial over the massacre of Vietnamese citizens continue to pile up evidence of the great moral deterioration that technological warfare has inflicted upon the military mind. Although additional reports keep appearing about group and individual killings, all such incidents are still dwarfed by the fact that until recently, as the conflict diminished, at least 25,000 South Vietnamese civilians have been killed each year by U.S. firepower, with 100,000 more severely wounded. To say that civilians always suffer in war, that thousands of civilians also died in Japan and Germany from our bombing in World War II, has little bearing on events in Vietnam. Germans and Japanese were so-called "enemy populations." Our chief victims in this area are the South Vietnamese, our allies, whom we are supposed to be defending. As we have frequently pointed out, by the logic of U.S. propaganda, the Vietnamese civilians have been overrun by the communists and we are supposedly there to save them.

The independent Churches of Christ, strong in Southern states, are growing while other denominations are declining in membership because "society wants to hear an authentic voice from the pulpit," a rather unusual interdenominational gathering was told.

Dr. Earl West of Freed Hardeman College, Henderson, Tenn., was a Churches of Christ participant in a meeting bringing together representatives of four groups which in some way trace their history to the frontier movement associated with Alexander Campbell.

Dr. West said that people are becoming tired of hearing "doubts and fears" from the pulpit. His denomination has about 2.5 million members and is commonly recognized as one of the fastest-growing in the nation.

The General Conference of the United Methodist Church placed the denomination on record as favoring legalized abortion and voluntary sterilization as a partial solution to the world's population crisis.

After a debate lasting several hours, the 950 clerical and lay delegates, adopted a resolution calling on the states to remove abortion from their Criminal Codes and place it under regulations relating to standard medical practice.

In the same resolution, they urged the states to remove the remaining legal and administrative restrictions on voluntary sterilization.

The criterion for abortion would be that it be available only upon the request of the person most directly concerned—the pregnant woman. For sterilization, the individual man or woman, after counseling, "should be given the right to decide concerning his or her own sterilization."

U.S. action in sending combat troops into Cambodia, announced by President Nixon on April 30, was deplored in a statement issued by the president of the National Council of Churches.

Dr. Cynthia Wedel was joined by Dr. Ernest A. Gross, chairman of the NCC's department of international affairs, describing the measure as a step to taking us "even further from any hope of peace" and ignoring "the lessons of history."

The strongly worded condemnation, which did not mention the president by name, lamented that the U.S. "once again has acted unilaterally to seek advantage and solution by military measures."

A total offering of $114,000 in one night was made by the congregation of People's Church which, with 3,500 members, claims to be the largest individual Protestant congregation in Canada.

The amount was nearly $30,000 more than the goal and will enable the church to continue supporting more than 400 missionaries abroad and also raise their salaries by $75 a month, according to Elmer McVety, associate minister. More than 2,500 persons attended the offering.

The question, "Who is a Jew?" has been decided by a 51 to 14 vote of the Knesset. A Jew, they decided, is one born of a Jewish mother, or a convert. As to immigrants, Gentile spouses, children and grandchildren of Jews shall receive the same privileges as Jewish immigrants, including citizenship. However, such immigrants will not be accepted as Jews unless they convert.
Vietnam and Cambodia: Are Mennonites Acting?

The decision of President Nixon and his military advisers to extend the war into Cambodia has once more reminded Americans of the reality that their country is at war. MCC Peace Section has received calls and letters daily from across the country inquiring what the Peace Section is doing at this historic juncture. Usually it is asked for help in understanding this situation, help in expressing an opinion on this war.

For the Peace Section staff, these calls for help have been refreshing—what is more appropriate than asking the church and church agencies for assistance in a crisis moment? These calls have also created frustration. (Many have become weary working against war and have grown tired in well-doing.) The Mennonite tradition has opposed all war, which also then means every specific war. But it hasn’t developed tactics of witnessing to its belief that all war is sin except in the refusal to bear arms. The developing of other tactics to express the conviction that all war, even in Vietnam, is wrong, is a task confronting the entire brotherhood.

The Colleges Respond

Mennonite colleges, like nearly every other college throughout the land, were the first centers to respond to the invasion of Cambodia. Here the peace clubs, numerous other students, and faculties organized letter-writing campaigns, prayer sessions, and forums on what to do.

Eastern Mennonite College’s President Myron Augsburger wrote a letter to President Nixon for the faculty and students, “urging deliberate and prompt action to end our involvement in this Indochina war.” The Harrisonburg Daily News Record reported seven specific points that the EMC community urged on President Nixon. These included more support for the peace movement, earlier withdrawal from Indochina, and ending the draft.

At Bethel College there were attempts to communicate with the townspeople of Newton on attitudes toward war and a mass rally where one faculty member proposed running for the U.S. Congress as a peace candidate.

At a Goshen College chapel on May 5 the community stayed in session over two hours discussing ways to work on this issue. Letter-writing and community actions followed. Several carloads of Goshen College students attended the Washington action on Cambodia on Saturday, May 9.

Dozens of congregations recognized the national emergency brought on by the Cambodian invasion, the student movement, and the killing of four students at Kent by the Ohio National Guard. Some of them had special prayers. Others addressed letters to local and national officials.

In Akron, Pa., a group of housewives immersed themselves in the McGovern-Hatfield Amendment denying funds “for any proposal arising from military conflict,” except for the safe and systematic withdrawal of all U.S. military personnel, in both Vietnam and Laos after Dec. 31, 1970, and in Cambodia 90 days after enactment. They then arranged to canvass each household in town, asking for signatures to support the McGovern-Hatfield Amendment.

In some areas special-interest groups such as professors, teachers, and businessmen joined in supporting actions to protest the war and restore civic peace.

Peace Section Actions

Peace Section representatives, along with three Mennonite pastors, attended the “Churchmen’s Congressional Visitaton on Indochina and South East Asia” held in Washington, D.C., May 5, 6. It was this mass action which suggested that Mennonites, because of their involvement in Vietnam since 1954 not only had a special insight into the evil of war, but also because of this long experience in a war zone.

On Wednesday, May 13, Vietnam veterans Atlee Beechy, Paul Longacre, Gayle Preheim, Eugene Stoltzfus, and Douglas Hostetter visited Senators or their administrative assistants from Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Kansas, and Idaho. Some Mennonite students from Boston, Mass., and other Peace Section staff participated in these visits. In each case the emphases were on the gospel of peace and the effects of the war on the Vietnamese people. The representatives urged these Senators to support concrete actions which would bring an early end to the war. Such concrete action might be specific support of the bipartisan Church-Cooper Amendment to the Defense Appropriations Bill which says none of the funds appropriated “shall be used to finance the introduction of American ground combat troops into Laos, Thailand, or Cambodia” after July 1, 1970.

Another concrete action Senators were urged to support was the McGovern-Hatfield Amendment to the Military Authorization Bill. (Readers will be interested in reading Senator Mark Hatfield’s address at Florence State College, Florence, Ala., May 5, available from Peace Section and in the May issue of Washington Memo.)

Those in Washington were amazed to meet the hundreds of college students also trying to tell Congressmen in the last days of the war that it was time to end the war. Congressmen were very candid in saying that their mail was heavily weighted against the Cambodian action. Pennsylvania Senator Schweiker’s office said their mail was 97-against against the Cambodian invasion. Virginia Senator Spong’s office said it was 97 against the Cambodian invasion. Each of the Senators or their staff contacted admitted to his own deep dissatisfaction with the war in Vietnam and concern over the constitutional processes of government. These expressions of concerns have had a profound impact. The House of Representatives refused to vote approval or, for that matter, disapproval of the President’s action in Cambodia. But there is a very strong likelihood that the Church-Cooper Amendment preventing ground military action in Cambodia will pass the Senate. Senatorial concern for peace includes a profound re-appraisal of presidential power. Most were not yet ready to oppose the President’s Cambodian action through specific legislation.

These are only a few things that have been going on. MCC Peace Section would be eager to have reports from congregations and individuals on their actions and the impact they observed.

Gospel Herald, May 26, 1970
Vietnam and Cambodia: What Can We Do?

The war in Vietnam is not new. The movement to end the war is not new. But the extension of the war into Cambodia raises again the necessity of eternal vigilance by concerned people about the continued fact of war in Vietnam, much of it being fought by American troops with most of the destruction by American air power.

Neither are the issues at stake new. War, the needless destruction of human life, the militarization of American society, and the growing polarities in the nation have been with us for a decade or more. The need for the church to be faithful to the Jesus way of life and to witness to the world of God's will for all people and all nations is an obligation incumbent on all God's people. Mennonites, as a peace church, have spoken out against the war in Vietnam, as all other wars, not only out of following Jesus but also so that the gospel of reconciliation could be preached to all people.

The Immediate Issues

Concretely, the invasion of Cambodia is an extension of the war. If the war was a mistake before, this simply compounds the mistake. The extension of the war can only the most contorted reasoning become a justification for a faster pullout. The escalation of the war hasn't shortened the war before. The growing casualty lists are stark evidence that broadening the war is costly. Civilian deaths and destruction and looting of villages in Cambodia is no way to justify saving American lives.

Second, there is a peace movement in Congress and throughout the nation to support. Mennonite Christians may rightly question undue respect for the political process. The political order is part of the world. But there are options. Supporting the things that make for peace should include helping those who are committed to these ideas rather than acquiescing to those who are involved in war.

Third, this brings us to a very important issue. Can we properly support tactics which the President opposes? Does he have superior sources of information? How far do we follow his reasoning?

Again we need to keep clearly the vision of a commitment to peace at the forefront. This vision precludes supporting any war for any reason. Jesus died instead of doing that. There are no justifications for war in the Mennonite tradition and no justifications for war in a nuclear age. Presidents need to know this generally and concretely. The faithful Mennonite will say "no" to a President who says it is necessary to fight to make peace.

The concern of the Christian is not only for his own country, though such a concern is always necessary. The church lives in a certain situation and is one of the institutions that determines the quality of life in the community. War not only destroys people but it embitters society. In the U.S. the commitment to war has distorted values, upset the order of priorities in the economy, and cheapened the meaning of life for nearly everyone.

Action by churches and concerned people is necessary now! To preserve the integrity of the gospel, to end the war, to make the national government responsible to the people, to create a new harmony in American society.

What Can Be Done?

There is no one way to act. The people of God have seized on many different actions during the course of history. Oftentimes and properly the variety of actions complement each other. Whatever the action, it should emerge in the context of the church. It is in prayer, fasting, and discussion that the Holy Spirit speaks. Each of us needs corporate support. Corporate action is only real when based on corporate decision.

The church has provided through the variety of gifts, committees and staff as resources for understanding questions of peace and social concern. District peace committees, conference peace secretaries, the MCC Peace Section, Akron, Pa., and its Washington Office, 100 Maryland Ave., N.E., stand ready to assist in providing resources for discussion and action.

Out of the variety of possible actions, whatever the action:

— Act responsibly. Get acquainted with the issues of peace, war, and militarism. Find out the concerns of young people. Discuss war and peace in your midweek meeting, Sunday school, and congregation.

— Act at the appropriate moment. Have special congregational prayer services. Send a congregational letter to President Nixon, to the Senators of your state, and to the Representative of your district, asking for their views and for a commitment to end the war in Indochina. Send personal and family letters expressing similar concerns.

— Act in concert with people of similar convictions. Support responsible community groups making for peace in Indochina. Encourage Congressmen who want to end the war. Sign community petitions asking for an early end to the war and/or supporting specific steps toward ending the war.

Other possibilities include:

— sending a Personal Opinion Message (POM) telegram of 15 words, plus your name and address for 90c to people in positions of influence.

— urging the Congress, especially the Senate, to support the McGovern-Hatfield Amendment curtailing funds for military action in Indochina, thereby forcing the establishment of a concrete schedule for withdrawal.

— visiting your Senators and Congressmen, either in Washington or when they are at home, and express your conviction in person.

These are suggestions. "There is no way to peace; peace is the way." — John A. Lapp

Ten Enter Voluntary Service

May VS Orientation Group

Ten young adults attending the May 5-15 Voluntary Service orientation school at Mennonite Board of Missions have accepted the following one- or two-year assignments:

First row: Duane Jones, Prescott, Ariz., is a child care worker for two years at Kansas City (Kan.) Children's Home.

Beginning a one-year term as a registered nurse at Hattie Larrlham Foundation in Mantua, Ohio, Rebecca Duerksen of Hesston, Kan., is a member of the Hesston Mennonite Church and was formerly employed by Mennonite Hospital, La Junta, Colo.

Linda Schwartz, Colon, Mich., began a one-year assignment as a day care center assistant in Robstown, Tex. A member of the Moorepark (Mich.) Mennonite Church, she is a 1969 graduate of Colon High School.

Second row: Miriam Lantz, Broadway, Va., has been assigned as a cook for one year at Frontier Boys Village, Colorado Springs, Colo. She is a member of the Zion Mennonite Church, Broadway, and a 1968 graduate of Eastern Mennonite High School, Harrisonburg.

From Souderton, Pa., Mary Lou Detweiler began a one-year term as a child care worker at Sunshine Children's Home in Maumee, Ohio. She is a member of the Line Lexington (Pa.) Mennonite Church.

Serving two years as a farm worker at Sullivan County Home at Claremont, N.H.,
Hokkaido International School: A Decade of Service

Ten years ago I came to Hokkaido International School for a three-year assignment to begin a school for 18 children in grades 1-5. Today those 18 students are in high schools and colleges in Japan and the United States, and now 60 children are enrolled here in grades 1-9.

An additional 170 students have or are currently studying at Hokkaido International, a school for English-speaking children. They have come from North America, Hong Kong, New Zealand, Australia, Korea, and Japan. In the past ten years, 15 other foreign teachers have shared in the education of these children. Six Japanese language teachers have also taught at H.I.S.

Two thirds of the students have been missionary children, with the remaining third representing families of the American consulate and culture center, Korean consulate, exchange professors and research men, and businessmen.

We have students with aspirations and abilities for attending Massachusetts Institute of Technology and other colleges. Other goals range from cowboys, airplane pilots, nurses and mothers to missionaries, United Nations employees and diplomats. Two of our former boys are budding pianists—one a high school freshman soon to embark on his first concert tour here in Japan, and the other a college freshman who gave his first complete recital last summer. Both started piano as young schoolboys here in Sapporo.

Many of our students are quite average in ability and intelligence—working hard and receiving good grades, or putting forth little effort and receiving poor grades. Children of missionaries and other overseas personnel compare to most other groups of students in many ways. Yet differences exist.

H.I.S. students have traveled widely and experience cultural differences which they have come to accept as normal. Often they are more at ease and knowledgeable in the culture of Japan than that of their native countries. Some feel and think “Japanese,” yet they don’t look the part. When they return to their own countries, they face identification problems.

I remember a group of primary students discussing who among them is American and who is Japanese. They concluded that those who spoke English were Americans and those who spoke Japanese were Japanese—only to realize then that most of them were bilingual. On what criterion does one decide?

Ten years has brought on changes in many areas. In that time Sapporo’s population has expanded from 400,000 to nearly one million residents. Ten years ago I was the only American Mennonite in Sapporo, and there was no Mennonite church here. A small group of Japanese Christians met in a home for weekly Bible study. A missionary came from Eastern Hokkaido once a month to share with us.

Today we have two Mennonite churches in Sapporo. During the past nine years the Eugene Blossers, Joe Richards, Marvin Yoders, James Wengers, Ronald Guengerichs, and the Wes Richards—in addition to Marjorie Yoder, Grace Martin, Dean Welty, and Ken Reed—have been a part of those fellowships for the time they served in Sapporo.

It has been rewarding to see friends come to a personal faith in Christ and experience fellowship and growth together. There are also those whose faith has not been strong enough to overcome temptations or others who cannot yet accept faith for themselves. These are continued concerns.

I have been granted a one-year leave of absence from H.I.S. beginning in August, at which time Mr. Paul T. Guengerich will be acting principal and teacher for our school while his wife Marjorie will teach grades 1 and 2. I’m sure the students and school community will profit from their services here and that the experience will be mutually beneficial. —Arletta Selzer

Evangelistic Thrust Called Key ‘73

The year 1973 has been selected as a target date for the enlistment of all evangelical churches in a concerted evangelistic thrust. Representatives of about 39 denominations have met several times to project plans for this occasion. The approach is for all interested denominations and Christian groups to pool their resources, information, and ideas to help one another in carrying out their task. Each denomination or group has the freedom to work at its task in its own way.

The Executive Secretary of Mennonite General Conference has represented our denomination on the Central Advisory Committee. An executive committee of 15 persons has been selected to give leadership to the coordinated effort. A wide spectrum of denominations has expressed interest in this occasion, and some exciting ideas have been emerging. This could well be one of the most significant Christian developments in our generation. It provides an unusual opportunity for the sharing of resources and exchange of ideas. Working in such concerted effort provides an occasion for evangelicals to stimulate and encourage one another in the central task of the church. Watch the pages of the Gospel Herald for additional information.
Largest Class Graduates at EMC

Eastern Mennonite College graduated 210 persons, the largest number in EMC's history, during its 52nd annual commencement activities on May 24. Paul E. Mininger, retiring president of Goshen (Ind.) College, delivered the commencement address in the outdoor exercises on the front lawn of the EMC campus.

Other commencement activities included a May 24 baccalaureate service at 10:00 a.m. followed by the President's Tea at 2:00-4:00 p.m.

Seniors elected Conrad G. Brunk, instructor in philosophy, to deliver the baccalaureate address during the morning service. Myron S. Augsburger, president of EMC, conferred degrees upon 195 four-year graduates, nine two-year graduates, and six seminary graduates.

Nurses to Serve Home and Abroad

The 36 nurses in Goshen College's class of 1970 will be serving at home and abroad next year in their first assignments after four years of college preparation to be professionals.

Over three-fourths of the graduates will be staff nurses in medium-size to large general hospitals, and said they will be serving in Goshen and Elkhart, Ind.; Fort Wayne, Ind.; St. Louis, Boston, Chicago, or Evanston next year.

A smaller number will be entering psychiatric nursing, and a couple said they will be public health nurses next year. At least three have accepted positions in hospitals in Appalachia, one in Indonesia, and one in Africa as a medical missionary.

One third of the class plan graduate study in nursing within three to five years.

Over one third of the class received scholarships, grants, financial awards, or prizes to help them for their nursing preparation.

Field Notes

Herald Press Tracts has received a request for the translation of 25 of its tracts, into Tamil, a language of South India. Mr. Chandran of the Good Samaritan Society has a score or more distributors who distribute gospel literature. Financial help is needed for the project. Anyone wishing to give a donation for this worthy project may send it to Herald Press Tracts, Scottsdale, Pa. 15683. A tax-deductible receipt will be given.

The 25th Annual CPS Reunion of men serving in Eastern camps and units is planned for Saturday evening and Sunday morning, Aug. 1, 2, on the campus of Eastern Mennonite College, Harrisonburg, Va. Pastors, Sunday school superintendents, and other interested people are encouraged to conclude the year's study on "The Story of God and His People" with a survey test. You will recall that we provided objective survey tests at the beginning of the course last July 1969. Now we have available another set of tests for use at the close of the study. In this way you can determine your progress. You will need a copy for each youth and adult in your Sunday school, plus officers, guests, and visitors who may want to participate. We will supply these to all who order them at approximate mailing costs, ($1.00 for each packet up to 50 tests; $2.00 per hundred; 25¢ for several copies only.) Order from: MCCF, Mennonite Building, Scottsdale, Pa. 15683.

Graduate Theological Union Library, 2451 Ridge Road, Berkeley, Calif. 94709, is interested in receiving copies of sermons, official pronouncements, resolutions, reports, etc., dealing with current issues such as the war in Southeast Asia, race relations, crime, etc. Send material in care of David E. Christian Life Conference with Myron Augsburger, June 26, at Ridgeview Mennonite Church, Gordonville, Pa., and June 27, 28, at Conestoga Valley High School.

New members by baptism: six at Kidron, Ohio; five at Rohrerstown, Pa.; two by baptism and one by confession of faith at Columbia, Pa.; one at Mountville, Pa.; eight by baptism and one by confession of faith at Habecker, Lancaster, Pa.; six at Millersville, Pa.; two by baptism and one by letter at Pleasant Valley, Harper, Kan.

Nelson E. Kaufman has accepted the invitation of the Albany Mennonite Church, Albany, Ore., to serve as interim pastor for one year, beginning Sept. 1, 1970. David W. Mann, the present pastor, will be taking a year of leave to study at the Goshen Biblical Seminary, Elkhart, Ind.

Kaufman served for many years as pastor and evangelist in Hannibal, Mo.; more recently was Secretary of Home Missions and Evangelism of the Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, Ind.; and for the past year has served as interim pastor for the Mennonite House of Friendship, Bronx, N.Y.

He plans to be married in late June to Mrs. Lois Keener, teacher and former missionary in Ethiopia and Kenya under the Eastern Mennonite Board. Mrs. Keener taught this past year at the Lancaster (Pa.) Mennonite High School.

Miss Martha Bender, a registered nurse who served in Biafra until its surrender to Federal Nigeria in January, has accepted an assignment in Haiti to finish her term of service with the Mennonite Central Committee.

Unable to secure a visa to return to Nigeria, she offered to serve with MCC wherever they had a need for nurses. In Haiti, Miss Bender will work at Grande Riviere du Nord Hospital. Grande Riviere is a 15-bed hospital for acutely ill patients. Its major emphasis centers around its daily clinics. In 1969 approximately 40,000 clinic consultations were held.

The estate of Jesse Bauman of Elmiria, Ont., recently bequeathed the sum of $4,769.43 to Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart. The Ontario Mennonite Mission Board also received a $4,794.40 gift from the Bauman estate.

Readers Say

Submissions to Readers Say column should comment on printed articles.

Just a word of appreciation for the article, "The True Light Now Shineth," by Shem Peachey. It is certainly relevant and encouraging to read an article like that during this crisis and critical hour of intolerance to and rejection of Anabaptist belief and practice, while facing "the fate of a gullible . . . Americanism, as the writer quoted. — Mrs. Melvin Beachy, Gallion, Ohio.

I must procrastinate no longer. Here is my word of appreciation to the editor for his editorial earlier this year entitled, "Wind of the Spirit, Blow." I believe there is a relationship between a sincere, genuine expression of this desire and its fulfillment.

I also commend the editor for including in the Gospel Herald the diet article, "Second Thoughts on the Baptism of the Holy Spirit," by John M. Miller. As one who had bemoaned the fact that not more of this emphasis was appearing in our literature I have felt constrained to express my word of appreciation. Each of the gospels plus the Book of Acts bear witness to the truth that Jesus is the Baptist to the Holy Spirit. In deed it is also necessary for us today to bear witness to this truth from our pulpit and through our literature. "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of God." — Howard S. Bauman, Akron, N.Y.

The Forgotten Formula

By William E. Hallman

Most church leaders recognize that what is urgently needed in the Christian church today is a Spirit-led and Spirit-filled revival. We hope for it, we yearn for it. Are we willing to work for it, to fulfill the conditions that will bring it? Many powerful sermons have been preached on 2 Chronicles 7:14, and they have been most helpful and usually appreciated.

Let's be honest and admit that the fine experience of religious renewal often does not last very long. Of course we are glad for every sign of spiritual growth and reconciliation between brethren. Meetings that stress the deeper life, the crucifixion of self, and the reconsecration of talents are usually well attended.

Cell groups, small prayer groups, and talk-it-over groups are now the power behind the pulpit. What pastor is not happy to find such interest in the deeper experiences of Christianity right in his own brotherhood? But these stirrings of the Spirit, valid and beneficial as they are usually grow to a certain pitch and then tend to lose their driving enthusiasm. This was true at the time of the first Christian revivalists, so it need not surprise us too much if such is still the case today.

We thoroughly enjoy a fine spiritual retreat, and we are especially happy if some of the key people of our congregations are present and are admittedly greatly helped. It really gives us preachers a new lease on life; it makes us really happy that the Lord has called us to be pastors and missionaries.

A Deeper Life Retreat

Jesus at one time took three of His most active personnel to a deeper life retreat. Why He did not take all twelve along we may never know. At least what happened there and immediately afterwards can teach us some lessons. This was truly a mountaintop experience. Read Matthew 17:1-21. There were visions, there was ecstacy, there were real appearances. There was deep fulfillment and ecstatic joy. There were revelations, there was worship, and an awful reverence. And then there were resolutions—a human reaction to the jittery fear that all this might not last.

And then the presence and the words of Jesus, "Get up and don't be frightened." These mountaintop experiences should prepare us to stand up and be counted, to be fearless witnesses of what we have seen and heard and experienced.

Down in the valley of the harsh realities of life it was not long until co-workers of these enthusiasts were up against a roadblock that resisted all their abilities. Jesus had given them power to heal the sick and to cast out demons, but here was a case that did not respond and there was great disappointment. What Jesus told His disciples was in effect that for the ordinary run-of-mill problems they were doing all right, but for the crucial problems, the satanic thrusts of the evil one, it was necessary for them to do their homework.

We can almost hear them gasp, "Well of course, we forgot the complete formula, a case like this can only be handled by prayer and fasting." Fasting was not something exactly new to them. Evidently they were so busy doing good that they neglected fasting. And then there were those wonderful company meals as they traveled along telling the good news and healing the sick. Fasting, well it does take time, sort of interrupts the busy schedule.

No, fasting was not new for the disciples. Jesus had wanted to restore the practice to its essential values when He counseled them: "When you fast" (Mt. 6:16-18). Of course that was two thousand years ago, we live in the beginning of the scary seventies. There is so much to do, and such a shortage of personnel, we have to plunge into the work, we have to keep the ball rolling. But, may it not be that we are bypassing the "forgotten formula" which would make our work more effective and relieve the strain from much of our activity?

When it comes right down to it we confess that thorough spiritual preparation is much more important than organization and committee work; yes, even more important than good expository outlines, flawless presentation, even more important than seminary training. But, why don't we act as though we believed this? We are always on the run trying to keep up with our briefcases, if they only were "brief" cases!

Would You Like to Give it a Try?

Let me share something of my own experience. Back in the early 1950s in Argentina, in the western district of the province of Buenos Aires we had had a number of evangelistic campaigns without any response — no conversions! This disturbed us. We began searching our hearts, we were really feeling low. The young national pastors of the district were deeply perplexed.

Then on a Monday morning the older of our national pastors got off the train, came to our house, and asked permission to go out to the campground at the edge of town to have a personal spiritual retreat. "Why of course, I'll be glad to take you out and give you the keys to any of the cottages you select, and then since the kitchen is not in operation I'll go out and get you at mealtime, and you can have your meals with us." "No, don't bother." My jaw dropped in surprise, and then hesitatingly he told me, "I'll be living only on liquids: mate, fruit juice, and water." "Well, ah, well, may I share some of the time with you?" During that week I had my first contact and my first experience with fasting.

Our fellowship out there under the eucalyptus trees was deep, fulfilling, and challenging. We placed the needs of the district in His wonderful and loving hands. Soon things began to happen. The following week we arranged for a few meetings for members only in the Trenque Lauquen Church, where I was pastor. The Spirit moved and there were consecrations and rededications, that, almost twenty years later, are still yielding fruit.

On the last evening of this short series of meetings for members only the unconverted girl friend of one of our young men came to the service. Toward the end of the meeting this young lady could keep silent no longer, she asked for permission to give her life completely to the Lord. No invitation had been given, no challenge of the usual evangelistic type, but the real Presence was so "real" that all resistance completely melted.

Regular Conversions

The news of this work of the Spirit spread eastward and the following week some of the national pastors and missionaries were invited up to Pehuajo by Bro. Amos Swartzentruber to have a time of fellowship and rededication. This was really a mountaintop experience. We shared our failings and hopes, our fears and our resolves, we fasted and prayed together. To my knowledge we have never since then had a series of evangelistic meetings but what the Lord has blessed with conversions! Praise His dear name!

Since then some of us have kept up the practice of fasting one day a week; not always, but especially before times of decision-making meetings and the carrying out of extension programs. The Lord has always given us more than we have deserved.

Because of a natural reticence to tell each other that we have fasted or that we expect to fast I have no statistical data on this subject.

This reticence of course is biblical. Jesus taught us how to go about it in Matthew 6. I do know that in the early years of the Mennonite Church in Argentina most of the missionaries had their regular weekly day for prayer and fasting. The Lord really blessed those early years.

When we moved north 500 miles to the Cordoba District in 1958 it was again prayer and fasting that unlocked doors, provided us with personnel for the district, and proved to be a real blessing to all concerned. When things have moved along beautifully there has been a tendency to neglect fasting, but always to the detriment to the work.

Some Blessings

Years ago I came across a list of 40 benefits and blessings that come from prayer with fasting. Through moving a number of times I have mislaid the list but I have a reduced list from a sermon in Spanish I'll translate back into English. Because of the above I am sorry I cannot give due credit to the author of the list.

1. Fasting prepares one to be a carrier of the power of God.
2. Fasting greatly increases the power of prayer.
3. Fasting secures what prayer alone does not get.
4. Fasting proves to God the seriousness of our praying.
5. Fasting helps to produce humility and greatly helps get rid of vanity.
6. Fasting is crucifixion of self and the flesh.
7. Fasting destroys unbelief and strengthens faith.
8. Fasting is getting victory over the "old nature" and subjugates the flesh.
9. Fasting puts to sleep normal appetites and lifts us up closer to God.
10. Fasting makes possible the impossible.
11. Fasting makes us to yank out the roots of some old stubborn bad habits.
12. Fasting enables us to yank out the roots of some old stubborn bad habits.

It is not easy to fast with a fair degree of regularity. It seems that Satan presents all sorts of excuses and hindrances. This is the best kind of proof we could want of its usefulness. Even when one begins the habit it is sometimes difficult to get into the spirit of prayer.

Many have found it to be real helpful if at the beginning of the private devotional one sings softly some fine invitation hymn such as, "Come, Gracious Spirit"; or some short chorus as, "Spirit of the Living God, Fall Afresh on Me." Sing softly in the attitude of prayer and really mean every word of it. This often takes a person into a real renewal experience with the Lord. Your time allotted for your devotional will seem short once you begin praying in the Spirit with fasting.

Today people of the protesting or revolutionary type use fasting as a form of propaganda for their cause and to publicize their demands and to show that their ideas are bigger than their natural physical needs. This is secularizing a Christian ceremony; but, is it not a challenge to us to really use what was ours all the time?

When our bodies become ill with some disease nature makes the body fast for its own good. Certain organs get a rest until nature and/or medicine are able to restore health. People who practice prayer and fasting find that they become healthier by giving their digestive organs a rest once a week. It is not only good, it is good for you, physically and spiritually.

Nurture Lookout

Ed Stoltzfus
and the "Gathered Life"

Your congregation may have the opportunity of participating in a weekend that could change the worship patterns of your church. Ed Stoltzfus, chairman of the Worship Committee of Mennonite General Conference, is giving a six-week block of time to a concentrated effort to help congregations to get a larger view of what God’s people should do when they gather and why they should do it.

The program will bring Ed and others into many areas of the church where clusters of congregational leaders will be brought together to discern the meaning of the "gathered life" for Christians. Where have our ideas about worship come from? Why do we do what we do? How does our gathering prepare us for scattering into the communities where we live and work? What can be learned from the Bible about worship? What did our Anabaptist forefathers believe about it? Can we pick up some of the contemporary ideas, as the church always has, and adapt them to meaningful worship of God for both the young and the older?

In most of our churches the arrangement of the benches, the "order" of service, and the design of our buildings is really a simplification of the Protestant model. It is not Anabaptist. It assumes that the church is where the Word of God is being preached. That is Lutheran. Consequently we have straight rows of benches. We have little feedback to the minister about what he thinks God is saying.

What would it take in the design of our services to experience, much more than what we have, a fresh revelation of God’s grace each Sunday with the opportunity for all participants to respond fully in the way they feel appropriate?

Ed Stoltzfus and area conference leaders will work in teams. They will serve in long weekend retreat type programs. A multifaceted approach will be used. It will be experience as much as talk. The new hymnal will be a basic part of the program. There will be lecture, discussion, various media, Bible study, depth fellowship, singing, discernment — Worship.

Mennonite General Conference through its MCCE offices will be working directly with contact persons in the conferences to develop the program. The project will begin in June. You will hear more shortly.

Found: One Lost Day

God’s Word never be called on the carpet by science, but when it was, recently, apparently the Scriptures helped set an aerospace computer straight.

In Greenbelt, Md., space scientists were checking the position of the sun, moon, and planets to discover where they would be a century or a millennium from now, according to President Harold Hill of the Curtis Engine Company in Baltimore.

"We have to know this so we don’t send a satellite up and have it bump into something later on in its orbits," he is quoted in Truth and News, published by the Huffman Church in Birmingham.

The computer measurement, properly programmed, scanned the centuries back and forth until suddenly a red signal brought it to a halt. Maintenance crews were called, but the computer was given a perfect bill of health. What could be wrong?

"We have found there is a day missing in the elapsed time," the scientists admitted. They tore their hair in utter frustration, the report goes, until one remembered a Bible story in Joshua. His associates found the story of the sun standing still "pretty ridiculous" and asked him to prove it. He did, by reading the tenth chapter of Book of Joshua.

"The sun stood still, and the moon stayed . . . and hasted not to go down about a whole day."

The computer went to work again, found the missing moments to be 23 hours and 20 minutes — not enough for an entire day. Forty minutes were still missing.

Another reading of Joshua 10:13 provided the answer: "... about (approximately) the space of a whole day." But what of the 40 minutes?

Again the Bible provided the clue in 2 Kings 20. Hezekiah, on his deathbed, was visited by the Prophet Isaiah who predicted his recovery. Hezekiah did not believe him and asked for a sign as proof: "It is nothing for the sun to go ahead 10 degrees, but let the shadow return backward 10 degrees." Isaiah spoke to the Lord and He brought the shadow 10 degrees backward. Ten degrees is exactly 40 minutes!

U.S. Deserter Preaches

A United States Army deserter preached the morning sermon at the Steinman Mennonite Church, Baden, Ont., on May 3. John Webb refused to become a first-class killer and in his native land he is now a hunted criminal. Had he taken up arms, led soldiers, and "brought back many dead" he could be a hero of renown.

The members of the congregation were simply asked to let John speak for himself, and this he did quite capably. To some it sounded like a faint echo of stories which appear in the chronicles of our forefathers.

After John graduated from a church-affiliated college in Tennessee he decided to enter seminary and train for the ministry. During this time he preached at a country church and also initiated a Youth Church in Florida. After a year at seminary he was married and decided to work full-time so that his wife, Carol, could get her degree.

Within weeks he was drafted, even though he continued to serve a small country church. Being almost 26 and serving a church he requested to be reclassified, but all to no avail. He was not aware of either Mennonites or conscientious objectors at this time.

Finding no recourse he enlisted and determined to work hard and diligently. He was soon first in his company and was promoted rapidly and put in charge of several hundred training soldiers. As he shouted orders and taught his men to kill, his heart rebelled within him. He spoke to chaplains but received no help. He was told that America comes first and God and Christ will follow. While engaging himself in personal Bible study and searching, he came to a deep conviction that as a follower of Christ he could not continue to participate in an institution which defies the sacredness of life and turns God's creatures into mechanical killers. During this time he heard about the conscientious objector position, but not being able to get any help from anyone including military leaders or chaplains he went AWOL (absent without official leave).

While away he gathered all the documents necessary for conscientious objector classification, even though he was denied help from his church and friends. He preached a sermon during this time and was rejected by his own people. Before he could appear with his papers he was turned in and arrested by the Military Police, and put into the stockade (military prison).

While in the stockade he spoke to the chaplain and began to preach and speak about the "love of Christ, and the peace of the New Testament," to his cell mates, and was soon known as the preacher. On one occasion he demanded that a cell mate whose wife had just had a baby boy, should be allowed to speak to her on the telephone. This led to his being placed in solitary confinement, put on a three day bread-and-water diet, chained to the bars, and beaten with a rubber hose, to see if "this will make him mad enough to kill."

During all this time he carried his conscientious objector papers and pleaded with most everyone he met, that they be processed, but all with no avail. One officer threw the Military Code of Justice, which declares a conscientious objector's right to be reclassified, into a corner. When a high official wrote to the army to see why John was not given conscientious objector status, he received a reply indicating that John had never requested it!

After gaining some freedom, for good behavior, he left the army base and he and his wife fled to Canada. He is now employed and a landed immigrant, wanting to be a minister and an evangelist in the Mennonite Church, if they will accept him.

John's vigor, sincerity, and Christian zeal impressed everyone who heard him. A phrase which illustrates his powerful punch and insight, "The church in America has put the U.S. flag in its front pocket, the Bible in its back pocket and is sitting on Jesus Christ," expresses his plea that Jesus must be freed to be Lord of the church. He is not shy about calling men to repentance and to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ. But even as our Anabaptist forefathers he adds that Jesus must be given lordship in every area of our lives. Christ and His teaching must be put ahead of flag or country, and above pride or personal ambition.

John believes that no one should be forced to be a conscientious objector and he would not condemn anyone who is not, but he declares that all Christians should be confronted with the challenge, and that none should be denied this right, as he was. At this time he is very disillusioned with the United States, "a system which is built on and nourished by war and bloodshed, containing a church which has simply become a priest who blesses the state and prays, 'God grant our men safety, and may they bring back many dead.'"

There are many draft dodgers and army deserters in Canada. Not all are John Webbs, not all are Christians, but most all are sadly misunderstood. Most have given up family and friends and homeland for what they believe. Let those who have done less be careful how they judge or condemn. Especially let us as Mennonites turn back to the stories of our forefathers, lest we betray and deny our ancestors as they come to us anew in twentieth-century situations.

Revolutionary Subordination

By David Helmuth

"Revolutionary subordination" — the phrase has stuck in my mind since I first heard it used during missionary orientation at Elkhart, Indiana, in 1968. In discussing his general dissatisfaction with the term "nonresistance," John H. Yoder suggested that the term "revolutionary subordination" might closer describe the life style of the disciple who wants to faithfully follow Christ's example and teaching in relation to suffering love.

My concern is shared with a great deal of hesitancy and apprehension because it lends itself quite easily to misunderstandings. I am especially sensitive to this possibility because of my strong belief in the equality of all men. I am convinced that Paul's words in Galatians 3:28 — "there is no such thing as Jew and Greek, slave and freeman, male and female; for you are all one person in Christ Jesus" — leave no room for racial prejudice and discrimination.

It also suggests that the church is one big family which interacting as equal in value before God and in relationships with one another. A classless society has always seemed to me to be a basic characteristic of the kingdom of God and therefore one ideal which faithful disciples should seek to attain in their life as a church.

But the realities of class, rank, and status within the confines of the Christian community remain nevertheless. As Christian brothers we declare our equality before God, but functionally we relate to each other in a way that clearly reflects the status, class, or rank which society at large has assigned to us. Many times we have proclaimed the marvel of God's grace which permits men and women of different educational, vocational, and cultural backgrounds to converge in a meaningful fellowship in Jesus Christ. We have undoubtedly all experienced moments when we have truly become a part of such a fellowship, but we have also felt that such a unity in Christ is far from reality in the fellowship of the church.

Recently I read the New Testament with this concern in mind. Jesus clearly exemplifies what suffering love and victorious subordination is all about. He willingly subordinated Himself to the outsourcing of man's sinful condition from the vantage point of strength. This indeed was the revolutionary aspect of His subordination and it points the way to our understanding of what He requires of His followers. He subordinated Himself as a defenseless lamb, but He died demonstrating the real soul-strength evidenced in the victory of His subordination. What Jesus said in the Sermon on the Mount about loving our enemies and turning the other cheek can only be considered when we take seriously the example of His suffering, redeeming love. Peter calls us to follow His example (1 Pet. 2:21).

Revolutionary Subordination in Human Relations

The really shaking part of my experience came when I arrived at the writings of Paul and Peter. How would they apply Jesus' principle of revolutionary subordination in the area of human relations? I had known about Paul's alleged antifeminine bias and "soft-on-slavery" motif. These tendencies bothered me, but I believe that God always has had to speak through imperfect instruments.

Somehow I had never noticed the number of places where Paul specifically speaks about the relationship between slaves and their masters. I listed Ephesians 6:5, 6; 1 Timothy 6:1-12; Titus 2:9, 10; Philemon 11-13, and 1 Corinthians 7:21-24 as the most obvious places where Paul speaks to this aspect of human relations.

While it is obviously not correct to consider the slavery of Paul's day a direct parallel with the institution of slavery in American history, nevertheless we can understand something of the relationship which he describes. In these passages Paul seems to say in brief: "Slaves — be good, honest, and obedient, especially if your master is a believer. Serve him joyfully and don't take advantage of him because you are brothers in Christ. If you have a chance to gain your freedom, take it, but if not, be content in your present condition."

Paul says little about how a Christian master should act, although what he does say is significant. He says that they should stop using threats. He exhorts Philemon to accept his slave Onesimus as a "dear brother." Why does he say so much to Christian slaves (the weaker party in the relationship) and so little to Christian masters? I think that if Paul accepted the institution of slavery and permitted Christians to have slaves he would have been most concerned how these Christian masters treated their slaves since they wielded the power and authority. And to top it off, Peter agrees with him and adds a few additional instructions for slaves (1 Pet. 2:18-25).

Concerning the man-woman relationship Paul insists that the women in Corinth continue to use their veils as symbols of their acceptance of the subordinate role in relation to their husbands. He says in effect: “In Christ you are one and equal, but while you live on this earth you should accept a functional subordination to your husband.” In Ephesians 5 he exhorts women to be subject to their husbands. He also follows with an exhortation to husbands to love their wives, but he speaks first to the “weaker” party. He reminds children in chapter six of their need to be subordinate to their parents and then he follows in the same train of thought to give instructions to slaves. (Peter also agrees with Paul about women; see 1 Peter 3:1.)

After reading Romans 12 I was quite happy with Paul. He reaffirmed clearly his solidarity with the teaching of Jesus when He instructs us to “love our enemies.” This is what I feel is really the heart of the gospel.

... In Government

But then Paul carries his subordination theme right into chapter 13 of Romans when he treats our relationship to government. How does revolutionary subordination apply here? He tells us what God’s purpose for government is but does not provide a basis for deciding when a government does not qualify as being “instituted by God.” He simply says that the existing authorities are instituted by God and that the Christian should respect and subordinate himself as long as it does not conflict with his subordination to Christ. He suggests subordination, but not idolatry.

Can I then be free to decide that if the whole institution of American government is rotten to the core, it must be destroyed? (1 Peter 2:11-25 also raises this problem.) Paul and Peter do not speak against a clear and prophetic witness to our government, but these two biblical witnesses do exhort us to follow the manner of our Lord who shook the Roman empire with the power of suffering love and revolutionary subordination. This soul-power took Him by way of the cross.

... In the Christian Community

How can suffering love and revolutionary subordination be applied within the Christian community? In our relationships to others we often find ourselves in either a functionally superior or inferior role. Paul seems to say that there is a way to accept these relationships and still be true brothers in Christ.

In applying the principle of revolutionary subordination, let’s consider the Christian employee who works for an employer who is his brother in Christ. Can the Christian employee from the soul-strength which comes from his relationship to Christ feel free to serve his Christian employer gladly and honestly without using this relationship as brothers in Christ as an advantage to demand a higher pay (assuming he is already paid a just wage)? Can the ties of brotherhood be strong enough that the employee will have confidence that his employer does not consider himself superior despite the fact that in this work relationship he does have a functionally superior role? On the other hand, can the Christian employer subordinate his temptation to threaten and order around his brother-employee? Can he subordinate his tendency to get all he can for the least pay from his employees and to separate himself socially so that this becomes the basis of class distinction?

I submit that some institutions and relationships are not redeemable. The institution of American slavery was one of them and the vestiges remaining in society today must go! (Excuse me, brother Paul!) I feel similarly about the institution of migrant labor. If an employer were truly Christian in his relation to the migrants, this would hardly be considered migrant labor. When urged by the Christian community to improve the living conditions of the migrants, the Christian employer insists that to do so would wreak financial havoc.

Let’s give more serious consideration to the concept of revolutionary subordination as we seek to find God’s way in human relations. The gospel of Jesus Christ is not a “whip” to be used to demand our rights, but is rather a soul-strength which enables us to freely and victoriously subordinate ourselves to others and thus follow the example of our Lord who gave His life as a defenseless lamb to call all men to repentance and thus make possible eternal life.

Proof of Love

“This is how we know what love is: Christ gave his life for us. We too, then, ought to give our lives for our brothers” (1 Jn. 3:16)

We agree that John’s statement is true. We gladly affirm that the supreme sacrifice — giving one’s life — is the supreme test and testimony of love.

We are quick to respond that we are willing to give our lives for our brothers. But we respond in the safety and security that we probably will not need to make the supreme sacrifice. Many would be willing to die a martyr’s death because martyrdom does carry a halo of the heroic and brings the applause of approval.

But are we willing to lay down our lives in daily life? Are we willing to lay down our selfish ambitions, our selfish ideals, our selfish interpretations for the sake of our brother? Do we love our brother enough to give up our pride, our ego, our self-image for his well-being?

God isn’t asking us to meet a martyr’s death. But He is expecting us to show our love to our brother and our fellowmen in the day-to-day experiences of life that no one notices nor applauds. This is the real test of our love. Our brother needs our love now, not after we pass on.

— Henry P. Yoder, Pastor of Plains Mennonite Church, Lansdale, Pa.
The Primary Need of the Church

Ed. note: In a March 24 editorial readers were asked to respond to the question, "What is the primary need of the church?" The response was excellent and came almost daily since then. The following are a number which were selected from the many. It is impossible to use all. Some came too late. Others were much too lengthy and some were unclear. I say "thank you" to all who responded. This and the next few issues of Gospel Herald will carry what some of you shared.

Theology of the Spirit

The primary need in the church today is for a more adequate theology of the Spirit. I am not suggesting that we merely copy the worship patterns of more "Pentecostal" groups, but that we lay aside our traditional thinking, acknowledge that there is such a thing as the baptism (of filling) of the Spirit, and open ourselves to what God would do in our midst. — Merle G. Stoltzfus, Spencerville, Ind.

Walk in the Spirit

Many of us are mighty good neighbors, mighty religious church members, and mighty lukewarm Christians. We need less rationalization of Christian priorities and more reaction to the prompting of the Spirit. Less conspiracy among brethren and more Bible-based conviction. More relevant teaching centered on the revealed Word will help us know what it is to walk in the Spirit, thereby becoming more sensitive to the total welfare of people. — Raymond L. Lapp, Kinzers, Pa.

New Testament Repentance

I am grateful for the many faithful Christians in our churches. One need is very clear — that is the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Before that can happen in its fullness, there must be confession and forsaking of sin and unbelief. God grades us by obedience rather than opinions. Confession needs to begin with the lowest, even up to the greatest (2 Chron. 7:14; 2 Cor. 6:17, 18; Rom. 13:1; 2 Tim. 4:2-7). — Ezra Brownsberger, Stouffville, Ont.

Homes with Conviction

Homes with true Bible believing parents, who know what they believe and are sincerely trying to live up to their convictions. Parents who realize that if a child does not understand the meaning of the word "no" by the age of two years, it is doubtful if he will ever learn.

Doesn’t the church today seem very much like a home where the children know that by a bit of manipulation they can sidetrack a "no"? — M. W. Hess, Lancaster, Pa.

Evaluate Our Mission

As the community of God’s people, a great need of the contemporary Christian church is to evaluate its mission. This may not be as simple as it first appears since the church has several missions and they are all necessary. However, if agreement could be reached on the relative importance of each, the church could be about its business more efficiently.

Three alternatives suggest themselves: (1) to strengthen the believer through fellowship with God and other believers (Acts 2:42); (2) to introduce the unsaved to a living Christ and bring them into the fellowship (Mk. 16:15), and (3) to demonstrate love and concern by doing good in the world (Lk. 11:30-37). These alternatives need to be considered and given priorities in the work of the church. — Millard P. Garrett, Carlisle, Pa.

Study of the Scripture

1. More sound Bible teaching rather than entertainment.
2. Book study of the Bible.
3. Messages that bring conviction.
4. So easy on tradition and strong on what the Bible says.

Return to Scriptures

Our primary need today is much the same as the early 1500s: returning to the New Testament, taking it literally, and putting the emphasis the same place as Christ and Paul. We need to preach Christ crucified, risen, ascended, and coming again, being identified with Him, walking in the Spirit, and giving no room for the flesh. We need to deny ourselves, take up our cross, and follow Christ at all cost. — Anna M. Buckwalter, Bronx, N.Y.

Supplied in Christ

1. We need to learn to know Him. Jesus gives us this secret in John 8:31, 32, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Our needs have all been met in Christ, physically, mentally, and spiritually (Mt. 8:17; 2 Thess. 5:23).

2. Our faith needs to be put into action. "Now faith is the assurance (the confirmation, the title-deed) of the things [we] hope for, being the proof of things [we] do not see and the conviction of their reality — faith perceiving as real fact what is not revealed to the senses." (The Amplified New Testament.) The young lad had a little lunch, and when Jesus gave thanks and broke it, it was multiplied according to the need (Phil. 4:19).

Too often we want to get before we will give. When Jesus sent out His disciples they went with nothing and lacked nothing (Lk. 22:35).

3. We need to claim the gift of the Holy Spirit in our lives to give us power and love and sound minds (2 Tim. 1:7).
— Mrs. Viola Ramer, Zurich, Ont.

Confession of Sin

Would that God enable us to confess our sins of criticism and gossip, bitterness, hatred and backbiting; jealousy and spiritual pride, sectarian prejudice and aloofness — in word, confess our lack of Christian love, the greatest of all sins, and together unite in earnest, travelling prayer, for a mighty sweeping revival! — Nelson Kanagy, Sarasota, Fla.

Live as Christ

The church desperately needs individuals living as Jesus taught and lived. We need the love for one another that Jesus commanded. This would cause us to put away questionable activities, fashions, etc., for the sake of those we love, rather than try to justify them by the shortcomings we see in others. If we would return Christ's love, as He hung on the cross, we would forget what the world thinks and live as if we're concerned about what God thinks.
— Vernon Ringenberg, El Paso, Ill.

Convinced Leadership

We need a clear statement of faith and convinced leadership to promote it. The pulpits, schools, and laity should then deem it imperative to promote this faith. Today some pulpit leadership is evangelical, some has a liberal trend, much is so indefinite that there is no message. The result is that many of the concerned laity become confused, while others remain complacently neutral. Where does the Mennonite Church stand concerning the Bible as the infallible Word of God? Many want to know. We can then govern ourselves accordingly. — Henry A. Martin, Kitchener, Ont.

Repentance

Confession and genuine repentance for all failure to be Christ's church today. New life is near as repentance. This always becomes vital witness. Small groups can best study local needs, and in prayer lay hold on God for His Holy Spirit's guidance in getting rid of excess baggage and in making needed changes, thus becoming the church locally. Such small working groups will constitute the church in the world. — Elam W. Stauffer, Lancaster, Pa.

Know Christ

The primary need is for the church to be sure it understands who Jesus Christ was and is. There is a large humanist movement that is favorable to Jesus of Nazareth, as a man, a teacher, a prophet, a revolutionary, or a great religious leader, but they will not accept Him as the Christ, the only begotten of the Father, born under supernatural circumstances, killed, resurrected, ascended to heaven, and that He will return again.

I am afraid for some people the boundary line between Christ and Antichrist is becoming rather hazy. — Gordon Erb, Zurich, Ont.

Self-Respect

I believe the primary need of the church today is self-respect. True self-respect has faith that each Christian has received salvation only on the basis of personal acceptance of Christ's atonement and that each is trying to follow God's plan for his life although we differ in many ways in our failures or methods of serving.

The church must trust its members if it desires to be effective in life and witness. Is this unscriptural? — Cletus Amstutz, Orrville, Ohio.

Openness

The church needs people who can live with the tensions of a changing order and still be committed to be an authentic person in Christ. The church group must be such that we can be who we are and still be accepted by each other — hence all phony posturing and superficial masks must give way to open acceptance of our imperfect humanity, realizing that only in Him do we find our true and complete humanity. — J. W. Weaver, Baltimore, Md.

Hellfire Preaching

I guess I'm from the old school, but I believe the primary need of the church today is to have some old-fashioned fire and brimstone preaching. People are in a deep, deep sleep and are far, far, too comfortable and contented. Soft spoken words do not move very many people. — Wayne Kaufman, Rockwell City, Iowa.

Real Christian Love

The primary need of the church today is the kind of love described in 1 Corinthians 13. The mission of the church is fruitless unless each individual is sensitive to his part in every personal relationship. The strength of self makes it difficult to love in every situation; only the power of the Holy Spirit can free one from the chains of selfishness. Forgiving, sharing love within the brotherhood is a prerequisite to any effective outreach. — Ernest S. Mast, Wilmington, Del.

Confession

The primary need of the church today is to acknowledge with Daniel (9:5, 14) "We have sinned . . . and not obeyed his voice," to confess with Ezra (9:10) "We have forsaken thy commandments." "Yet now there is hope" (Ezra 10:2).

We need not a new discovery but a rediscovery of God's will, found in the New Testament, which came into effect at Christ's death.

"Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord." — Grace D. Gehman, Bechtelsville, Pa.
Paper Flowers and Stethoscope

By Brennon Jones

Sitting at a desk cluttered with medical instruments and records, and one delicate paper flower held in a clear laboratory glass, the blonde nurse queried the old man in black pajamas, the mark of the rural classes in this Southeast Asian country.

"What is your problem, old man?" the nurse asked in Vietnamese.

With a thin weathered hand the patient pointed hesitantly inward toward his chest, saying nothing, but grimacing with his face.

"How long has your chest hurt?"
"Oh, a long time," responded the man.
"Open your shirt so I can examine you."

Slowly, the old-timer unbuttoned his ao baba, revealing the dark leathery chest of a man who had worked for many years beneath the hot tropical sun. The nurse moved her stethoscope around his chest. It was difficult to hear the dull thump of his heart. There were too many other Vietnamese, small children, pregnant mothers, and tired old people chattering around the table, waiting impatiently for their turn to see the girl.

The nurse turned the old Vietnamese around, and lifting his shirt, pressed the shiny instrument against his back just below the sharp protrusions of his shoulder blades. She examined his eyes, ears, and throat and checked his pulse.

After jotting a few notations on the man’s medical record, the young girl motioned the old man to an already crowded bench across the room. He would wait there, possibly a few minutes, but maybe an hour to see one of the doctors presently swamped with patients. The nurse watched the man move slowly across the room, then looking around, called out the name of the next of an endless stream of patients to be seen that day.

The nurse is Sue Chaperon, a soft-spoken girl from Portland, Oregon, and a Presbyterian who has come to South Vietnam out of concern for the tremendous medical needs in this war-ravaged country. The patient is only one of the 5,000 seen monthly at a daily clinic held at the jointly operated Mennonite Central Committee/Vietnam Christian Service and National Evangelical Church hospital-clinic at the coastal city of Nha Trang.

Sue is only one of 11 overseas staff at Nha Trang. Personnel includes two doctors, seven nurses, a lab technician, and a hospital coordinator. One Vietnamese nurse and four assistant nurses comprise the staff at this hospital-clinic which is equipped for major surgery, has a daily inpatient census of 55 persons, a separate 58-bed tuberculosis ward, and an assistant nurses’ training school.

Sue’s main assignment is in the clinic where she will examine as many as 150-200 patients each day. Working with a Vietnamese assistant nurse, she screens each patient, prescribing medication for those with minor ailments, and referring more serious cases to the two doctors who share the work. Sue is conscientious and sends more than half the patients she sees to the doctors for examination.

The patients come not only from the Nha Trang area. Some come from as far away as Dalat, sleeping on the hospital grounds at night in order to be close at hand when the clinic opens its doors at eight each morning. The majority of patients seen are Vietnamese, but a sizable number of Montagnard and Cham people have heard of the hospital’s reputation and come for treatment.

Nha Trang itself is a quiet town. The hospital clinic sits on the edge of the South China Sea, and has been relatively removed from signs of war in recent years. The patient load reflects this. Though the occasional shrapnel wound will be treated, most of Sue’s patients are suffering from natural infirmities. But this in itself is somewhat deceptive.

A major portion of patients examined are suffering from tuberculosis and respiratory diseases. Nutritional diseases, skin infections, and psychiatric disorders also rank high. All but the latter (which is in many cases directly relatable to the anxieties engendered by several decades of a war environment) are diseases which would be encountered far less if Vietnam had the time and the resources to direct itself toward the most basic of public health, education, and immunization programs. But the war intervenes, and diseases Sue Chaperon seldom treated in Portland, are routine to her in Nha Trang.

Hospital work in Vietnam does not lend itself to controlled hours and set assignments. When not in clinic, Sue will most likely be found in the wards, assisting another doctor or nurse with a case; talking with the Vietnamese girls who attend the assistant nurses’ school, and get their practical experience in the wards; or merely cheering up one of the many patients. Often at night, she will share the responsibility of arising in the early hours to attend to emergency cases.

Sue has an interest in art and handicraft. A water-colorist, she has tried to capture the Vietnamese life around her in her free time, but there is very little of that. She has, however, turned her skills to where they can be more useful. Walking through the TB wards one afternoon, she became particularly depressed at the lack of recreation available to the bedridden patients. With little to do, the time passes slowly until they have sufficiently recovered to leave the crowded wards. She bought crepe paper, and taking several patients aside, taught them how to make colorful paper flowers. The idea was a success, and now the dull wards have bloomed with color, and the majority of patients are busy passing the hours with handicraft. Most of the flowers were given as gifts or sold during the recent Tet holidays. Sue hopes that in the future a regular outlet might be formed so the patients can sell their handicraft on a routine basis.

Not all of Vietnam is a war zone, buttressed with bunkers, and resounding with the sounds of artillery and M-16s. But all of Vietnam is affected by the war, and Sue is just as concerned by the secondary medical problems indirectly accountable to the war. It is these cases which she treats daily, and which have convinced her that at this time her skills are needed far more in Nha Trang, South Vietnam, than Portland, Oregon.

The Incident

By Harold Duncan

I sat behind you last Sunday in church. It was a mistake. I will try to not repeat the mistake.

As you recall it was a long service, but an interesting one. Especially the first part. The second part of that morning's church activity was a bit hazy to me. I had a hard time concentrating on it. I kept thinking about what happened, wondering what you were thinking. I'm defensive. I want you to know that I was innocent. I guess I was a bit hurt. I felt that you misjudged me. I am not a dirty old man. I am a man, that I will admit. Am I old? In your eyes, I suppose, yes. I am forty-nine. And you? I suppose you are twenty-five, surely no more. But I am not a dirty old man. I had no evil thoughts. Yet I sensed from you that I was out of place. Perhaps it is strange, what I worried about then. For I worried about what you thought of me. You are my Christian sister, I am your Christian brother. And my thoughts about your thoughts spoiled the rest of the meeting for me, really blew it as far as I was concerned. How strange that a fleeting look on your face, a small gesture by you, should set in motion a train of thoughts that bothered me for the remainder of the worship hour, that plagues me yet today.

It was the morning of the special service. We had the input, the sermon, the panel was to react to that sermon. It was a good sermon, thought provoking, stimulating. I was with it all the way, not always agreeing, but following, relating, being involved. But soon after the panel assembled, I made my move, the wrong move. It was unintentional, God knows it. But it was a mistake. From then on I was wrestling with new thoughts, disturbing thoughts, conflicting, unrelated to the sermon or panel discussion. I am not trying to escape my part in the conflict. I moved, I saw.

Maybe I should blame the chorister, perhaps the moderator. One of them should have had the audience stand, stretch a bit. The old back isn't what it used to be. And so soon after the sermon was over, as the panel began to react, I leaned forward, put my elbows on my knees, my chin in my hands, and arched my back the other way for relief. And that was a mistake. Better that I should have kept the aching back.

When I made that switch of position, my head came forward a good two feet, two feet closer to the row just ahead, the row on which you sat, just to the left of me. I did not mean it, it was accidental, believe me.

When I leaned forward, you noted it, you turned your head slightly. I saw the expression of annoyance on your face, perhaps it was disgust, and at the same time you tugged your dress down toward your knees. Of course, you never made it, not enough material.

It all happened so quickly. I did not mean it as it seemed, I was not staring, being crude. And perhaps you did not mean to convey to me that feeling of disgust, but it was there, I saw it, sensed it clearly as you momentarily glanced sideways. Yes, it was there, sharp distaste. Evidently you considered my move forward improper. Sorry about that.

I do not want to make a mountain out of a molehill. But I was disturbed. I still am. It happens every place. No man can avoid the situation, whether he be at work, on the bus, the air terminal, and, I guess, even in church. Most of us men walk around, sit around with our eyes open. It's normal. I can control what I read. I do not read Playboy magazine. I do not pick it up. But people, men and women of flesh and blood, I cannot help but see. Man is a social creature. Frankly, ladies, I am embarrassed. I look away quickly. I do not look back. But if the lady notices, like you noticed in church the other day, then I appear out of place.

Perhaps I should have come to you immediately after the incident. But somehow I could not bring myself to do it. I could not hear myself saying, "I am sorry, sister, I was not looking at your legs, I was trying to relax my aching back." No, I find myself getting up tight when I think of such a bold explanation. Yet somehow I still need to find a way to offer you my apology, my explanation, my defense, my protest. I did disturb you, perhaps I spoiled the remainder of the meeting for you. I regret it. I must find a way to say, "Please forgive me."

And how can such misunderstandings be avoided in the future at our church? Without attempting to be funny, perhaps we should go back to times of old when the sisters sat on one side, the brethren on the other, the church aisle separating us. Perhaps you sisters should bring a sweater to church, use it below, instead of above.

There may be another way to avoid the situation. I found it in 1 Timothy 2:9.
History of the Mennonites and the Indian Settlement

For centuries, the Indians had the Paraguayan Chaco all to themselves. From the seventeenth to the early twentieth century, Spanish, Portuguese, and other adventurous settlers pushed boldly into almost every corner of South America, but the Chaco fiercely and successfully resisted this invasion. The Indians did not have to do much to keep the land for themselves; the Chaco did this for them. Defeated settlers called it the "Green Hell." The insects, slow-moving rivers which flooded vast areas whenever it rained, swamps, long hot summers, and a few warlike tribes of Indians combined forces to repel all but the most courageous settlers and missionaries.

Successive Waves of Mennonites

The Indians were able to continue in their nomadic ways till well into the twentieth century, living much as they had since the beginning of time. Then starting in 1927, four successive waves of Mennonite colonists from Europe, North America, and Russia moved into this unpromising land. The Chaco did its utmost to drive them out, and a number of these settlers did move to less demanding climates, but the majority stayed and demonstrated that this wild land could be tamed.

The main colonies in the Chaco today are Menno, Fernheim, and Neuland. The first Mennonites arrived in 1927 from Canada and began Menno Colony. In 1930, settlers arrived from Russia to establish Fernheim Colony. Neuland was begun in 1947 by settlers from Europe.

The settlers struggled valiantly, trying to make the Chaco yield a living for them, but they were concerned about more important matters and began missionary activities among the Indians.

Mission work with the Indians began soon after the arrival of the first settlers. Yalve Sanga, 25 miles south of Fernheim, became one of the centers of this work. An aggressive evangelistic effort was also begun in the Menno and Neuland colonies.

As the Indians worked with and for the Mennonites, they soon saw the contrast between the two cultures. This contributed to discontent over their low status and lack of material things. A sense of jealousy developed as the Indians saw the Mennonites with more than just one shirt or dress; with radios, bicycles, horses, and four- or five-room homes with tile floors — all possible because of "their labors."

Eventually some of the more ambitious Indians asked for their own land, and beginning in 1955, eventually were given five hectares of land. This was found to be a successful project. The missionaries tried to help any Christian family who wanted and needed help settle in a manner similar to that of the Mennonites. Those who were settled acted as a catalyst for other Indians who felt left behind, and shortly there was a widespread "hunger" for land. It soon became evident that the missions would not be able to carry on the work themselves. A board to administer the settlement with broader financial support became a necessity.

Indian Settlement Board

The result was the formation of the Indian Settlement Board with representatives from the missions, the colonies, the Indians, and the Mennonite Central Committee in September of 1961. At the January MCC annual meeting, it was decided that MCC would underwrite 75 percent of the Settlement Board's $80,000 three-year budget. The Indian Settlement Board was asked to be responsible for the Indian settlement in the vicinity of the three colonies — Fernheim, Menno, and Neuland.

In beginning the settlement program, it was estimated that there would be 5,000 Indians — 600 families — involved in the settlement program. Each of the three Mennonite colonies was to designate land for the settlement program in its colony. Each family was to be given five hectares of land which they were expected to clear for farming and the building of their own homes. Villages would be founded and cooperative pastures, warehouses, retail stores, and industries eventually established. Each family was given two horses or mules, sheep, goats, chickens, a wagon, plow, fencing, and seed for planting. Food would be distributed to the Indians until the homesteaders became self-sufficient.

Those who were not interested in working a farm for themselves continued to work for the Mennonites on their farms or in their industries.

Since Mennonite missionaries had settled some Indians previously, this plan was thought to be a workable one to follow. It was estimated that the cost for settling each family would be close to $300.

The two main tribes involved in the settlement program were the Chulupis and the Lenguas. The Lenguas Indians had always lived in the area which is occupied by the Mennonites. Their first colonization began in 1933 when the Mennonites began to hire them for common labor in the fields. Later, they were taught skills such as carpentry, brickmaking, and masonry. The children were also started in schools. In 1945, a pilot colonization among the Lenguas was started for 15 families when each was given a half hectare of land for his own. By 1953 the project showed promise, and at this time 20 more families were settled and given land. By 1960, a total of 76 families had been settled from this tribe.
The Chulupis migrated to the Mennonite colonies in 1946 and within 10 years had increased in population to such an extent that full-time missionaries were appointed to minister to the group and help settle them. They had had previous contact with the white man and found it easy to learn skills. A school, similar to that for the Lenguas, was established for the children.

Moved Out

After the establishment of the Indian Settlement Board, the settling of the Indians did not progress as quickly as they thought it should. In the fall of 1962 about 250 Indians marched out of the colonies carrying all of their possessions for land and better working conditions which had been offered to them by a Catholic priest near Mariscal Estigarribia. As it turned out, the priest had invited the Indians under false pretenses and when the Indians reached the destined area, they found no land, no work, and an unwillingness of the governmental officials and Catholic missionaries to feed them. Within a few months, all of those who had left the Mennonite colonies had returned.

The Indian Settlement Board became increasingly active in the years after it was established, and it became fully operational in January 1964. MCC sent Christopher Graber to Paraguay as a special adviser to the Chaco colonies to help develop a good administrative structure. He helped with such things as: overall objectives, a pattern of operations, determining specific activities, and establishing a budget for human and financial resources. It was also during this time that the board invited Jacob Loewen, an anthropologist from Tabor College, to make a six-month study of the Indians and their culture in Chaco. His study was to help the board become sensitive to customs and good Indian traits so they would be aware of these as they set up the program with the Indians. It was learned that some of the Indians didn’t want to settle precisely in the patterned way of life of the Mennonites. For example, these Indians shared what they had with others, even if they needed it themselves. It would have been unfortunate if such a commendable trait would not have been allowed to be carried over to their new way of living.

By 1967, the board decided not to settle any more Indians, but rather stabilize the present settlement. Presently there are 7,000 Indians settled and approximately another 1,000 living near the colony centers of Filadelfia, Loma Plata, and New Halbstadt. The Executive Committee organized in 1968 has been responsible for expanded efforts for the Indian settlement. At present, Robert Unruh coordinates the agricultural development of the Indian colonies. Hans Epp coordinates the medical and public health work, and E. Eitzen is responsible for education in the colonies.

It is obvious that the Indian Settlement Program is growing and will continue to be in need of assistance from outside sources and agencies. It is also evident that our Mennonite brethren in Paraguay are placing top priority on this program and are supporting it generously. There are approximately 40 to 50 Mennonite workers serving full-time in this program. — MCC News Release

"As I See It"

Would you believe that a man’s view of eschatology would influence his view of social action; how we speak to the government; the role of the church (kingdom) in the present world scene?

Honest sincere brethren in our church — dedicated Anabaptist-Mennonite ministers and laymen, come out at different places because they have different views of the kingdom and therefore different views of eschatology.

As I see it — we believe in the same Christ and agree on the fundamentals of the faith. But we interpret the Bible differently and theologically fall into the two major views of biblical interpretation known as “amillennial” and “premillennial.” Several decades ago there were sharp differences among us and a conference was held to discuss these differing views of the kingdom and eschatology. Since that time not much is being said about these major differences.

Now this old controversy has taken on a new face. We are pursuing this old issue on new battle lines! We do it in our discussions and judgments about various issues such as —

- How we speak to the government
- Our involvement in social issues
- Our communication with youth
- Attitudes toward the state and war
- How we see the Middle East crises
- Curriculum materials
- Influences of the “Far-Right” and “Far-Left.”

Some brethren may tend to identify closely with other church leaders who are very conservative but at the same time very militaristic and seem to be on the “Far-Right.” They tend to have one view of the kingdom and eschatology. This gives them one frame of reference as they look at some of the current social and world issues I have listed.

Some other brethren may tend to identify closely with church leaders who are very progressive and are peace-minded instead of militaristic and seem to be on the “Far-Left.” They tend to have another view of the kingdom and eschatology. This gives them a different frame of reference as they look at some of the current social and world issues.

Let’s not fight the old “pre” and “a” millennial controversy all over again on different current issues that become battle lines!

If we believe that sincere, honest Christians can through diligent study see God’s kingdom differently, we will not need to “polarize or divide” over the issues. Let’s remove any haze that we may have on our theological glasses. And let’s be sensitive to the theological roots that create different understandings as to how we see and work with the concerns and issues of the day.

This is how I see it! — Norman Derstine, Harrisonburg, Va.

All Are Witnesses,
Some Evangelists

By Virgil J. Brenneman

Earlier in my ministry I taught many classes in personal evangelism. These proved to be exciting as many of us shared personal experiences in confronting others with the way of Christ. We intensified in each other the desire to become more articulate about our faith. However, an undefined feeling of discouragement and even disillusionment gradually seemed to modify our entusiasms. I see now that it was because we wrongly assumed that every Christian should be a personal evangelist.

The Bible does teach that all Christians are witnesses but it does not say that God gives all of them the gift to be evangelists. Through my wrong assumptions I unwittingly became an instrument of discouragement to otherwise fine Christians to whom God had given other gifts.

The Bible is clear that the Holy Spirit empowers all Christians to be effective witnesses. The term witness is, however, an inclusive term. It covers the personal evangelist as well as Christians with other gifts. Being an evangelist is one among many Holy Spirit gifts. Witness is not only an event of words, it is also a Christian life-style, the quality and love of the church community, deeds of compassion, the sharing of self, love between the brethren, and Christian unity. Jesus said that it is because of these things that the world will know we are His disciples and be convinced that God has sent Him (Jn. 13:35; 17:36).

Another mistake I made in trying to reshape everyone into a personal evangelist is that of minimizing the other Holy Spirit gifts. It was as if the mouths were saying to the hands and feet, “We have no need of you” (1 Cor. 12:12). Our personal evangelists still need to be trained. If we are honest, those with other gifts — helpers, administrators, teachers, healers — should also have classes to develop their gifts (Eph. 4:11-13). Instead of rating effective personal evangelists above compassionate dispensers of cups of cold water, these should support and complement each other.

We may make a similar mistake in not utilizing and channeling the trained skills of students and professionals in the congregation. All too often the local church is geared only to utilize the skills of teaching, music, and speaking. Communication skills rate high priority in the mission of the church because of the nature of the message that charges its witness, service, and compassions.

But what if we only use the student or the doctor who can teach Sunday school or summer Bible school classes, or the one who can lead singing or participate in a musical group? Those graduating from college and university with highly specialized skills are prepared and committed to perform a ministry or service which few local churches may be geared to administer. Granted, there are openings for some special skills under the mission and service agencies of the church. But this does not absolve us from the responsibility of exploring all possible opportunities. Who knows how many skills or Holy Spirit gifts available to the church remain dormant simply because we operate on one level of activity?

Between two and three million Indians lived in the Brazilian rain forests at the turn of this century. Now there are no more than 100,000 and their numbers continue to dwindle.

Ironically, the means used to bring the Indian population close to extinction were two legal measures originally designed to protect Brazil’s aborigines. The first was the organization in 1910 of the Indian Protection Service, the SPI. The second was an article in the 1934 Brazilian constitution guaranteeing to the Indians use and ownership of the areas where they lived.

The 1934 law specified that the jungle land in the Mato Grasso and Amazon regions belonged to the Indians living there until they abandoned it. Once Indian-free, the land would belong to the government, which could then sell it to private individuals. This clause was too tempting to businesses with a hungry eye on the jungle’s treasures of rubber, iron ore, petroleum, coal, gold, diamonds, and uranium. Businessmen, whose connections in many cases extended into the highest administrative levels of large companies, hired bands of gangsters to make the jungles Indian-free.

Their methods were cruel and imaginative. Indians were massacred with rifles and machetes; dynamite sticks were dropped from the air on their villages; phony “health officials” performed “malaria immunization” with live small-pox virus. And the Indian Protection Service? For an appropriate share of the take, it was willing to look the other way, or even take part in the raids.

When talk of genocide became too widespread, an investigatory commission was set up. After combing about 6,000 square miles of jungle two years ago, it ascertained that at least 40,000 Indians had succumbed to actions tolerated by the SPI. Entire Indian tribes had been eradicated.

World opinion has been aroused, but it may be too late to save the Indians from eventual extinction, or even to bring their murderers — the oil prospectors, the land speculators, the uranium seekers — to justice. Legal proceedings have been instituted against a few individuals, but virtually nothing has been undertaken against the large business concerns. The law of the jungle is mightier than the justice of Brazil.

Each member of the family needs to be involved in the church’s mission. Mission education needs to begin in the early years of childhood. Youth needs to consider the mission challenge. All age groups need to think together and pray about the Spirit’s leading in the mission program.

Mission 70 is planned to capture the interest and attention of each member of the family. There are three days of activities planned for all children through grade eight. Special activities will involve the interests and enthusiasm of youth. The public meetings will include features aimed at persons of every age. Bring the family to Mission 70 July 2, 3, 4.
The "segregated academies" springing up in the South in efforts to circumvent integrated education are busying more students farther than is true of public schools, according to a research report released by the Southern Regional Council (SRC).

In light of the national controversy over busing for racial balance and since "segregated academies" have mushroomed in Southern states, the long-established human relations council set out to survey comparative busing practices.

Researchers studied 10 segregated schools in eight states, chosen on the basis of size and location. Findings showed that "segregated academies" bus an average of 62 percent of their students an average of 17.7 miles each way per day.

For the eight states, public schools bus 49.5 percent an average of 10.1 miles each way per day, said the Southern Regional Council.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints gained 74 percent in membership in the past decade and now has an estimated membership of 2,815,000. The Mormon Church, organized in 1830 with six members took 117 years to reach a million and 16 more years to reach the second million. Within the past decade the church has scored its greatest world expansion. Today there are 12,000 missionaries serving for two years at their own expense in most of the free world.

"Evangelical adults have talked about revival now for more than a century," said Dr. David J. McKenna in the first evening session of the NAE convention which focused on youth.

In a method and a manner that defies analysis, the tongues of flame in the twentieth century came to rest upon heads that were neither grey, nor bald, nor knotted," continued the president of Seattle Pacific College. "... Campus after campus has seen a spiritual demonstration that is disruptive, but not disorderly ... In other words, God has chosen to light the fires of spiritual revolution on the energy of youth. This is the same energy that we both fear and admire."

At present growth rates, Africa will have more Christians by the year 2000 than any other continent, it was predicted at a National Congress on Evangelism held in the Congo recently.

The sunny beaches of South Florida may be a vacation paradise for the affluent, but not for the not-so-rich retirees clustered there for whom life is fast becoming a nightmare.

Directors of church- or synagogue-related retirement facilities estimate that at least 20,000 and perhaps as many as 50,000 retirees are in serious trouble. They are reported to be "barely existing" and "suffering."

Recent statistics show that Florida has more people over age 65 than any other state. Nearly one quarter of the population of South Florida is reportedly over 65. Three quarters of them have no close family ties and half are either chronically or seriously ill.

The Minneapolis City Council has passed the collection plate to the city's churches and other owners of tax-exempt property for donations in lieu of taxes to cover the cost of city services.

Letters mailed to 421 owners of tax-exempt property (churches, private schools, hospitals, charitable institutions, and cemeteries) asked contributions of one-half to one percent of the market value.

Owners of "non-homestead" taxable property paid taxes equal to about 4.5 percent of the market value in 1970, the letter explained.

"A percentage of market value can be used by organizations in determining the amount of a contribution," the letter said. "We believe that one-half to one percent of the market value is not an unreasonable guideline for the determination."

In a "State of the Church" message to the opening session of the special United Methodist General Conference, the Council of Bishops said the war in Vietnam is a "fiasco" which cannot be justified any longer.

The Episcopal message was prepared by the 90-member council of bishops during their annual meeting which met prior to the General Conference (legislating unit).

Earlier, Bishop Gerald Kennedy of Los Angeles told bishops and 500 laity gathered for a dinner that "there is nothing in American history which justifies the war in Vietnam. It is wrong and I wish the Methodist Church would come right out and say so."

The bishop declared that "President Nixon can say all he wants to about peace with honor, but when a war is as wrong as this one, there is no honor except to say you made a mistake and get out."

The church, he added, must have the courage to speak out against wrongs.

A Minneapolis congregation was told that a college president today can anticipate no more than five or six years in office "before the forces of opposition coalesce sufficiently to make his position untenable."

Speaking at Hennepin Avenue United Methodist Church, Dr. Richard P. Bailey of Hamline University, St. Paul, said, "It is sobering to me after only two years at Hamline that almost half of my allotted span has been used up." Hamline is a United Methodist school.

Dr. Bailey said he could still "smile," although he is surrounded by gloom and doom, threatened by the antics of today's young people and burdened by a sizable development program at a time when the economy is down and shaky.

He said he had "an unshakable confidence that it will all be well—not the same as it has always been and in some ways not as comfortable as it has always been, but that all will be well."

"You may decide that I don't understand the situation. I receive anonymous letters and phone calls from shy critics who question not only my understanding but also my morality and sanity."

"My joy and hope come from a simple formula which sustains my faith," he said. "For me personally, for the students and faculty on the Hamline campus, and hopefully for you I submit this formula: Learn, love, light a candle, and laugh."

Fundamental parallels between Nazi Germany and contemporary America exist, a Swiss theologian told the annual meeting of the U.S. Conference of the World Council of Churches.

Dr. Walter Hollenweger cited these similarities: antagonism between Christian traditionalists and Christian activists, industrial and military hierarchies made up of "saved Christians" who serve rather than destroy evil, and the persecution of a racial minority.

He also listed some distinct differences. "It goes without saying that no American President has been like the madman Hitler," said Dr. Hollenweger.

The greatest difference he found, however, was that the U.S. communications media have not been silenced and turned into instruments of propaganda.

"Hitler could never have gotten away with extermination camps had they been shown nationwide on television as the war in Vietnam has been," he said. Americans want the media to tell the truth even if the truth hurts.
We Visited the Church in the Soviet Union

The touring Wisconsin Presbyterian minister we met in Tallinn, Estonia, USSR, was incredulous when told there were Baptists in town, let alone Christians. He had visited the famous 13th-century Olevisti Cathedral, but apparently thought it was a monument to a dead past rather than the meetinghouse of a thriving congregation of 1,400 members, with two pastors, 25 preachers, and five choirs.

Nor is Olevisti the only congregation in Tallinn, a city of 350,000. There is a large Lutheran church and a large Russian Orthodox church in the old city, several large Lutheran churches, a Methodist church, and several other Baptist churches in the new city. On Good Friday morning, the Lutheran Archbishop Toomik estimated there were 10,000 people worshiping in his church.

The ignorance of this Presbyterian minister is no accident. The American stereotype of the USSR sees that great nation, ruled by the Communist Party, to be one vast religious wasteland. The once-thriving churches, according to the stereotype, have been destroyed in a modern crusade against the faithful. Western Christians in accepting the stereotype have not only been guilty of gross ignorance but also reveal the shallowness of their own beliefs. Did not Jesus promise that the "powers of death shall not prevail against" His church? Why shouldn't the church in the Soviet Union claim such a promise?

This incident illustrates why Christians from North America and other countries need to visit their brethren in Russia. There are powers which want us to believe that the church in Russia was killed or that it has capitulated. We need to visit the Soviet Union to fellowship with the faithful, to encourage them in the faith, and then tell our brethren and neighbors that Jesus lives in Soviet Russia.

Many Christians have been traveling to Russia since World War II. Many congregations in North America have welcomed Christians from the USSR in their midst. Part of this pattern have been the Mennonite and Baptist exchange visits on an almost annual basis since 1964. This year's delegation was made up of seven Baptists and three Mennonites. The Mennonite participants were David P. Neufeld of Virgil, Ont., John A. Toews of Vancouver, B.C., and the writer of this article. Baptist representatives came from the Baptist World Alliance, American Baptist Convention, Southern Baptist Convention, and Baptist Federation of Canada.

Christianity in the Soviet Union

One way of grasping the significance of the church in Russia is to see it at work in several major centers.

It is impossible to visit Russia without seeing the great Christian monuments. Inside the Kremlin itself are several large cathedrals. Alongside the new showcase Hotel Russia are several more. Indeed, no one sees Russia unless he (1) visits the great cathedrals and (2) studies the religious art found in museums. For instance, Zagorsk, headquarters of the Orthodox Church, is a compound of church buildings erected between the 15th and 19th centuries and the seminary for Orthodox priests.

Today there are an estimated 30 million Orthodox believers in the Soviet Union. They are scattered throughout the entire land. Many villages are brightened by the blue steeple. Russia became Orthodox in AD 988 when Prince Vladimir of Kiev made this the official religion of the realm. This state religion continued until 1918, except for the several centuries of Mongol rule. Kiev, like Zagorsk, continues to be an important center of the Orthodox faith. On a hill high above the Dnieper, the monument to Prince Vladimir stands. In the cathedral carrying his name, worshipers attend daily mass. In every city there are large cathedrals in use and usually several which have become museums, like the immense St. Isaac's in Leningrad which once held 15,000 worshipers.

The rector of the seminary at Zagorsk told us that there are two additional seminaries now operated by the church. His seminary has an enrollment of 250 and operates a correspondence school of 500 enrollees also preparing to serve as priests.

As often happens, churches become establishments which no longer satisfy the needs of the parishioners, or they lose the enthusiasm of earlier times. Russian Orthodoxy was no exception. There were repeated reform movements. The largest of these were the Old Believers, a 17th-century protest to the increasing state control of the church. Proscribed and often bitterly persecuted until 1905, the Old Believers continue to propagate their ancient convictions. We visited their church in Riga which contains one of Russia's richest collections of religious icons.

Churches with Western Roots

On the border lands of Russia, Roman Catholicism grew. Today there are only a few Roman Catholics in the USSR (except in Lithuania), but churches that grew in the bosom of Rome abound. The largest of these is the Lutheran Church. In both Latvia and Estonia, the state church before 1940 was Lutheran. Many of the millions (today about three) of Germans inside Russia have Lutheran backgrounds, although the church is no longer very active. Likewise in the Baltic countries, as has happened in Western Europe, there has been a vast falling away from the church. Nonetheless, the Lutheran Church numbers well over 100,000 members in Latvia and Estonia. and continues to carry on an aggressive program. The archbishops in Riga and Tallinn are men who would be a credit to the church anywhere.

The revival movements in Lutheranism were first the Pietists of the 18th century. It was a real treat to preach in the Olevist Cathedral where Count Zinzendorf ministered over two centuries ago. The Herrnhuters, as the Pietists were called, rejoined the Lutheran Church several decades ago. The strength of this lay movement has helped to supply the pulpits as the seminary-trained pastors no longer exist.

In the mid-19th century another reform movement swept Latvia and Estonia which gave rise to the Baptist churches in both provinces. These churches continue to thrive. There are about 7,000 members in Latvia and 8,000 in Estonia. A member of our tour and offtimes translator, Adolfs Klaupiks, is a former Latvian Baptist pastor now living in the United States. He has written the history of the movement in that country.

One other Western-rooted church in the Soviet Union I will only mention. That is the Mennonite Church. Mennonite readers are aware of this part of our brotherhood which has often been described. Suffice it to say there are about 40,000 Mennonite believers in the Soviet Union. We met these brethren in Estonia and Latvia (where small groups are now living) and talked much with two pastors, Jacob Fast of Novosibirsk and Victor Krieger of Moscow. Both these pastors are members of the Mennonite Brethren brotherhood, which includes about half of the total Mennonite population. The Mennonite Brethren are members of the Baptist Union in the USSR.

The Russian Baptists

The largest Protestant group in the Soviet Union today are the churches affiliated with the All Union Council of Evangelical Christians Baptists (created 1944), called Baptists for short. The largest component of this union is Baptist and the major characteristics are Baptist as well. Nevertheless, this is a union of various strands which also include Evangelical Christians, Pentecostals, and Mennonite Brethren.

Baptists in Russia developed first as a reform movement within the Orthodox environment and then related to Baptist influences from Germany and England. This youthful movement is slightly more than 100 years old. In 1912 only numbering 61,500, the movement now numbers well over 500,000, although exact figures are unknown.

We visited Baptist congregations in Moscow, Kiev, Riga, Tallinn, Leningrad, and Minsk. There were unique flavors in each city but also a very clear communality of faith. Only since 1945 have the Baptists in Riga and Tallinn actively participated with their Russian Brethren.

Already the cathedral in Tallinn has been mentioned. Similarly, in nearly all the other cities Baptists worship in buildings once occupied by other faiths. The Central Baptist Church in Kiev meets in the Seventh-Day Adventist building, in Leningrad and Riga, a former Orthodox church is used; in Moscow a former Reformed church building. The other buildings we visited in Kiev and Minsk were reconstructed dwellings. Only in Riga and Tallinn did we worship in buildings that were built by Baptists for meetinghouses decades ago.

The worship services varied little. There was the usual singing, preaching, and praying. But each time, each place there was a unique flavor. The Ukrainians are more expressive in singing, more communal in prayers. The people in Minsk and Leningrad most diligent in practicing the kiss of peace. The preaching everywhere sticks close to the biblical texts and paraphrases of the same. In Estonia the services were 90 minutes long. Most other places they lasted a minimum of two hours and frequently three hours. Short sermons were called “American” by one pastor.

Every service we attended was jammed full. Congregations were invariably much larger than the buildings could accommodate. The 5,000 members in Moscow meet in an auditorium that seats less than 1,000 but 1,500 more stood in the aisles and met in rooms throughout the building for communion, on Sunday morning, Apr. 5. At the 1:00 p.m. service and the 6:00 p.m. service people were also standing. Likewise, at every other service in each city people stood patiently for two- and three-hour services. Often we started the evening services fifteen minutes early since the building was already full. Most congregations have five or six services per week. In between are choir practices. In some areas there are well-developed small groups meeting in houses.

There are several readily observable secrets to the success of the Baptist movement. It is, first of all, a lay movement. The professionalism so often associated with the church in the West is absent. This means the pastors and leadership of the church are close to the people in experience and language. Only a handful of the pastors (outside the Baltics) have anything resembling a seminary training. This does not mean, however, an uneducated clergy. We talked with pastors who were former engineers, journalists, factory managers, and airplane pilots. Now they have forsaken one career to another to become shepherds of the flock.

Another reason for the success of this church is the fact that it is thoroughly Russian. The successful growing church is one that feels at home in its cultural surroundings, yet transcends this milieu in faithfulness to its Lord. This perennial tension is real in the Soviet Union. Both the language of the pulpit and the style of music express a distinct national flavor. Indeed the church is so close to its environment that the provincial languages are used in many places.

A third reason why this church has been so creative is that it has been tried in the fires of hostility and persecution. At their beginning Baptists were hardly tolerated by the Orthodox and czarist establishment. During the excesses of Stalin’s regime the church likewise suffered enormously. These experiences have helped to purify the church and give it unusual strength of character for carrying out its mission today.

Finally, this church is disciplined. Believers are rarely baptized before the age of 18 so that they are aware of the commitments they make. Members who fall into disrepute are censored and excommunicated. Indeed, so rigidly are the standards maintained that in some districts there are as many unbaptized adherents as baptized members.

These are some of the things we observed and felt visiting the brethren and sisters in the Soviet Union. We learned much from this experience on how to be the church in another environment, of what it means to be a pilgrim people. This church, like the church everywhere, has its imperfections. Like other churches, the Russian church is tempted to rest on its achievements and forsake the great struggles for the faith. This church has many needs, but perhaps the greatest is a sense of feeling a part of the worldwide movement begun on the green hill long ago and in the process of moving toward the eventual summing up of all things in Jesus Christ. — John A. Lapp, Executive Secretary, MCC Peace Section.

GC Names Two Merit Scholars

Goshen College is sponsoring two four-year Merit Scholars in its first year of special recognition of National Merit finalists. Awarded the scholarships are Judy K. Snyder, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Snyder, of R. 5, Goshen, Ind., and Jerold A. Meyer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Meyer, of 4187 Dawn Cliff Drive, of Brooklyn, Ohio.

The two scholars are among seven National Merit finalists who have chosen Goshen College and have been admitted for the 1970-71 school year.

National Merit finalists were chosen on the basis of performance on examinations, personal references, and record of extra-curricular activities, special achievements, and interests, and academic and other honors.

More Than a New Book — A New Concept

Just off the press is a beautiful, new, and different Bible story book for children, God Keeps His Promise by Cornelia Lehn. It is published jointly by Herald Press of Scottsdale, Pa., and Faith and Life Press of Newton, Kan. The book contains seventy Bible stories prepared for reading to four- and five-year-olds. The author of these stories, Cornelia Lehn, has been a staff member of the Commission on Education of the General Conference Mennonite Church since 1959. She studied Christian education at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Elkhart, Ind., and holds an MA in journalism from the University of Iowa. For many years Miss Lehn was editor of Junior Messenger, a children's story paper.

God Keeps His Promise is a handsome book to look at and a pleasure to look through. The most significant aspect about it, not immediately visible to the reader, is the philosophy behind the selection and development of the 70 stories. In this, God Keeps His Promise makes a radical departure from the line of Bible story books now on the market. Underlying the writing of this book is a new look at the relation of the growing child to the continuing story of God and His people.

Previously, and especially since the mid-forties, prominent child educators were of the opinion that small children should be protected from such scary details as Moses left in the bulrushes or Jonah in the fish (not to mention Abraham's sacrifice of Isaac), and in their drive for light and sweetness in the child's early education, they ruled out most Bible stories. This theory has now been debunked as it was discovered that if children are to be stirred imaginatively, they will not be helped by safe stories that bore them. Unfortunately, a mass of "de-caffinated" versions are still around. Another popular approach has been to start out with a series of virtues that ought to be indoctrinated in a child — honesty, faithfulness, obedience, kindness, unselshfulness, etc. — and then cut through the Bible in search for passages to back up these principles. This approach often distorts or neglects the real meaning of the passage used. It certainly does not give the child a complete, continuous view of the story of God and His people.

God Keeps His Promise starts out from neither of those views. The posture of its approach, derived at after several years of careful study, is to begin with the believers' fellowship gathered around the Word and the child is found in this circle. The community relates to the Word and to the child, and rehearses with the child the acts of God that form the basis for their community.

The aim is to root the child in this heritage and allow God to speak as He will through relation and narration to the child. This view hopefully keeps us from violating either the child or the gospel. It will help the child sense his place in the real stream of history, the history of God's covenant with man.

With this philosophy in mind the seventy stories were carefully selected by a Preschool Counsel and Reference Committee of three major North American Mennonite groups. In the selection of stories the committee attempted to give an overview of the whole Bible and show the sweep of God's redemptive activity throughout man's history, and at the same time stay within the child's ability to understand. This approach also suggests that confidence in the Word, in relationships, and in the Holy Spirit frees us to expect learnings that can scarcely be anticipated and much less programmed.

In developing each story Cornelia Lehn tried to retain the power and emotion of the Scripture passage and to simplify it without distorting the reality either of God's acts or the affairs of men. She made no attempt to moralize and editorialize, or to tack on applications. She lets the stories speak for themselves. But in doing just that Miss Lehn shows her great artistry in writing and her way of communicating with children. She really knows how to convey feelings and how to construct beautiful word-sound pictures that will intrigue the adult reader, as well as the child being read to. These word pictures often are strengthened by the typographical treatment of that passage. While Cornelia Lehn was still writing the stories, a number of artists were asked to send preliminary illustrations for one or more of the stories. Their submissions in the form of originals or color slides were examined by qualified persons at Newton and Scottsdale who came to the near-unanimous choice of Beatrice Darwin to do the work. In time Mrs. Darwin, a professional illustrator from Danville, Calif., produced eighty beautiful illustrations, 69 of which are in full color. While she was working on them, she wrote: "I've never been so enthralled with a book job before," and the results certainly bear evidence of this enthusiasm. There is happiness in Paradise, and action around the ark. There is noisy excitement in the division of Abraham and Lot's livestock, and a dazzling magnificence in Solomon's temple. Jeremiah is hopelessly trapped in that dank and slimy well.

This continues through the New Testament. The presence of the angels over a Bethlehem field at the time of Jesus' birth is an overwhelming experience. As Jesus grows up and ministers to His followers, we learn from the sparrows and the storm, and we see the familiar tales of the healing and the preaching in fresh dimensions. Truly, this text and these pictures were made for each other. Even before the book was completed the publishers received praises for it from unexpected sources. Mr. Malcolm Potteiger of the R. R. Donnelley Company, who printed the book, writes: "I picked up the art and mechanicals in Kansas on Monday. They are great! ... The art is beautiful, and I also read the text — it is an excellent combination. I'm looking forward to a real fine book not only from a printing standpoint, but from editorial and illustration in conveying a message. ... You will be pleased to know that when I showed it in Chicago and Crawfordsville, their reaction was the same as mine."

Now to R. R. Donnelley, one of America's largest printing companies with specialized equipment for fine color work, this job was but one of the many in progress, and for a manager to become so enthused about one out of the hundreds of jobs in progress, it had to be special.

God Keeps His Promise, bound in an attractive, washable plastic binding, is available in the general book trade for the price of $6.95. The book also is the core piece of a whole new Kindergarten Curriculum published cooperatively by the Mennonite Church and the General Conference Mennonite Church which is built on the same philosophy of Christian education. This course will first be put to use in September of 1970 and includes an informative parents' book, Living with Kindergarten Children by Paul M. Lederach, two teachers' manuals, and a set of colorful weekly readers closely related to the kindergarten lessons.

Vietnam Personnel Write to the President

Mr. Richard M. Nixon
President, United States of America
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. President:

We, the undersigned, wish to present for your consideration the following statements with regard to U.S. intervention in Cambodia and the suppression of the Saigon student movement. We realize that different conclusions are drawn from different information. We live in the Vietnamese communities; it is this experience rather than HES (Hamlet Evaluation System) ratings which shapes our perception of the situation here. Perhaps we achieve only a distorted and fragmentary perspective, yet it is based upon the experience of our everyday lives. We feel a rising revulsion toward Americans on the part of the masses of the Vietnamese people. In order to retain an effective working relationship with the Vietnamese we must identify with their feelings and aspirations. Because of this identification and because of the sentiments we ourselves entertain, we feel it necessary to make our position known to you.

Firstly, we feel that the employment of U.S. troops in Cambodia is another attempt at a military solution to the problems of Vietnam. Our own observation has been that a military solution to what is essentially a political problem is not possible. Therefore, we are deeply opposed to the recent expansion of the war to Cambodia.

We believe that the social, economic, and political issues involved in Vietnam are fundamentally comprehensible and soluble only by Vietnamese. We do not believe that an American military effort has contributed or will contribute to the resolution of this war. Moreover, our perception has been that the American military presence has had a shattering effect on Vietnamese society. Thus, we feel the war can be resolved and Vietnamese society rebuilt only when American soldiers depart. Extending the war to Cambodia does not encourage rapid elimination of the American presence in Vietnam.

Secondly, we are grievously concerned over repression of the student movement in Saigon. We find incontrovertible evidence that numerous actions have been committed which cannot be condoned on any grounds. These include the arrest and torture of student leaders and the repeated violent and brutal dispersion of peaceful protest.

The students are the future leaders of Vietnam; if we are not truly concerned with their civil liberties and their essential human rights, we may find in the future that we have left them with a bitter and undying remembrance of our silence in their time of need. Obviously the material and much of the financial basis of the Vietnamese police and security forces are provided by the United States. Therefore, we must be deeply concerned by the uses to which these resources are put.

The aim which all of us have is an end to the horrors of war and the reconstruction of the shattered economy and society of Vietnam. We are sure that you also hold these objectives, although we may differ from you as to the means to achieve them. We feel, however, that the present policies with regard to the employment of troops in Cambodia and the treatment of the students destroy the possibility of accomplishing these objectives.

To attempt a military solution in Vietnam and Cambodia will only enlarge the tragedies of the past few years. The United States must move toward a political solution, and we believe that the essential first step in this is the immediate withdrawal of American troops from Vietnam and Cambodia.

Mission '70: A Family Affair

Mission '70, the 64th annual meeting of Mennonite Board of Missions, will provide a strong spiritual emphasis for every member of the family. Activities are being planned to capture the interest of children, youth and adults, and thus provide maximum involvement for every person attending.

Children's activities for ages 3 1/2 through grade 8 will include arts and crafts, music, missionary speakers, recreation, Bible stories, and films. Special field trips to Lilliput Farm (nursery and kindergarten), Trexler Game Farm (grades 1 - 3), and Valley Forge Park and Philadelphia (grades 4 - 8) are daylong events scheduled for Thursday through Saturday, July 2 - 4.

on Thursday afternoon and a fellowship meal Thursday evening. A special three-hour session will follow the public session the evening of July 3 featuring two music groups—the “Belles and Beaux” from Hesston College and “the Rebirth” from Eastern Mennonite College. Youth are also urged to participate wholeheartedly in the public sessions for confrontation with the church’s mission program and to share the Spirit’s leading in their lives.

Mission ’70 intends to involve each participant in the decision-making process. The Board will meet for an opening session the morning and afternoon of July 2 to consider the priority issues needing decisions. These will be identified and explained during the July 2-4 public sessions and discussed and prayed about in the small “Strategy Group” meetings. Small group ideas and suggestions will be picked up by the issues and Concerns Committee who in turn will share these during the final Board decision-making meetings on July 6 and 7.

Mission ’70, in order to be a family affair, requires the attendance and participation of the entire family. Otherwise, something will be missing.

War Taxes Questioned

James K. Stauffer, veteran Mennonite missionary in Vietnam, questions Mennonite payment of war taxes. Stauffer points out that an Army captain stationed in Vietnam wrote to his parents, “If you do not want any more My Lai incidents, then get the troops out of Vietnam.”

In the letter, part of which was printed in the Feb. 17, 1970, issue of Bridgeport (Conn.) Post, Capt. Miller said:

“I have participated in many My Lai-type operations, where a lot of innocent civilians were killed. I feel guilty, certainly, but I can tell you without reservation that My Lai will continue to occur as long as our government continues to pursue the course of action that it has over the past 25 years. It is not the L.t. Calleys that are at fault. It is our people—our people. They sent us out to fight a war... .

“Now I ask, if you and the people of the United States did not want us to do that, why do you provide us with weapons of mass destruction? Logically it follows that you want us to kill, slaughter, brutalize, and mutilate the people. The citizens of the U.S. are paying about 2 billion dollars per month for that. Isn’t it ridiculous?”

Stauffer comments, “It’s about time for ‘our people’—the Mennonite brotherhood—to give a consistent testimony against war. Let’s get at the root of all evil—money, or more particularly, taxes! The other day 35 B-52s dropped 1,000 tons of bombs on suspected enemy positions in Cambodia. One wonders how many Mennonite tax-dollars helped make that mission successful!

“During World War II our government agreed to the Civilian Public Service program. Our men were permitted to engage in work of national importance. The time has come for the peace churches to request a plan whereby our tax-dollars could be channeled directly to some constructive cause. Campus protests, street demonstrations, draft card burnings, etc., have not been effective in stopping the war. But choking off the funds that feed the military-industrial complex could bring results.

“The contribution by members of the peace churches to the gigantic 73 billion defense budget is infinitesimal, but there would be no doubt be many Christians in other denominations who would welcome the idea.

“By now the ‘render to Caesar... .’ statement is haunting us. Perhaps we get hung up on the letter of the law and ignore the Spirit. Remember, the letter kills, but the Spirit gives life! Permit a few comments on this text.

“1. Jesus spoke these words in peacetime. The famous Pax Romana was a reality. While Rome conquered like a barbarian, she ruled those she conquered like a humane statesman (I.S.B.E., p. 2600).

“2. Our President is a professing Christian. Caesar was not. Our full and unquestioning support of his methods and policies gives to the world a distorted image of Christianity.

“3. Jesus did not define exactly what or how much belongs to Caesar. He sent the Holy Spirit to guide us in determining where to draw the line. Each generation needs to assess the existing political situation.

“4. As a brotherhood professing discipleship, we believe that all of life is sacred. Our strength, abilities, time, and money belong to God. We refuse to give our bodies to the war god; why should we give our money?

“5. Some say that the taxpayer is not responsible for the way the government uses his money. This would perhaps have some validity if a reasonable amount was being appropriated for defense. But when most of it goes for military purposes at the expense of desperate social and domestic needs, something is radically wrong.

“6. Furthermore, placing the responsibility on government is the same argument used by many Christians who justify their participation in the armed forces. So, let’s be consistent in both areas!”

Churches to Receive Compassion Funds

A committee appointed to disburse moneys received for the above-budget Minority Ministries’ Compassion Fund has allocated $20,000 for Mennonite churches in minority communities planning to operate summer programs. Hubert Brown, pastor from Goshen, Ind.; Larry Cruz, Lawndale Church, Chicago; Mario Bustos, pastor at Milwaukee, Wis.; and Algerne Henderson, lay member at Community Mennonite in South Bend, Ind., met at Mennonite Board of Missions headquarters in Elkhart on May 16 to consider applications.

Churches who will benefit from Compassion Fund summer allocations include Calvary Mennonite, Los Angeles, Calif.; Mennonite Friendship Center, Portland, Ore.; Wichita Cooperative Ministries (a Presbyterian-Mennonite effort in Wichita, Kan.); First Mennonite Church of Denver, Colo.; Spencer Community Church, Swanton, Ohio; Iglesia Menonita Evangelica, Milwaukee, Wis.; Englewood and 18th Street Voluntary Service Units, Chicago.

Also Mennonite House of Friendship, Bronx, N.Y.; Lawndale Mennonite, Chicago; Carlsbad (N.M.) Mennonite Church; Rehoboth, St. Anne, Ill.; and several other locations still under consideration.

John Powell, executive secretary for the Minority Ministries Council, said that approved summer projects include activities such as recreational supervision, educational and cultural programs, instrumental music instruction, home economics, youth leadership, and other forms of community development. “We tried to avoid funding Bible school programs,” Powell explained, “since this should already be a vital regular part of congregational ministries. The majority of these projects could not have been carried out unless these Compassion Funds were made available.”

The Minority Ministries Council has established a self-governing list of ‘guidelines for Compassion Funds’ which served as the basis for disbursement. Specific considerations included the merits of the projected programs, the racial composition of the given churches, and the type of community being served.

The Compassion Fund was set up following Mission ’69 in Kalona, Iowa, and the biennial session of Mennonite General Conference in Turner, Ore., as a special above-budget effort to help alleviate racism and poverty in minority communities (black, Spanish-speaking, Indian, and Appalachian). The Mennonite Church, through congregations, conferences, and General Conference, has been asked to respond with a minimum of $6 per member per year for the next five years. Compassion Fund contributions have been largely channeled into existing Mennonite urban mission-service projects. Allocations are handled by the disburse-
Businessmen's Meeting Planned

Meeting in Chicago on Apr. 13, the Board of the Church, Industry/Business Association (CIBA) planned next fall's annual meeting and elected officers for the 1970-71 year. Eleven of the 12-man Board were present.

The Board suggested the annual meeting be set for early November in Chicago and that one or more topics be discussed at length, such as the growth of corporations, sensitivity training—its potentials and problems, and young persons and the business world. The weekend will also include an evening of inspiration and opportunity for businessmen to testify how they have been able to be a Christian witness, and a chance for a panel to answer questions prepared beforehand.

Elected president for the term ending Oct. 1971 was Frank Ulrich, of Archbold, Ohio. Carl Kreider, of Goshen, Ind., was elected vice-president, and Ted Claasen, of Newton, Kan., was elected secretary-treasurer.

CIBA, an inter-Mennonite group of businessmen, began in 1966 when Sauder Manufacturing Company, of Archbold, Ohio, asked Goshen College leaders how a program might best be set up to bring young persons and industry closer together. The first annual meeting was held in Chicago last fall with an attendance of 90 businessmen from 12 states and two provinces of Canada.

Among the goals of the association are (1) to make clear to young persons the motives and ethics of Christian businessmen and (2) to show that young persons can be useful, effective, and committed to Christ through business.

FIELD NOTES

Irvin D. Weaver (graduate student in the School of Social Work, Syracuse University) led a seminar The Christian Perspective of Nonviolence as part of a "teach-in" during the strike activities recently. Raymond Charles, Paul Kravbill, and Ira Buckwalter have been appointed president, secretary, and treasurer respectively of the Eastern Board for the coming year. Following each annual meeting these appointments are made by the Executive Committee of the Board.

Groundbreaking ceremonies were held at the Pinto Mennonite Church, Pinto, Md., on May 24.

The Harold Housman family will move from Deder, Ethiopia, to Nairobi, Kenya, in June where Harold will begin work with the Flying Doctor Service. An experienced pilot, Housman has anticipated this kind of service for several years.

The Housmans had served two terms at the Shirati Hospital, Tanzania. Returning from furlough in mid-1968, they transferred to the Deder Hospital, Ethiopia, for a two-year term. They are now being seconded by Eastern Board to Flying Doctor Service, presumably for a two-year period.

Glenn and Dorcas Martzall returned to Belize, British Honduras, on Apr. 8, after a three-month furlough in the States.

Elam and Doris Stauffer arrived in British Honduras Feb. 9, where they are serving in a pastor/community development assignment in Orange Walk. The Staufers had served one term in Honduras and had returned to the States, where Elam completed requirements for a Master's degree in community development.

Richard and Ruth Weaver, on furlough from Tanzania, arrived in the States on Apr. 10. Bro. Weaver is planning to begin a two-year surgical residency program in York, Pa., in July.

Anna Martin returned to Tanzania on May 7 after a year's furlough in the States.

Elise Cressman arrived in England on Apr. 30 for a year of midwifery training at Mothers' Hospital, Lower Clapton Road, London 5. England.

Helen Ranck, Somalia; Helen Rufenacht, Kenya; and Ruth Ann Sensenig, Ethiopia, were scheduled to arrive in the States on May 28.

Don Jacobs left Nairobi on May 13 and spent several days in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, in bookstore reorganization and agricultural development project discussions. He was scheduled to arrive in Chicago on May 18 for a meeting of the Council of Mission Board Secretaries. During the summer he will be serving as a resource person in several conferences and evangelism institutes in the States while he and his family are on furlough.

Sara Catherine Wagner left the States on April 28 for three months of language study in Costa Rica before beginning her first term of service in British Honduras.

Paul Gingrich, former Eastern Board missionary to Ethiopia, has accepted a position as Acting Director of Church Relations for Goshen College. Since the arrival of the Gingrichs in the States on furlough in Aug. 1969, Paul has completed the requirements for his BD degree at Goshen Seminary. Mrs. Gingrich is completing her certification in home economics as a secondary school teacher. The Gingrichs will terminate their service with Eastern Board as of June 17.

George and Dorothy Smoker, who served in Tanzania as teachers since 1943, terminated from the Eastern Board overseas program as of May 31. They are now living at 1671 Loma Vista Street, Pasadena 7, Calif. 91104. Dorothy serves as administrative assistant in the American branch office of "African Enterprises," an evangelistic team organization which conducts campaigns in Africa. George works part time with Donald McGavran in the Institute of Church Growth of Fuller Theological Seminary.

J. W. Shank, missionary in Argentina 1917-1950, passed away at Hesston, Kan., the morning of May 17. Funeral services were held at Hesston on May 20. Nelson Litwiller represented the Board at the funeral service. Mrs. Shank's address: Schowalter Villa, Hesston, Kan. 67062.

CONRAD GREBEL'S
PROGRAMMATIC LETTERS, 1524

Transcribed and translated by

J. C. Wenger

A beautiful edition of Conrad Grebel's programmatic letters of 1524 delineating his vision for the church. The book contains facsimiles of the original letters in his handwriting with German transcriptions and English translations in parallel columns and an illuminating introduction by J. C. Wenger. It was designed by Joe Alderfer. The cover illustration was done by Jan Giesezen. This limited edition will become a collector's item.

Every church library should have a copy. Dean H. S. Bender referred to these letters as "this exceedingly important document" in THE MENNONITE ENCYCLOPEDIA, Vol. 2, page 571a. These letters were written by Conrad Grebel at the age of 26, some four months before the founding of the Swiss Brethren in Zurich.

Seventy-two pages; paperback, size, 10 1/2 x 7 1/2.

The Perils of Propaganda

By Wilbert R. Shenk

Propaganda, in the best sense of the word, endeavors to convince others not holding a given belief of the validity and desirability of that particular opinion, attitude, or course of action, taking into account the integrity of the other person and the integrity of the communication medium.

Agencies serving the church are expected to be conscious of the constituency while striving to meet the church’s expectations. This includes providing clear and adequate information to the church to foment intelligent involvement and support.

However, an agency such as the Mission Board which has work in overseas countries is repeatedly reminded that there are others (those for whom it was never intended) looking over our shoulders and reading our publicity.

People, as well as nations, are naturally sensitive to what others say about them. Consequently, a government maintains an intelligence gathering system intended to discover what the world-at-large is saying and thinking about their particular country.

It is easy for a government to gain access to the kinds of information it wants through its embassies and consulates located in other countries. This is not the “cloak and dagger” kind of spying. It is simply a matter of finding out vital information which is available to any citizen.

Government sometimes enlist the help of citizens who travel abroad. The United States government through the Central Intelligence Agency uses this method, too. Occasionally missionaries and relief workers are contacted and urged to share information and impressions gained while living and traveling abroad. It is no idle charge that is frequently laid against North American church workers for being “agents of the CIA.”

In an increasing number of countries and areas missions and missionaries have been particularly singled out in recent years for criticism. Every missionary going abroad today must accept the fact that he will in all likelihood be placed under some kind of surveillance and a file kept on his activities in the country where he works. Often this is done so unobtrusively that the missionary will be unaware it is happening. The proof will come to light only in the event a political crisis should develop or if a war breaks out.

For example, very soon after missionaries evacuated from eastern Nigeria following the outbreak of civil war in mid-1967, missionary residences were thoroughly inspected and all files combed. Letters or documents containing statements or comments on the political situation, particularly if they took sides, were taken by the military for further evaluation.

Finally, they developed a list of those persons who were “enemies of the state” because of views and opinions critical of the government. Quite a few missionaries are permanently persona non grata in Nigeria as a result.

An equally sensitive and even more complex situation exists in the Middle East. For several years the Board has published few reports on the Middle East because of the repercussions this has on our workers there. The stakes are even higher when an agency has workers both in Israel and Arab countries (as we have). Repeatedly our workers have had to face hostile questioning from local government authorities concerning statements and reports issued through church periodicals in North America by indiscreet, naive, or partisan individuals.

What propaganda is most vulnerable?
— Reports which side with one party in a conflict;
— Reports which are overtly critical or unsympathetic to a country or its people; use of condescending or patronizing language;
— Distorted statements; basing a broad generalization on flimsy evidence or the views of an unrepresentative person.

Responsible propaganda
— Sticks to the known basic facts; cites respected authorities (especially citizens of the country); describes the gamut of representative viewpoints;
— Avoids blatantly political judgments and the bombastic reportage that often is generated in wartime;
— A missionary, service worker, or tourist is always a guest in another country and should conduct himself accordingly, particularly when reporting abroad; he should reserve judgment in political affairs;
— In situations of conflict or controversy remember that Christians are called to be peacemakers and ministers of reconciliation; reporting and interpretation should contribute to this objective.

The last point deserves further comment. A guest is obliged to be a model of sensitivity and good manners. Christians are called to always be the presence of Christ and a witness to His love. When there is heated conflict, rather than further intensifying feelings by lending the “prestige” of a foreigner to one side or the other, an honest attempt must be made to find a third way, a mediating position. This will help to salvage integrity and dignity on both sides. If our propaganda fails to contribute to this objective, then we are seriously undercutting the mission and witness of the church.

Wilbert R. Shenk is secretary for Overseas Missions at Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart.
Relevance: Reality or Illusion?

Many Christians today are accusing the church of lack of relevance. Many youth are leaving the church behind—replacing it with nothing religious or substituting Eastern religions. Adult spectators decry the lack of religious conviction vitally affecting personal or corporate human behavior.

One armed service chaplain turned to sociology to discover why religious training so little influenced men in the armed forces. Many theologians and churchmen turn to scientific disciplines and political action for church direction. They seek to make Christianity relevant to modern life in hope of restoring a waning influence.

Peter Berger, known for The Noise of Solemn Assemblies and other books on sociology of religion and knowledge, told church historians here in Iowa City on April 23 that such activities may do the church more harm than good. By using scientific and political means, religionists reinforce the growing suspicion that the church has little unique or intrinsic to offer modern man. They further reduce Christian adherence as a viable option for modern man.

Much of the problem roots back into our nature as humans. Our current situation, however, has few historical parallels in what it does to man. The large numbers of people gathered increasingly in smaller and smaller areas, the complexity of modern organizational structures, the diffusion of mass culture, the explosion of technology and information—all tend to separate people from their backgrounds, their families, their neighbors, and from most if not all meaningful relationships.

This separation and absence of stable personal relationships and the guides they bring for personal behavior we call alienation. We talk in the church about the alienation of modern man, but others are always the ones alienated. We are all right, we think, as if by wishing it so we can absolve ourselves from participation in the common plight.

What is alienation? Who is alienated? Can Christians escape a measure of alienation in a modern, bureaucratic, urban, mobile, secular society where much of the New Testament as we understand it does not seem to apply? Political action may help to solve some of society’s problems, but it will hardly deal with the alienation of the individual—be he Christian or not. Nor can orthodox Christian belief bring the kinds of relationships which reduce our alienation, if Lenski is right.

Ten years ago Gerhard Lenski studied religious groups in Detroit. Among white Protestants he found two groups. One he called the orthodox. They knew the right answers theologically but lacked human concern or real involvement in the woes of the world. The other group he called devotional. They emphasized the personal relationship with God and somehow came to be more infused with human and personal social concern than the orthodox.

What does all this say to a tiny Mennonite brotherhood in 1970? What should be our goals in Christian education and in mission? Where does our concern rightly begin for persons?

Perspectives which could help me look for answers to questions like these drew me back to school during this sabbatical year. If Berger’s thesis is correct, perhaps I should have signed up with Faith at Work instead.

Man’s Search

By Janice Christophel

Man is constantly searching,
He is restless,
angry,
confused.

Where are the answers to his questions?
about self,
about life,
about God.

He searches in books and people for his answers.
He reads.
He observes.
He converses.

His reactions are cries for help,
But no one seems to answer,
to hear,
to care,
to take time to listen.

He faces the dark and lonely nights . . .
but he is alone.
He needs a friend . . .
but there is no one to turn to.
He reaches out . . .
but finds nothing to grasp.
He prays . . .
but God seems far away.
He wonders . . .
Is there a listening ear?
Is there a friend to trust?
Is there even one person who cares?

And so he continues his search . . .
for self,
for life,
for a friend,
for God.
Who Needs Absolutes?

We all do. Christians in particular. There may be just as much danger in having too many as too few. Calvin Redekop points out that we have often gotten our absolutes mixed up with our principles. When we harden principles into absolutes we are in trouble because the flexibility of the gospel is ignored. Jesus was exceedingly flexible. He did not make the principle of keeping the Sabbath mean no hand shelling of grain. He forgave a woman taken in the act of adultery although the law said death for such. He did not even make the law absolute.

We may have missed some of the most obvious absolutes. Here are two. "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." That, it seems, is always absolutely the case. So is this, "Whatever you bind on earth shall be bound in heaven." Jesus is confident that when He is taken seriously by a group of discerning brethren they will make the right decision. If it is right on earth it is right in heaven. If the church could be as confident as Jesus about the validity of what is decided in His name by a discerning group it would be much more free to let such groups of disciples find answers to current questions. Church leaders do not always trust the discerning group. More serious is the fact that most discerning groups are not quite certain that Christ would trust them with a major decision.

One of the important things that Jesus did was to give His disciples authority to interpret the Bible. Matthew 18 is the passage our Anabaptist fathers used most to give them authority to develop what has been called the hermeneutic community — a group of serious disciples deciding what application a passage of Scripture was to have.

Another passage used less often is Matthew 13:51, 52. Here Jesus gives His disciples the authority that belonged to the scribes. They were the interpreters of the law. Here Jesus says that since His disciples had understood His parables about the kingdom, in contrast to the scribes whose eyes were blind and whose ears were closed, they would be free to bring things new and old to the people. They would become the scribes, the interpreters for His kingdom.

Never has it been so necessary to rediscover the responsibility that belongs to a disciple group to bring things new and old from the Book. Never has it been so important to be flexible from one congregation to the next in making the right current applications to new situations that are constantly calling for fresh Christian responses. Can congregations and smaller discerning groups accept the responsibility that Christ gives to them? Can they accept the absolute of Christ's presence among them? If they can, the many things that seem to be coming loose around them will be less troubling. And, almost incidentally, let me add

Don't Judge by Size

The most wonderful things in nature are the smallest. A flea leaps 200 times its length. A man would have to jump 1,200 feet to equal this proportionately.

The housefly takes 440 steps to travel three inches, and does it in a half second — corresponding to a man running 20 miles in a minute.

Turnip seeds, under good conditions, increase their weight 15 times a minute, and in rich soil turnip seeds may increase their weight 15,000 times a day.

There is no force more powerful than a growing squash. A squash 18 days old has been harnessed in such a way that in its growing process it lifted 50 pounds on a lever — 19 days later it lifted 5,000 pounds.

College Students and Church Attendance

One of the constant complaints by the church is that college youth do not feel the church merits their attention or attendance. To many, what the church says and does is not pertinent to the present, is not germane to the goings on of their generation and is as outdated as a buggy in a jet age.

What has happened? For one thing the present generation is not satisfied to serve the steeple. That is, youth are not interested in an organization which simply serves itself. And we must admit that the church does spend most of its meetings, motions and money on itself. To a great extent the average church forgets or ignores the New Testament teaching of every member taking the good news to the world.

Now, while the above charge is made many times and cannot be denied, it must be said that no other institution even comes close to the church’s record of doing things for others outside the fold. Practically all institutions and acts for the betterment and welfare of men’s minds and bodies grew out of Christian concern and compassion. The fact is that few want to live where the church is not.

We dare not forget this. And maybe if youth listened more closely to what the church has said and done and looked more closely at what the church is saying and doing, they would find much more of merit than they imagine. Yet the church has not conveyed a deep enough or convincing enough impression that it is about “The Father’s” business rather than its own.

Might it also be that sophistication has snuffed so much life out of the average church that youth sense it is foreign to their concerns? Sophistication is doing today, only on a larger scale, what a strict separation teaching did in the past. It is driving many persons away. In some congregations it is really difficult to feel the warmth of Christianity coming through. Fellowship is cold and formal. Anything which hints of emotion doesn’t have a chance.

So youth move, not to gospel songs which sophistication warned all as being very dangerous, but to the music unrelated to the church, which lets loose emotion but leaves life as empty as before. Youth search out the group where at least some warmth is felt. Youth seek some other place to realize the excitement which only Christ can satisfy.

Since it is uncouth for a preacher to raise his voice in earnestness and conviction, many follow that which appears to cry out with some conviction — be it right or wrong.

Often the church is too sophisticated to declare with any dogmatism what it believes lest it appear too naive or narrow. So youth seek elsewhere for that which displays real daring. And if there is one thing which can be said about today’s youth it is that they are not cowards in standing for what they think.

Perhaps this very fact is the reason they stay away from the church. It may be that they see they are shortchanged and are letting us know by their absence that we had better produce the real goods of the Gospel or we’ll not merely have a generation gap. We’ll have a generation gone.

What a challenge! If John R. W. Stott can fill his large church in London, Sunday after Sunday, with youth who come to hear his simple yet profound gospel sermon, is there no hope that a new grasp of the gospel, shared in the glow and power of the Holy Spirit, will help youth find a fulfillment and a faith which they fail to find anywhere else?

Somehow when the church proclaims the true gospel it still sounds real good even to young people. Somehow when the church seeks the altar of prayer and confession persons and things are altered. Somehow, when Christ is proclaimed, youth also are struck with so great a Savior and Lord. — D.

Reporting or Supporting

By the statements an editor sometimes receives in letters it is clear that some readers confuse the reporting of news and the supporting of it.

For example, recently a reader wrote that he is dismayed by the support Gospel Herald gives to riots, violence, hippie type conduct, and accepting liberal theology. Usually such statements are made in general terms without any concrete examples. If examples were given an editor would have something to work with.

It is true of course that Gospel Herald has reported on many, many happenings and movements in the religious world or on things which affect the religious world. In a real sense little, if anything, happens in the world which is not of Christian concern. But to say reporting the ills of society or the church is to support such is not true.

There is a great difference between reporting and supporting which must be kept clearly in mind if one is to understand and judge fairly. — D.
Parable of the Concerned

By Ezra C. Yoder

Behold, the Sons of Menno gathered together in a large meeting. And there was much handshaking and greetings among the brethren for they gathered but once a year to plan the strategy of their particular organization. And they came from the East and the West, from the North and the South. They came by bus, by train, by plane, and even a few by car, the last unfortunately living too close to the meeting place to purchase tickets for transportation.

And after they had labored long and hard, had heard many reports, gathered often in small groups for discussion of long speeches, listened to endless resolutions, hashing and rehashing each as they sought for just the right word so that each resolution might walk softly offending no one, the Sons of Menno who had gathered considered some of the brethren out in the highways and hedges who did not agree with them, and did even withhold support from their organization.

Yea, some in the grass roots doubted. In pockets throughout the church there were those who questioned the speed and direction with which the Sons of Menno did move. And sometimes they became a bit stubborn, verily they became even difficult, and did withhold support until the gathered brethren would listen.

So when the meeting was nearly over, discussion was held by the delegates assembled concerning the contrary in the field.

And a brother rose to say, “We must love one another. We must love even those who dissent.” And his fellow delegates solemnly nodded their heads. Yea, they would promise to love them who protested. And it was a good promise.

And another delegate rose to say, “And we must pray for them, for these questioners of our action.” Then he added, “And, of course, we must pray for ourselves, for we are not perfect.” And many in the group pledged in their hearts to pray for peace in the brotherhood. And it was a fine pledge.

And still another brother rose to say, “Those of us who disagree, should learn to agree.” And those still seated responded with “Amen and Amen.” And the chorus of “Amens” rose to the artificial rafters suspended above them. And it was a resounding chorus.

And a member of the group said nobly, “Yea, and we should even go to the brethren who disagree and seek reconciliation. Does not even the Holy Word say, ‘Thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee... go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift?’ And every listener echoed, “This is right, brother, this is right.”

But there was a pragmatic brother at the meeting who rose and said, “Yea, we should go. We should seek both understanding and reconciliation. But, alas, there is no money with which to send the reconcilers to those who need to be reconciled.” And a sadness fell upon the group that they could not be joyful as before in what was said from the floor. And with regret they bowed their heads because there was not money.

Then a delegate stood up and was recognized by the chair. The one who stood was with shining face and sparkling eye, for he had an idea and one could see that it must bubble forth and be shared with the assembled board. And he said, “Brethren, now hear me. The spirit would have me show you how we can do all of these things, even the last. We can love, we can pray, and we can agree with one another. And we can even be reconcilers, for I know how money can be obtained so that some may go to those who feel that they are forgotten, yea, go, and let them know that they are not forgotten.”

And as he spoke, all listened. But some feared, for he who spoke often had strange ideas, ideas that were far out. And the far out one said eagerly, “There are two score of us here. Let us as members of this group each fine ourself $100. And by this action we shall accumulate $4,000. And it shall become a fund, the Reconciler’s Fund. From it we shall draw money to send some of the brethren to those who disagree. We shall listen to them, and they shall listen to us. And there we will find ways to love one another. Yea, I shall be the first to pledge $100.” And the far out one sat down, happiness on his face, for he had done his thing.

Now the assembly hall was quiet, very quiet. Before they had been quick to pledge their support, but now they waited in uneasy silence. One hundred dollars was not peanuts. It was one plane ticket, or two rail tickets, or three bus tickets, or over 250 gallons of Ethyl gasoline. Surely the brother should have talked this over with older, wiser heads before he injected it into the meeting. He testified that he had talked it over with God, but was this enough?

Then a brother rose and said with great clarity, “But already we have given much. Must we give more?” And a muttering arose which said, “Yea, should we give more?”

And another stood to say, “I have given already three days to this meeting. I journeyed from afar. Is that not Elaine Discovers Honesty

By Annie Klassen

“Mommie, I want to stay with you forever and ever...and I never want to tell lies anymore!” said our seven-year-old foster daughter one night when I tucked her into bed.

This seemed to be the turning point in the girl’s behavior. During the five months that she had lived in our home, we had experienced many frustrations, trials, and keen disappointments.

When she had been with us for only a few days, she came bursting into the house after school, blurt out, “Look what the teacher gave me today!” holding up a bright colored new lunch kit. When we inquired for the reason for such a generous gift, she explained without batting an eye, “That’s nothing. The teacher gave one kit to each kid in the room!”

Needless to say, we were baffled by such brazen lies, for what else could it be, unless you call it vivid imagination? After a lengthy discussion, Elaine admitted that she had taken the lunch kit off the bus, when the owner had not been looking.

A few days later Elaine came home from school with her pockets filled with crayons. My husband tried reasoning with her, explaining the severity of stealing. To our amazement, she had no conception of right or wrong, or the sin of stealing.

On other occasions she would take a much-prized toy from a playmate, hiding it under her clothes until she got it safely home. How I hated these sessions with her, forcing the truth out of her. Generally loud outburst of temper preceded the disclosure of the truth.

Moreover, at any time at all, Elaine would think nothing of lying to get out of a “jam.” She would say anything in her favor without a hint of deception in her expression. Frequently I felt so helpless, not knowing how to win her confidence or to help her with her problem.

A psychology teacher, a good friend of ours, advised us to start a positive approach. We tried rewarding her for telling the truth even if it was not for her benefit. Most of all, we prayed for guidance and wisdom.

Shortly after, much to our joy, we noticed a marked difference in Elaine’s behavior. She became quite interested in the challenge. What a thrill it was for us when she corrected herself before she finished relating what started as a lie. And every evening when she prayed, “Dear God, help me to tell the truth,” my heart was touched by her explicit faith.

One night, I was pleasantly surprised when she took the initiative and at the end of her prayer she said, “Thank You, Jesus, for helping me to tell the truth today.” I followed my impulse and hugged and kissed her.

As the love and understanding between us grew, her desire to please us developed accordingly. I explained to her, “God, too, is pleased when we tell the truth and when we are honest. We do not do it for rewards but because we love Him. And it makes us happy when we do what is pleasing to Him.”

Now after these months of struggle, we still cannot say we have all the answers or that the problem is completely solved, but we thank God that He has helped us.

Caring for the Wounded

By W. T. Purkiser

A thoughtful Christian recently commented to the effect that "the church is the only army that doesn't care for its wounded soldiers. If a man is shot down by the enemy, they feel he is a disgrace and leave him to suffer alone."

One could wish there were no basis for that observation. But honesty compels us to confess that there is more truth in it than we like to admit.

Military forces around the world have sharply reduced fatalities among their wounded by quicker and better medical attention. But the church does not seem to have learned the lesson.

Part of it is that we seem to think we are engaged in a war in which no one gets hurt but the enemy. Wounds appear to us to be unnecessary.

Theoretically, perhaps, one should be able to go through the Christian's warfare from the new birth to heaven without so much as a scratch. Some may find ways to "be carried to the skies on flow'ry beds of ease." But most of us must fight "to win the prize, and sail through bloody seas." And some of the blood may be our own.

There is, to be sure, "the whole armour of God." Without it, we should be shot down in the first skirmish. Yet even armored soldiers - particularly in the front line - may suffer from fiery darts and the prick of enemy lancets.

Failure in the Christian life and walk ought never to happen. All who begin the way with Christ should walk unseathed and unscarred. But not all do.

At our best, we can never avoid casualties. What we do about them is up to us.

The Bible gives us some suggestions for caring for the wounded.

The First Need is for compassion. The writer to the Hebrews indicates that one of the qualities of Christ which should be shared by His followers is "compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way" (Heb. 4:15 - 5:2) - or, as one recent translation puts it, "those who are wandering from the true way."

Some people seem to have the notion that compassion means compromise. They act as if to be compassionate with the sinner means to condone his sin. They appear to feel that the only way to discourage falling is to kick the fallen.

Just to state such an idea is to disprove it. The medicine most needed by the spiritually wounded is a liberal application of old-fashioned, Christlike compassion.

Someone recalls a Christian worker whose negative personality belied his profession of divine love. A colleague summed it up: "He has a burden for souls; but he doesn't like people!"

There is pathos in the situation represented by the following lines from a letter written by one who once walked with the Lord:

"I wonder if anyone ever thinks or wonders how discouraged a backslider gets. Especially if he is a backslidden member still attending his own church, always hoping and sometimes praying that someone, anyone, will sometime utter just one encouraging word of hope. Always waiting for just one person to ask how things are going and just say, 'I'm praying for you; I've not given up hope for you. . . .

"How can a backslider stay in the same church for years and get the impression that no one cares anymore?"

It's a good question. There should never be an occasion to ask it.

A Second Need in caring for the wounded grows naturally from the first. In his great statement on the power of prayer, James makes the application exactly at this point: "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him [literally, turn him back]; let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins" (Jas. 5:17-20).

It is perfectly proper to talk about the failings of fellow Christians - provided we talk about them to the Lord and not to other people.

Gossip has been defined as "the fine art of saying nothing, and leaving nothing unsaid." It usually comes from a cold heart and a long tongue. The Christian answer to gossip is to surround the straying soul with a wall of intercessory prayer.

In it all, Paul tells us, we are to carry the attitude that "there, but for the grace of God, am I": "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted" (Gal. 6:1).

In caring for the spiritually wounded, we ourselves become strong. The points at which they fell we may guard with greater care. The enemy who succeeded momentarily, at least, in defeating them will be attacking us and we will be better prepared.

This is not to plead self-interest as a reason for caring about the wounded. Those who are sometimes rejected and viewed with contempt are still souls for whom Christ died and who are worth more in the sight of God than the whole world itself. We must love them and pray for them because Christ loves them and prays for them even as He did for Peter: "The Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted [or as it has been better translated, when you have returned to Me], strengthen thy brethren" (Lk. 22:31, 32).

But the truth is that wounded ones, restored through compassion and prayer to the battle again, do strengthen the Health and Medical Situation in the Chaco

By Hans Epp

At the present time, the Indian population (8,500) in the Chaco is close to that of the Mennonites (9,200). During the primitive days, they had practiced infanticide and abortion as population control. Now that they are Christians, they have stopped these practices and have larger families as a result.

With the larger families came lack of food and crowded living conditions. The Indians now have asked the Mennonites for assistance in family planning methods agreeable with their Christian faith. Through Inter-Church Medical Assistance (IMA) and MCC, a Planned Parenthood Program has been started.

The health of the Indians is poor. Many suffer from malnutrition due to the lack of food or poor selection of the food they do have. Their diets lack proteins, vitamins, and minerals because fruit and vegetables are not available. Instruction in nutrition, food preparation, and food selection is needed. During the winter of 1969, a food shortage was acutely felt by all because of the crop failure in most of the Indian settlements.

In addition to malnutrition, the Indians suffer from intestinal parasites. At least 80 percent of the total population suffers from hookworm. Many of the children are also troubled with tapeworms. Educating the Indians in ways of preventing parasites is important. Many treatments are given, but reinfection is rapid since many do not understand the source or causes of parasites. Freeing the Indians from the many parasites would be a large step toward better health for them.

Another problem which the Indians face is skin disease. Lack of proper hygiene and poor living conditions result in bacterial skin infections and scabies in children and a variety of skin fungus infections in the adults.

The worst health problem which the Indians experience is tuberculosis. The incidence is very high and is one of the major causes of death. It is estimated that nearly 10 percent of the Indian population has TB.

Treatment of TB is difficult for the Indians. They cannot afford to discontinue their work for the long-term therapy needed for proper treatment. Also, drugs for TB are hard to obtain. The various health clinics do not have money to buy the needed drugs and they are not available through drug-donation organizations.

The present methods of diagnosis for the disease are primitive and unreliable. Much needed is a TB sanatorium equipped with X-ray machines and facilities for treatment and hospitalization of patients.

Since the TB problem is so great among all the Indians of the Chaco, contacts were made with the Department of Health in Asuncion. An agreement was made in which they would provide drugs and vaccine as they were able. The extent of the aid is uncertain, but any help they can provide will be progress.

Two other common diseases troubling the Indians are venereal disease and the Chagas' disease. A 1968 test result showed that 44.9 percent of the Chulupi Indians were found positive for syphilis. Treatment and education have provided an effective control of VD.

Chagas' disease is spread by a bloodsucking insect. In the early stages the disease is not serious, but as it moves to the chronic stage it becomes dangerous and often causes death. There is no treatment for the disease at this time.

Medical care for the Indians is available in nine different clinics in the Indian colonies. Each clinic has a missionary nurse in charge. The clinics operate mostly as outpatient clinics, but have basic facilities for inpatients and a maternity ward. A doctor visits the clinics on a regular basis to treat the problem cases and perform minor surgery. He also provides general direction for the medical program.

The clinics are limited in equipment and drugs, but they are very important to the Indians and their welfare. They are one of the links for the Indians in finding a place in a new society and new culture.

The change in attitudes and practices of the Indians does not come easily. They must learn to accept new practices and ways of living to become part of the culture. In doing so, they must give up old customs and cherished beliefs which they have known and practiced for centuries. Much patience, understanding, consideration, and a willingness to accept them as equals must be given to them as they struggle for a place in the life of the colonies.
The Primary Need of the Church

Ed. note: These responses, along with last week’s responses, were selected from letters written by persons who answered an editorial which asked the question, “What is the Primary Need of the Church As You See It?” The next issue will conclude this series.

Involvement

From my perspective the primary need of the church today is for most members of the church to quit their strike against God and join those who are laboring to win lost men and women for Christ. Too long most of us have been disloyal soldiers of Jesus Christ. He desires that every follower of His, not only become associated with an active Christian church, but that each one become involved daily in telling others the good news that there is one who has the answers to all of life’s problems. Each church member should feel that he is personally responsible for leading some other soul to Christ. — H. Harold Hartzler, Mankato, Minn.

God’s Presence and Power

My greatest need as a church member is for a hunger for God that turns me openly to Him to receive. Exciting ways are opening as God meets this hunger for Himself through Christ and the Bible. The greatest freedom in reaching out to others has come through accepting Christ’s presence now by the Holy Spirit. God’s presence and power, ours by His Spirit, will enable us to share love in the church and in the world. — Mrs. Ruth Grasse, Edson, Alta.

Be Like Christ

1. Just to be Christian in a crooked and perverse nation, thus helping resolve some of the ills of society instead of expecting society to be Christian for our benefit.
2. A sense of urgency to pray for our government and do less talking.
3. More interest in missions than money; church than clubs; missionaries than movie stars; faith than fashions; souls than self.
4. More love for Christ so that His Spirit can have more of us. — Genevieve King, Westover, Md.

Baptism of the Spirit

The primary need of the church today is to get excited about Jesus and alive to our mission. I have seen a great number of Mennonite lives changed because they asked Jesus to baptize them in the Holy Spirit. It is completely scriptural. As just an example — John 1:33, 34, “...the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God.” And Luke 11:13, “If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?” I emphasize the word ask.

Let us Mennonites stop throwing cold water on our brothers and sisters who have received the baptism in the Holy Spirit, speaking in tongues (languages) (1 Corinthians 14:39, “forbid not . . . ”) and the other gifts spoken of in 1 Corinthians 12. The fruits are ours. So are the gifts. And so is every promise in the Book. Hebrews 13:8, “Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever.” We have the same Jesus the early church had. Why do we try to make Him different?

Let’s get honest and broken a bit, and admit that what’s really wrong is we’re scared and proud. Let’s stop saying “shhshh” verbally or in our hearts. — Helen Kropf, Elkhart, Ind.

Christ First

“That I may know him and the power of his resurrection” (Phil. 3:10). In order for the church to fulfill its mission of presenting Christ to today’s sin-sick and dead society, Christ needs to be preeminent in our everyday lives. In order to have Christ’s power within, we need to sell out lock, stock, and barrel to Him. See Romans 6:4-14.

Many can verify the results of taking Christ at His Word — joy, peace, love, etc. Maranatha! — Paul H. Buckwalter, Lanham, Md.

Committed and Faithful

We need committed Christians with convictions.

“Did not our hearts burn within us while he talked . . . while he opened to us the scriptures?” Family members might list their own convictions or ideas that “burn within their hearts” concerning the kingdom of God and share them in family devotions.

Persons who faithfully serve the Lord in pleasant and unpleasant circumstances leave an impact on humanity probably far beyond their expectations. We build, challenge, disrupt, forgive, help, inspire, trust one another. — Arthur A. Martin, Goshen, Ind.

Tell It Like It Is

I believe the primary need of the church is to preach the full gospel straight from the shoulder. Tell it like it is. We need Holy Spirit inspired preaching. For Sunday evening use the Bible and speakers who have a working experience with Jesus Christ. With such a program churches will again be filled both Sunday morning and evening. — Ed Wittrig, Albany, Ore.
Changed Lives

The greatest need for the church of today is that it may have members who have a real and vital faith and have had a personal encounter with the living Christ of today (like the early disciples had). Then they can go out into the world and by their voice and actions live that life.

We at Parkhill Girls Home have seen miracles take place in His name, by changed lives. — Tom Dickson, Parkhill, Ont.

Prayer and Bible Study

The primary need of the church today is a fresh refilling of the Holy Spirit. A deeper individual commitment to God through prayer and Bible study. Involvement in prayer and Bible study groups will lead to a more meaningful private prayer life and a closer relationship with God. This will make the total work of the church alive for the individual and equip him for service for God. — Velma Birkey, Amboy, Ind.

Missionaries at Home

The answer I submit is built upon a rather forceful suggestion that came to my mind as I read the prayer request for March 11 in the Family Worship Guide: “Thank God for the opportunity to be a self-supporting missionary in Algeria by serving as a high school English teacher. Pray for more jobs.” Why not say, “Thank God for the opportunity to be a self-supporting missionary” in Kansas—or Pennsylvania—or Oregon? What do we expect a “self-supporting missionary” in Algeria to do? Have we a right to do less, regardless of our job or location? Needed: “Self-supporting missionaries.” — Lois Hershberger, Hesston, Kan.

Searching of Scripture

Jeremiah 22:29 — O earth, earth, earth, [church] hear the word of the Lord.

John 5:39 — You search the Scriptures, for you believe they give you eternal life. And the Scriptures point to me!

Acts 17:11, 12 — They searched the Scriptures day by day.... As a result, many of them believed.

2 Timothy 4:4 — Listen to what the Bible says [and not to follow our] misguided ideas.

Isaiah 34:16 — Seek ye out of the book of the Lord, and read: no one of these shall fail.

As a middle-aged Sunday school teacher and youth worker who also has spent some time as a Voluntary Service worker in a number of states, I give the above answer to “What is the primary need of the church today?”

To meet the need, let each of us grasp anew that “the whole Bible was given to us by inspiration from God and is useful to teach us what is true and to make us realize what is wrong in our lives; it straightens us out and helps us do what is right” (2 Tim. 3:16).* — Glen Wenger, Wayland, Iowa.

Simple Obedience

The primary need of the church today is “obedience” to the simple commands of Jesus.

First — “Come unto me” (Mt. 11:28). We have strayed from Him and need to return in humility and faith to Him.

Second — “Learn of me” (Mt. 11:29). We have been learning much that is wrong and irrelevant that we need to “unlearn” before we can truly “learn of Him.”

Third — “Abide in me” (Jn. 15:4). He said, “Without me... nothing.” Our barren and fruitless lives would tell us that we haven’t really discovered this to be an absolute requisite to fruitfulness.

Fourth — “Be witnesses unto me” (Acts 1:8). Failing in obedience to the first three we therefore lack the concern, conviction, and zeal necessary to become effective in our primary mission. — Abner G. Miller, Pocomoke City, Md.

Spiritual Power

The primary need in our church is spiritual power—a spiritual revival—so that the church has power to witness a lost and needy world. — Mrs. Enos Hershey, Lancaster, Pa.

Discipline

The primary need of our own Mennonite Church today is discipline, the one thing that I believe we need to practice in our daily life if we would be most helpful to our church.

A careful discipline of self adds character and vitality, and creates maturity in every phase of our Christian endeavor and outlook.

Our people have come through trying times in our history and have stayed faithful to God and to each other.

I have this confidence that we will continue to adjust and witness to the world which grows so fast about us, and in doing this maintaining our identity as a part of God’s people as Mennonites. — Alvin Kaufman, Plain City, Ohio.

Holy Spirit Revival

What is the primary need of the church today? A Holy Spirit revival. Letting God speak instead of listening to every one’s individual opinion and interpreting Scripture to meet the occasion.

We need God’s divine guidance and obedience to follow as He leads. — Mrs. Isaac Riehl, New Holland, Pa.

Teaching on Second Coming

A great need of the church today is an elementary and understandable course of study for our young people on the doctrine of the coming of our Lord. Our intelligent, unemotional interpretation of the signs of the times as applied to our present day should serve as an explanation of the troubled condition of the world today. - Sanford G. Bray, Kansas City, Mo.

The theme and Bible study for Mission 70 is taken from Luke 3-5. The Church is asked to earnestly pray for God’s blessing upon it as this passage from Luke’s gospel is studied.

Pray that the Church will have

- a genuine experience of repentance from sin (3:8)
- the baptism of the Holy Spirit for Christlike living (3:16,22)
- the fulness of the Holy Spirit for overcoming temptation (4:1)
- the power of the Holy Spirit for witnessing (4:14)
- the anointing of the Holy Spirit for Christian service (4:18,19)

Pray each time when

- you meet with the congregation for worship
- your family gathers for worship
- your MYF, WMSA, SS class is together
- you have your quiet time alone with God

Pray in faith

- ask, and you will receive;
- seek, and you will find;
- knock and the door will be opened to you.
- For every one who asks will receive,
- and he who seeks will find,
- and the door will be opened to him who knocks. (11:9,10)
“From Me Comes Your Fruit”

By Adella Kanagy

A budding plum branch symbolizes in Japan the coming of spring: the beginning of the season of growth in nature. Even while winter winds still grip white Hokkaido, newspapers and television communicate the “voice of spring” from the south. Hopefully, in another month or two, life will also begin to stir in the seemingly dead branches now snow-covered.

The first bud on a branch is proof of life in the tree or vine. It is the promise of blossoms and fruit. A budding branch is growing. While flowing sap from the tree continuously nourishes the branch, fruit will follow. A cut branch may remain beautiful for a time in the flower arrangement gracing the entrance or the guest room in a Japanese home, but a cut branch no longer has life, or the promise of fruit.

Jesus said, “I am the vine, you are the branches.” He said, “Abide in me — remain vitally united to me.”

I, as a branch, have no spiritual life in myself. I cannot produce fruit. I may seem to be a “good” and respectable person, but it is only in union with the Vine that I can bear the fruits of right living and right standing with God. It is by continuously receiving life from the Vine that growth occurs. His Spirit produces the fruit which the Heavenly Vinedresser patiently waits for in me.

In John 15 Jesus teaches us that we have no life without Him. In Him, we have eternal life: a reality which begins when we accept the branch-Vine relationship He is longing to create in every person. The branch’s role is abiding: continuing, dwelling, remaining with the Vine; being cleansed by the Vinedresser; asking and receiving. The Vine’s role is giving life and fruit, as God promised in Hosea 14:8 — “What have I to do with idols? It is I who answer and look after you. I am like an evergreen cypress, from me comes your fruit.”

On the Vine are many branches. They are united in the Vine. Abiding in Christ, the branches receive nurture, growth, fruitfulness together, in relation to each other as well as in relation to their source of life. As sap flows in a living vine throughout all its branches, as blood circulates to every part of a living body, so the spiritual application is that the Spirit works through relationships among the various branches as they are together in Christ. As each branch has a relationship to every other branch on a vine, I have a relationship to every other believer in Christ. Not as isolated branches, but as we are together in the Vine we can receive fullness of growth from the Spirit.

Jesus’ last command to His followers was to “wait for the promise of the Father”: the gift of the Holy Spirit. The disciples waited: “All these engaged constantly and with one mind in prayer together.” Their actual experience was a fulfilling of Jesus’ prayer to the Father, “that they may be one, as We are one.” Then followed Pentecost, “and they were all filled ... with the Holy Spirit.”

The Holy Spirit was the lifeblood, the life-giving sap through which all future growth and life and fruitfulness in the church would come. Each disciple (each branch) had an essential place to fill: to remain in the Vine, together with other branches, to enable life to flow to all. The life-giving relationship was not a question of organization, or program, or creed. In the disciples waiting together, as Jesus had commanded them. His prayer for unity was answered, the promise of the Father was fulfilled, the Spirit of life was received, and abundant growth followed.

Using different figures, Paul describes Christ’s followers as reconciled to God in one body (Eph. 2:16). As one building, Christ is “our bond of unity and harmony” (v. 14). “In Him the whole structure is joined ... together harmoniously; and it continues to rise (grow, increase) into a holy temple in the Lord. ... In Him — and in fellowship with one another — you yourselves also are being built up ... with the rest, to form a fixed abode ... of God in ... the Spirit” (Eph. 2:21, 22, Amplified). Whether of building, or of body, or of branches, these lessons from the physical world are that growth occurs together. So is the growth of the church. The living Christ in us together, in unity and harmony, enacts the continual creativeness of the Father. The living Vine gives fruit. A dwelling place of God is formed in us as we are in Him and in fellowship with one another.

Let the budding branches of spring teach us again the need for Christ to be alive in me personally, in all of us as the body of Christ: to purge us, and grant fruit for the Father’s glory.

From Peter Marshall’s Prayers

Forgive us for thinking that prayer is a waste of time, and help us to see that without prayer our work is a waste of time.

— The Congressional Record
Fear and failure are often the result of lack of faith. Many persons are paralyzed because they lack faith.

I go to the hospital. I push the elevator button. The door opens. People come out, others go in. The door closes. I didn’t get on, I didn’t go up. I may have some questions about the ability of the elevator to lift me to the sixth floor. I talk to the engineer. He tells me of the strength of the cables, the ratios of the hoist, the power of the motors, and the construction of the shaft. I may intellectually conclude that the elevator has the power and the proper construction to elevate me to the sixth floor. But the elevator is of absolutely no value to me unless I get in.

The psalmist said, "Trust in the Lord. Wait patiently for him." In other words, trust yourself to Him.

Faith is fulfilling in personal accomplishments. Five young men, who were experiencing in new ways faith at work in their own lives, were meeting together. They raised the question and asked each one, "What would you do if you were sure that you would not fail?" One of the men said, "I would like to be the president of a small Christian college." The men bound themselves in prayer believing that this goal was desirable and of God. About a year and a half later the man was chosen to be the president of a small Christian college. "Faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the conviction of things not seen."

Faith has healing effects in the body. John Sutherland Bonnell, president of the New York Theological Seminary, tells the case history of a businessman, 45 years of age, who was deeply and truly Christian in all his relationships. Quite unknown to him since his boyhood he had carried within himself the seeds of pulmonary tuberculosis. A simple cold developed into an upper respiratory illness and very quickly into tuberculosis. He went to a clinic and was told that he would have to give up his business for approximately one year. All control of it would have to be turned over to others. They would bear the responsibilities and worries. No matter what the results were in his business he had to be prepared to accept the consequences. Very quickly he put his business in the hands of a trusted assistant. He committed his life, his loved ones, and indeed all his affairs into the hands of God, and went to a sanitarium. All his thoughts and energy he now put into the business of getting well. Obeying to the letter all instructions given him by the attendant physician, he followed strictly the diet, periods of rest, and moderate exercise prescribed. In his daily devotions he thanked God for his increasing strength and for the hope of complete recovery. Shortly he became a source of comfort and good cheer to all the patients. He organized various social activities to get them acquainted with each other and used his influence as a businessman to get hundreds of additional books for the library. He was the center of radiant good cheer. He came out of the sanitarium completely recovered. Under medical advice he began to work a few hours a day. Before long he resumed his full schedule of work. Afterward as he talked to friends about his experience in the hospital, he said, "Whenever any negative or disturbing thoughts came to me, before they had a chance to get in their ugly work of depression, I would turn my thoughts to God and to His care of His trustful children. I invariably kept the morning watch with my Bible. The presence of Christ beside me became very real, and in my judgment, all this was a meaningful factor in my getting well."

Faith in Jesus Christ brings fulfillment to all areas of life.

"As I See It"

There are too many ordained men clustered around our denominational institutions in light of the marked need for local pastors. The 1969 Mennonite Yearbook shows that the three college communities claim over fifty ordained men with no official duties in the congregations of which they are members. Adding those engaged in publishing, missions, and conference administrative positions gives us a total which may very well be more than the number of congregations currently seeking pastors.

This is no reflection on the men who find themselves with an "nd" (no official duties) label in the yearbook. They probably have good reasons for being where they are and may be exercising legitimate ministries. Nor is it necessarily a reflection on institutions who recruit these men. Our institutions naturally look for men with leadership qualities. They are forced by competition to sacrificial hiring practices. Ordained men with creative minds enjoy the fermentative atmosphere of college communities.

One observation and three suggestions. We have followed organized Christendom too fast and too far toward an unpopular institutionalized church. Institutional boards should be increasingly sensitive about recruiting men away from pastoral positions. Ministerial committees should be aware of the wealth of experience and ability represented by men with the "nd" behind their names. I believe the action is still on the local level where the leader matches with his people on the very cutting edge of God's work in the world.

Love of Beauty

The love of beauty dwells within every soul; it is universal. It is a thing of joy forever. It needs no letter of recommendation. What a drab world this would be without beauty! Any beautiful object attracts the attention of all people; it is greatly admired. A love of beauty can conquer more than any warrior. It is one of the greatest factors in almost all we do, in all the decisions we make. Why do you work so hard and long on your lawn, in your garden, etc? Why do you pick the kind of pets that you do? Why do you want a good fit in the clothing you wear, with attractive material? Why do you paint your house, polish your shoes, and pick the kind of car that you drive? Why do you go to church, weddings, etc., in your Sunday best?

Beauty must be natural. Peacock feathers on a crow are not beautiful. It is the mark God sets on virtue. Every natural thing is graceful and beautiful. Beauty unaccompanied by virtue is as a flower without perfume. Many seem to forget real beauty is of the soul. Every beautiful thing is but a reflection of its Creator. — Christian E. Charles.

Wit and Wisdom

My definition of an educated man is the fellow who knows the right thing to do at the time it has to be done. . . . You can be sincere and still be stupid. — Charles Kettering.

The past is a powerful source of strength to those who have accepted and conquered it; to those who have not it is a heavy burden. — James McBride Dabbs.

We have enough religion to make us hate, but not enough to make us love one another. — Jonathan Swift.

The Sunday school teacher wanted his class to understand the meaning of moral courage and gave as an instance the case of eight boys sleeping in a dormitory, only one of whom said his prayers. "That was moral courage. Now can anyone give me another instance?"

A boy held up his hand and said, "If six preachers were sleeping in the same room and one did not say his prayers, wouldn't that be moral courage, too?"

A Texan was visiting Niagara Falls.
"I bet you haven't got anything like that in Texas," a local resident said, pointing at the falls.

The Texan, scratching his head said, "No, but we have a plumber in Texas who can stop that leak!"

People who have nothing to do quickly tire of their own company.

Gratitude puts sparkle into personality.

Memory test: What did you worry about a year ago today?

"How early can I begin the education of my child?" a woman asked Francis Wayland Parker, the educator. "When will your child be born?" he asked. "Why he is already five years old," she exclaimed. "My goodness, woman," Parker said, "don't stand here talking to me — hurry home; already you have lost the best five years."

The Lord Is There

By Lorie C. Gooding

Earth is a strange land now to me,
Where I, a stranger, roam,
The country of my pilgrimage;
But Heaven is my home.

I long to see its glowing scenes,
And breathe its purer air;
I long to see its streets of gold,
Its mansions bright and fair.

And while I wander weary
This world of pain and strife,
I yearn for Living Waters and
The wondrous Tree of Life.

I long to reach that happy land
Secure from pain and care;
But most I pray to reach my home
Because my Lord is there.

As suggested by the title, this book is directed primarily to those volunteers with little or no background in teaching. They are oriented to every aspect of their assignment: to the teachers they will work with; to the children they will teach; to the classroom, materials, and equipment they will have; to the methods they will use; and to the places where they can find help.

As a final send-off the author bids them 'Go with God.'

It would be excellent to have this book available for all church school teachers from novices to the most experienced. The book's spirited style will bless all readers with new ideas and fresh enthusiasm.

— Harold D. Lehman.

The author here presents to his readers a delightfully simple, straightforward study of the books of the New Testament. It is a sound, scholarly work presented in a simple terse style that will appeal to the general Bible student.

The author avoids the usual copiousness of the introductory matters. He is careful to give attention to the few essentials of time, place, and authorship in summary fashion without taking his readers through multitudinous facts and scholarly disagreements.

In very brief but lucid style each book is dealt with by an outline of contents, a chart moving toward inductive procedures, and a brief digest of the major factors relating to the content and the message of the book.

This work is highly recommended to the serious Bible student for comprehensiveness, within the limits of brevity, and more for the faithfulness with which it deals with the Word of God. — Ivan R. Lind.

God's Turf is the story of Teen Challenge in pictures. The value of photographer Combs' approach to reporting is that for some situations "a picture is worth 10,000 words." This situation is one of those! If you have read any of Wilkerson's books you should add this pictorial by Combs to your collection.

Every facet of the great and growing program of Teen Challenge has been photographed and described. These include the Brooklyn Center, the farm, the Bible College, the Girls' Home and the Children's Ministry. Certainly in a time of multiplied personal tragedies that stem from poverty, sin, and narcotics, it is refreshing to know that there is a Christ-centered ministry that is turning the tide for many! Fine for church libraries. — Vern Miller

This devotional meditation of the eleventh chapter of Hebrews is a helpful study of the life of faith. Since faith is the cornerstone in the foundation of a dynamic Christian life, it is imperative that one does all he can to foster and maintain this vital facet of Christian experience. The author does this by challenging us with inspiring pen portraits of the heroes of faith in that great picture gallery of the Hebrew epistle. He is careful to show how the Hebrews meant to the first-century reader, and since we "men of like passions," they will not fail to inspire and challenge us as twentieth-century readers. A look at some of the chapter titles reveals the wide scope of the contents: The Strange Confirmation of Faith (Abel), The Priceless Reward of Faith (Enoch), The Social Significance of Faith (Noah), The High Adventure of Faith (Abraham), The Firm Commitment of Faith (Moses). There are ten other chapters equally as stimulating. The book is well written and is a clarion call to a life of commitment. — Earl Delp.

The Dean of the Boston College Law School forcefully unravels the current outcry for law and order, why it occurs, and whom it is directed against. After describing the movements trying to change American society — students, blacks, poor, Drinan sketches a philosophy of law for the new American census.

Such a census will be necessary if American society is to survive. It will develop only if "obedience to law is a moral imperative" and if it is also a moral imperative to "disobey an unjust law after all efforts at altering the unjust law have come to naught."

This book is excellent reading on the legal dimensions of the current American crises. The insights into movements for social justice, prisons and criminals, marriage and divorce, conscientious objection and opposition to the Vietnam war are all helpful. The world needs more Christian, humane, legal yet just minds like Robert F. Drinan. OK for church libraries where it will be read. — John A. Lapp.

These two paperbacks provide some of the most stimulating material in brief compass that I know of for the use of program-planning committees, small-group leaders, pastors, and teachers of youth and adults. They are exciting to read and more exciting to use as a common basis for discussion.

I picked up Volume I with the intention to read snatches from several chapters that especially interested me and ended up reading the entire book. Listed here are the chapter headings for each volume.

Volume 1
1. Do Heart Transplants Pose Theological Problems?
2. Are the "Haves" Responsible for the "Have-Nots"?
3. What If Scientists Create Life?
4. Should We All Get Together?
5. Therapeutic Abortion: Right or Wrong?
6. Will the Medium Change the Message?
7. Is It Ever Right to Break a Law?
8. Is Modern Technology a Threat to Christianity?
9. How Much Clothing Can We Take Off?
10. Does the Christian Have Any Problems in Today's World of Business?
11. Is Church Music Obsolete?
12. Are Urban Centers Lost to the Gospel?
13. Our Country: Right or Wrong?

Volume 2
1. Is It Right to Tax Churches?
2. Life or Death — Who Decides?
3. What Should Money Mean to the Christian?
4. Should We Favor the State of Israel?
5. Can Christians Appreciate All Kinds of Art?
6. How Important Is the Church Today?
7. How Should We Get Off the Sex Binge?
8. Is the Church Widening the Generation Gap?
9. What About Divorce and Remarriage?
10. Is Total Abstinence Necessary Today?
11. Does the Bible Teach Equality of the Races?
12. Can We Ever Condone Violence?
13. Why Be Physically Fit?

Each question is treated with material in defense of the various possible answers being proposed today. The authors have intentionally refused to give answers but have rather attempted to follow a three-point process for each question: (1) A discussion of the pros and cons; (2) What does the Bible say? and (3) What do you say? This is followed by a brief bibliography of sources used. The section on what the Bible says has avoided pat proof texts. — Gerald C. Studer.
Ephrata Dedicates New Material Aid Center

The Dedication and Open House of the new Material Aid Center at Ephrata, Pa., was held on May 17 with 500 persons attending the service.

H. Raymond Charles, president of Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, gave the call to worship and served as moderator for the service.

Harold A. Penner, assistant director of Voluntary Service at Mennonite Central Committee, led the devotional period in which five members of the Akron headquarters staff participated by telling of experiences when they served in MCC service or were helped in some way by MCC's relief program.

In his dedication message, David F. Derstine, pastor of the Blooming Glen Mennonite Church, reminded those gathered for the occasion of the opening of the Center that they were "together for the common concern of the suffering of the world. A concern," he continued, "for the hurts of the people of all nationalities and religions around the world."

The Cheerful Anthems Men's Chorus, a group of men from 11 different Lancaster Conference churches, provided special music for the program. This chorus is currently giving concerts in the area and all the money received in their offerings will be given to MCC for the work in Jordan and Israel.

John Hostetler, director of material aid for MCC, reported that through the generous contributions of materials and labor, the cost of the Center was kept down to $120,000 or $6 a square foot. This is much lower than the original estimate of $175,000. Hostetler emphasized the fact that the Center was owned not only by MCC, but by everyone in the community. "This is your Center," he stressed, "and you are welcome to come and visit or work at anytime." Nearly $70,000 has already been contributed toward the cost of the Center, with assurance of $30,000 more from several conferences, he added. An offering taken during the service amounted to $1,256.43.

Elam Lantz, general contractor for the Center and pastor at the Ridgeview Mennonite Church, led the congregation in the responsive prayer of dedication. Tours of the Center were given to show the many and varied facilities of the Center, and refreshments were served before and after the dedication service.

Days of Prayer for Mission '70

June 8. Ask God if He wants you to be present at Lansdale, Pa., for Mission '70 in July. Also ask Him if you should invite someone else to go along.

June 9. Pray for the Franconia churches as they tackle the large task of hosting this mission convention. Pray that many rewards will accompany their faithful efforts.

June 10. Pray for the Local Arrangements Steering Committee members: Henry P. Yoder, Robert Kratz, Mrs. Mary Clemens, Robert Gotwals, Gerald Weaver, and Lee Yoder.

June 11. Ask the Spirit's guidance for Miss Ruth Keeler and her helpers as they plan children's activities.

June 12. Pray for youth secretary Cleon Nyce and Franconia young people who are planning the youth activities. Pray for the music group from Hesston College, "The Belles and Beaux," and the Eastern Mennonite College "Rebirth" group.

June 13. Pray for the Mission '70 coordinators, Lewis Strite and Jim Boyts, as they prepare to guide the Mission '70 program.

June 14. The Bible study for Mission '70 is Luke 3 to 5. Pray that God will speak to the Mennonite Church from this passage through the Bible study leader, John Lederach, and through persons participating in the strategy groups.

June 15. Pray for Mr. and Mrs. Horace Longacre and their helpers on the Food Services Committee, that each piece of bread served may be a reminder of our need for the bread of life.

June 16. Pray for the Elkhart staff production department as materials are prepared for use at Mission '70. Pray that this material may be used of the Spirit.

Goshen College Announces New Staff

Paul Mininger, president of Goshen College, has announced that 14 persons will join the staff for the 1970-71 school year.

Marvin P. Bartel, a candidate for the Ed degree at the University of Kansas and a former faculty member at Bethel (Kan.) College and Northeast Missouri State College, will be associate professor of art.

Orville L. Yoder, a candidate for the PhD degree at Ohio State University and a former teacher and administrator in Indiana schools, will be assistant professor of education.

Joining the nursing faculty will be Mrs. Janice K. Brennenman, supervisor at Shands Teaching Hospital, of the University of Florida; Marvin R. Helmut, candidate for the MS in Nursing degree with specialty in pediatrics at the University of Florida; Miss Janet Kropf, former staff nurse at hospitals in Puerto Rico and Oregon; and Mrs. Ruth G. Stauffer, public health nurse of Philadelphia, Pa.

Philip K. Clemens and John T. O'Brien will teach music next year. Clemens, a faculty member of Eastern Mennonite College, has received the SMM from Union Theological Seminary, New York City. O'Brien is head of the elementary department and director of teacher training at the New School for Music Study, Princeton, N.J.

Paul Gingrich, who will receive the MDiv from Goshen Biblical Seminary this year, will be acting director of church relations and acting associate director of college relations. He is a former hospital administrator and missionary to Ethiopia.

On special one-year assignments are Leland Harder, professor of practical theology of Mennonite Biblical Seminary, who will teach in the social science division, and Paton W. Yoder, retiring dean of Hesston College, who will lead the Study-Service Trimester unit in Haiti.

Joining the staff of the student personnel services as head residents are Mrs. Cheryl Canadian Cooperative Formed

Canadian radio and television programming is distinctly Canadian—at least it tries to be. Government-controlled Canadian Broadcasting Corporation standards and procedures for programming present a unique distributing situation. To meet the needs of Canadian radio and television marketing for Mennonite program distribution, a new organization has been formed.

Mennonite Radio and TV recently began operations in Winnipeg, Manitoba. Organizations represented in the new cooperative are the Ontario and Alberta-Saskatchewan conferences of the Mennonite Church; Faith and Life Communications, Winnipeg; the General Conference Mennonite Church; and Mennonite Broadcasts, in Harrisonburg, Va., for Mennonite Board of Missions. The organization is directed by Bernice Wiebe, who is also director of Faith and Life Communications.

The idea of a joint effort was stimulated by the success of last year’s Mennonite TV campaign in Canada. Future programming will include Family Life TV Spots, Family Service Radio Spots, Choice for Men, and the seasonal specials—Christmas as It Happened and The Greatest Week in History (Easter) newscasts.

Another interesting group is invited to consider participation by writing Mennonite Radio and TV, 1483 Pembina, Winnipeg 19, Man.

Convention Will Ring

Music will play an important part in the week’s activities at Convention ’70, church-wide youth gathering scheduled for Aug. 16-21 at Lake Junaluska, N.C.

Randy Zercher, music instructor at Hesston College, Hesston, Kan., will be music director and song leader for the week. With him to lead the convention in worship and fun singing will be several groups:

The Hesston College Chamber Choir, a group that specializes in contemporary folk and folk rock music.

The Moors, a two-brother team that has traveled all over the United States giving high school concerts of folk music using six- and twelve-string guitars, electric bass guitar, and harmonica.

Mery and Merla Watson, a husband-wife team from Ontario who perform a wide variety of music.

Barbara Sowell, a Mennonite “soul” singer from Chicago, Ill., who creates much of her own music.

Convention ‘70 coordinator, Art Smoker, has also announced that a special songbook will be printed for the occasion. The book will be made up of hymns, spirituals, and folk songs young people have learned to enjoy singing.

Sex Disc Is Great

For some, sex is holy. For others, it’s a dirty three-letter word. For the church, it is a subject few dare talk about in straightforward terms. This is unfortunate because sex is very much with us, in church or out.

Sex for Mennonite Broadcasts meant a decision to program a disc in the ongoing Family Service Radio Spots series. It has become one of the “hottest” productions Mennonite Broadcasts has ever released. Hot in angry reaction from some listeners, in favorable commendation from others, and in widespread public service programming by over 350 radio stations.

First response to the disc was from radio stations, almost all of it favorable: “Terrific series of announcements” — WTJS, Jackson, Tenn. “We expect to get plenty of comment from your series about sex. We thank you for this ‘unique’ approach to the topic!” — Stan Buchanan, Station KIDD, Monterey, Calif.

One station which drew plenty of audience response — both positive and negative — was station KYW, Philadelphia. KYW is a 50,000-watt Westinghouse Group W station, and reaches a massive audience from Harrisonburg to New York City with its all-news programming.

Lyle G. Stoltzfus, bishop of the Mennonite churches of the Philadelphia-Chester area, reported receiving at least five phone calls on the spots since KYW began airing them on January 23. “This may not seem like so many,” he declared, “but I feel it is quite significant since they are the only phone calls that I recall receiving concerning any radio productions by Mennonite Hour.”

Also I consider it significant since there is no suggestion on the spots that they call in any responses nor is there any phone number given. Anyone who calls has to take the initiative to check in the phone book if they can find any Mennonite Church listed and make the call.

“I feel this indicates that the persons are quite impressed if they call,” said Stoltzfus.

“Let me comment on the nature of the calls,” continued Stoltzfus. “The three gentlemen who called were all very positively impressed. They expressed themselves as greatly appreciating the spots, as feeling that they were a very relevant and contemporary approach; one man asked me to send him more literature on the Mennonite Church, so I sent him Introducing the Mennonite Church, Mennonites: Who and Why, and the recent Confession of Faith. Our family doctor also expressed deep appreciation for them.”

Then Stoltzfus reported on two less favorable responses: “Two ladies called and were negative. The one said she was offended because it sounded as though the setting were a bedroom one when husband and wife had just completed the sex act and she felt it was inappropriate. [No situation even remotely such as this on disc, say writers.]”

“The other lady,” continues Stoltzfus, “felt that there are much more relevant matters that the church should speak to. . . . She felt sex is strictly a personal thing between the two involved and that we should stop trying to use the Bible to promote our ideas on sex.”

Stoltzfus concluded his comments with the commendation: “I feel that this approach which you are using is a very creative way to witness to Christ and His way and pray that the Spirit may continue to guide you in this ministry.”

KYW’s impact on the eastern Pennsylvania area for the spots is a result of concentration similar to a commercial campaign for Pepsi or Geritol or Ban roll-on deodorant: 195 releases in one-four week period. Which says something about what KYW thinks of the spots.

Mennonite Broadcasts’ executive secretary Kenneth J. Weaver describes KYW’s heavy use of the spots as “the highest compliment we have ever received from the radio industry.” A further testimonial to the spots’ value for public service use is acceptance by WABC, New York, number one affiliate of the ABC network. “This is the first time we’ve ever been able to get on WABC or any major station in New York City,” Weaver pointed out.

“This is the kind of religious programming stations feel they can use, because it benefits the listener without sounding ‘churchy,’” says Weaver. Anything “churchy” loses audience, and a lost audience is the last thing station men want. Which is why religious-sounding programs are concentrated on Sundays, for Christians-only.

the message into a format stations can use. They need good public service material. But unfortunately most of us religious producers turn out programs stations will not run, outside of Sunday. It’s our fault—not theirs—for not putting Jesus Christ out where ordinary people can meet Him.”

Getting on KYW with commercial-like concentration has this to say about it—people will hear your message. Don Kraybill, Youth Director for Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, Salunga, Pa., the concentration of the subject matter on sex brought this response: “My wife is a nurse at the Lancaster Osteopathic Hospital and recently during conversation around the nurses’ station, one of the doctors remarked... ‘What’s this bit about the Mennonites becoming obsessed with sex?’”

Kraybill went on, “The doctor said he thinks there is more to family living than only sex and he said that frankly he is getting turned off by always hearing the family sex spots on KYW day after day.”

Which simply goes to show both the effect of a concentrated campaign of spots, and the power of this particular subject to capture interest. A wide variety of family-life problems have been covered in the eighteen previous radio spot releases since 1965, and on KYW the past two years. Last summer a release to parallel Family Life TV Spots on resolving family conflicts drew good response—but nothing compared with these on (whisper behind your hand) sex.

Next spots? In the works already is a series to go with the upcoming May-June release of Family Life TV Spots, on building better communications in the family. In planning stages are spots on the role of husband and father, family finances, youth and the world they face.

In reporting their use of the spots, KYW pointed out, “Our commercial clients would have spent $5,070 for equivalent time to reach their customers. Time is more than money on KYW radio. It is our opportunity to join with your organization in working for our neighbors.”

Writers for the series were David Augsburger and the writer of the report. Augsburger described the purpose of the disc, “Sex is a beautiful fact of life, and when actualized in marriage adds magnificent dimensions to man/wife relationships. But outside of marriage? Sex can be explosively destructive.”

The approach of Family Service Radio Spots in all releases is to deal with the human situation as Jesus did—meeting people where they are in their problems. While not much can be said in 60 seconds, one basic Christian truth can be presented. The underlying concept in all spots on all releases can be stated: That God reveals Himself to those who turn to Him in the crisis of personal need.

In our sex-oriented society the church must deal forthrightly with the family disruptions the misuse of sex can bring. And in the crisis of such situations we can speak the Word: Christ can reveal a new way and a new life for those who will hear Him.—James Fairfield.

Mennonite General Conference Executive Meets

The Executive Committee of Mennonite General Conference met for a period of worship and sharing on Sunday evening, May 17, and for a work session on Monday, May 18, at Toledo, Ohio.

In his devotional worship meditation, Moderator-Elect A. Don Augsburger reminded us that in the midst of a confused world the church is not the all-knowing community, but it is the responsible community. It must, therefore, be creative, redemptive, and liberative. In the sharing session that followed it was noted that the church is really the only institution that death cannot destroy according to Matthew 16:18 and, therefore, the church has reason to always be optimistic.

Paul N. Kraybill, executive secretary of the Study Commission on Church Organization, met with the committee to give a preview of the proposal for church structure. The Executive Committee noted with deep appreciation the work being done by Brother Kraybill.

Clarification was made concerning the arrangements for the Joint Conference on Church Organization in October and the General Conference sessions of August 1971.

Attention was given to the designation of delegates from the Mennonite Church to the 1972 Mennonite World Conference to be held in Brazil.

Special attention was given to the proposed Intercurch Evangelistic Trust for 1973, and the committee encouraged the executive secretary to explore ways and means of implementing this evangelistic trust and exploring the possibility of securing a staff person to give leadership in this area.

Booklet Available

The papers from the Consultation on Conscience and Conspersion held in November 1969 by the MCC Peace Section are now available in booklet form.

Included is the address of welcome given at the consultation by Peace Section Chairman William Keeney and addresses by J. R. Burkholder, James Juhnke, and Delton Franz.

Burkholder’s address, “Christ, Conscience, Church, and Conspersion,” analyzes various approaches to draft resistance. Juhnke describes the “Conflicts and Compromises of Mennonites and the Draft.” Franz reviews the “National Debate over the Draft.” The consultation “Message” to the church concludes the booklet.

While the draft is being widely discussed throughout the nation, the Peace Section feels that it is appropriate for every congregation to study the situation for itself and to find the common will of God for His people. The Peace Section hopes that this booklet will provide some basic information for such study.

The 48-page booklet is available from the MCC Peace Section, Akron, Pa. 17501, for 25 cents per copy, or in quantities of five or more at 20 cents each.

Shirks Appointed to Jamaica

Mary Jane and Stanley Shirk and daughter Deborah.

At their semiannual meeting on Apr. 18, the Virginia Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities appointed Stanley and Mary Jane Shirk to a four-year missionary term in Jamaica. Stanley, originally from Lebanon, Pa., and Mary Jane from Norristown, Pa., have one child, Deborah. They formerly lived in Florida where Stanley was in business.

At present the Shirks live in Park View, Harrisonburg, where Stanley is auditing several courses at Eastern Mennonite Seminary. They will assume pastoral responsibility as assigned by the Jamaica Mennonite Conference.

Youth Encounter Mission

“Encounter in Mission” was the theme and activity of the annual public meeting of the Franconia Mission Board on May 10.

The day began with more than 200 young people encountering mission in a personal way. They met for a breakfast at 6:00 a.m. at the Blooming Glen church. Art Smoker, Secretary for Youth Ministries of the Mennonite Church, suggested “How to Look at Mission.” The Optimists, from Eastern Mennonite College, led a sing-along. Then they went by groups into sixteen mission and small congregations for the morning service to observe and learn. In each place the pastor dialogued with the youth on the needs of the community and the mission of the church. In the evening Art Smoker led a panel in reporting what they saw and heard.

Persons involved in mission reported that “God is at work among us” by showing what He is doing in their communities. John Smucker, pastor of Mennonite House of Friendship, New York, was the main speaker. He challenged the conference with his understanding of the arena in which mission is to take place. “Living for Christ and the mission of the church is not going to be easy in this community,” he affirmed. In the evening he led the conference to commitment. “Growth is a painful process. You say that you want to grow. Are you ready for a painful experience?

Bible studies on the encounter in Philippi and Corinth led by Gerald Benner and Sammy Santos showed God’s work in pagan societies and gave the conference new courage to encounter our world with the gospel.

The Franconia Board sponsors sixteen mission churches in eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York State, and Vermont. Seventeen workers are supported in Mexico located at three places with radio witness and follow-up over a wide area. Budget askings for the current year are $35 per member.

Films Explore Effect of Prejudice on Children

At what age does a child first discover that he has become the victim of prejudice? How are such feelings transmitted from the inflicter to the recipient? In what discriminatory ways is prejudice acted out today? Such questions form the basis for A Matter of Pride and The Victims—additions to the Mennonite Board of Missions’ film library.

A Matter of Pride comes from the ABC-TV “Discovery” series aired on Sundays for young people. The 25-minute color film takes the viewer down 48th Street in Chicago to discover what the residents of this particular black neighborhood are doing to gain self-identity as black people. Twelve-year-old Edgar provides the continuity as the camera traces his search “to be somebody” in the midst of a changing community.

The film includes segments picturing the efforts of local black leaders who have taken initiative in self-help projects, the contribution of gospel and soul music, and the endeavors of a school run by Christian Action Ministry to rescue youthful dropouts.

Produced in cooperation with the Chicago Urban League, A Matter of Pride is primarily intended for junior high audiences, but provides insight for adult viewers as well.

The Victims, a documentary featuring noted baby expert Dr. Benjamin Spock, explains how prejudice is a disease communicated by parents to their offspring. Through a series of interviews with children and adults from various ethnic groups and all walks of life, the film subtly asserts that adults are the carriers of “racist viruses,” but that they also possess the power to cure. No one minority group is featured, as all are the “victims.”

The Victims, 50 minutes in black and white, was produced by the Anti-Defamation League of B’nai Brith in cooperation with Westinghouse Broadcasting Company.

A Matter of Pride and The Victims both purchased in cooperation with the Minority Ministries Council of Mennonite Board of Missions, are available rent-free from Audiovisuals, Box 370, Elkhart, Ind., 46514. Copies of a supplemental flier listing six film and five filmstrip titles added in recent months to the Board’s audiovisual library are available free upon request from the same address.

Musselmans Begin New Mission

Early in April Glenn and Lois Musselman initiated a new witness in Jundiaí, Brazil, an industrial city situated between Campinas and Sao Paulo. They held services in their home and promoted an outreach through surrounding towns. The Musselmans, missionaries with Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, returned to Brazil in February after a one-year study furlough at Fuller Theological Seminary in California.

The Protestant Council of the city of Jundiaí was consulted about locating a church in that city. A church to serve three particular “villas” (wards within the city) has now been projected. Funds in the mission budget have been approved for the purchase of land on which to build a church and Christian service center.

With assistance from a local couple and the Pocket Testament League, an open-air meeting in a small plaza in one of the villas marked the official start of mission outreach. Two films, one for children and a second based on the life of Jesus, were shown. Copies of the Gospel of John were distributed to all who would receive them. A short gospel message was given by a Brazilian evangelist. Persons were invited to register for a four-lesson Gospel of John study course sponsored by the Pocket Testament League with offices in Sao Paulo.

Similar meetings were held in two additional villas. One hundred and fifty persons are being contacted in follow-up visitation.

Board Offers Film Resources

By showing many kinds of people who despite their seeming differences are engaged in similar activities and have similar interests, People Are Different and Alike makes it vividly clear that human beings are basically the same the world over.

People are both alike and different; similarities are more important than differences; and differences can be useful and interesting. These affirmations are documented in a recent addition to Mennonite Board of Missions’ audiovisual library.

An 11-minute Coronet educational film in color, People Are Different and Alike, follows a group of primary students as they meet other children who are both like and at the same time different from themselves—and from each other—in many ways. In a number of scenes of children and people around the world, the students see a variety of clothing, shelter, and food people use; and discover that people are basically alike in their need for these things. People everywhere also need love and friendship, the desire to learn and develop skills, and to be happy and enjoy life regardless of cultural background or environment.

People Are Different and Alike, presented on an intermediate (grades 4-6) level, contains concepts that could be applied in a congregational Christian education program.

A second film now available for congregations and other groups is A Chairy Tale, a 10-minute black and white motion picture produced by the National Film Board of Canada.

The film presents an encounter between a young man and a chair. When the man tries to sit, the chair refuses to be sat upon. A conflict ensues, only to be resolved when the man agrees to quit “using” the chair.

Most viewers will be able to watch this film objectively, enjoying the fantasy, but realizing they are seeing a subtle portrayal of human relationships. The film is suggested with follow-up discussion for senior high-adult audiences.

People Are Different and Alike and A Chairy Tale are both available rent-free from Audiovisuals, Box 370, Elkhart, Ind. 46514.
Congregation to Expand Latin Ministry

The Iowa-Nebraska Mission Board has taken action to expand their mission and church extension activities in Davenport, Iowa, and Moline, Ill. Mac and Mary Bustos, long-term home missions personnel, have been working for several years among Mexican-American and other Spanish-speaking residents in the Quin Cities area. Their present church building is in Davenport. Church services are conducted in Spanish, and effective evangelistic and service programs have resulted in a packed church on typical Sunday mornings. A satellite mission outpost in Muscatine, Iowa, with indigenous leadership has also proved successful in reaching Latin people with the gospel.

Bob and Donna McKelvey, currently host and hostess at the Mennonite Board of Missions' VS hostel in Elkhart, Ind., have accepted an assignment beginning in June to help the Davenport congregation expand its ministry. Specifically this entails adding English services and strengthening the Christian education program of the growing congregation.

The Iowa-Nebraska Board is committed to help the congregation purchase a suitable centrally located church building in Moline. Negotiations are presently under way, and if a building is purchased, the Davenport congregation will move to the new facility. The congregation expects to function as a unified structure while offering both Spanish and English services and bilingual Christian education classes.

During a recent visit to Davenport, John Powell, executive secretary of Minority Ministries, recommended that the present building be retained in order to develop a new program for the city's black community. This possibility is under consideration and may develop pending the availability of a qualified mission worker.

The Home Missions Division of Mennonite Board of Missions has responded favorably to a request from Iowa-Nebraska Mission Board to begin a $200 monthly subsidy in support of the enlarged program in the Quin Cities. Illinois Conference leaders have also voiced approval of Iowa-Nebraska's program expansion.

Jordan Work Advances in Spite of Anti-Americanism

April held some tense moments for MCC workers in Amman, Jordan, as they witnessed anti-American rioting and violence in that capital city. According to Virgil Claassen, MCC director for Jordan, just prior to the scheduled visit of Joseph Sisco, Assistant Secretary of State, a group of demonstrators attacked the American Embassy in Amman, tore down the flag and seal, and burned four Embassy cars.

About an hour later, the American Cultural Center was attacked and burned. The beautiful library with its thousands of books and modern offices was destroyed and the auditorium and classrooms were damaged.

The day of violence and the previous day were marked by student demonstrations, consisting mostly of orderly marching through the streets and the chanting of "Sisco, go home." Many of the marchers were merely grade school children who didn't know what was going on except that they were getting a day off from school, Claassen reported.

Due to the high anti-American feelings, the MCC workers did not go out to the refugee camps during the trouble, as a precautionary measure. Fortunately, their kindergarten and women's centers were not damaged or affected during the protest.

Since that time, they have received permission to use an empty building in the Talbiyah Camp to expand their kindergarten facilities to two buildings. This will help the teachers considerably as they can divide the children into two groups.

The building, originally intended to be used as a laundry, was never occupied. It is some distance from the other kindergarten, which presents somewhat of a problem. One idea which Claassen has suggested is to move the camp's Women's Activity Center to this new location and use the former WAC for the second kindergarten facility. This would be much easier for the head teacher since it is closer to the present kindergarten and she must oversee both the schools.

A six-week in-service training program for the kindergarten teachers of the voluntary agencies began in April. The classes are held for four hours each Thursday morning. The program includes films, lectures, discussions, and actual classroom observation in which program planning, understanding of the preschool child, arts and crafts, and music are stressed. Lorraine Regehr, director of the kindergartens, reports that the sessions are well attended and it is hoped that a marked improvement will be seen in their teaching this fall as a result of the classes.

Two Gleysteen Originals Sold for $1,350

A number of planned and impromptu events caused happy excitement when the Laurelville Church Board of Directors and Association members met at Laurelville, R. 5, West Pleasant, Pa., for their Annual Spring Retreat, May 15-17.

This year the Board recommended a major three-year effort in debt reduction under the slogan, "A debt-free LCC by '73." As his contribution toward the objective, Association member Jan Gleysteen, Scottdale, Pa., contributed two of his prizewinning watercolor paintings, which had just been returned from a show.

The large paintings were put on display and LCC member, Ray Denlinger, Harrisonburg, Va., and Association President John Bontrager, Alden, N.Y., volunteered to serve as auctioneers. With the two auctioneers taking turns accepting bids, one painting featuring an old mill in central Pennsylvania went to Mr. and Mrs. Phares Rutt of New Holland, Pa. The second painting showing a double drawbridge in Gleysteen's native city of Amsterdam went to Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Brunk for $1,000.

The auction provided more than 10 percent of the total $12,000 which was raised toward debt reduction during the weekend.

Clinton, Va.; five at East Union, Kalona, Iowa; two at Bethany, Albany, Ore.

B. Charles Hostetter, Harrisonburg, Va., reports: "Rejoice with us. We are again planning, packing, and making final arrangements for leaving for Nigeria. We will be gone for three years on loan to a large independent church called 'The Church of the Lord.' Our responsibility will be to help them start a theological school for pastors. Your prayer support will be appreciated." John Howard Yoder and family, Elkhart, Ind., will leave for Buenos Aires, Argentina, the first week of July for a special one-year assignment. John will be a professor at the Instituto Superior de Estudios Teologicos, a new graduate theological study center in Buenos Aires directed by Dr. Jose Miguel Bonino. Ralph Buckwalter, Obihiro, Japan, writes: "Sixteen pastors, congregational leaders, and missionary men from 13 Mennonite congregations in Hokkaido met at Ashoro on May 17 and 18 for 24 hours of intensive study-discussion and fellowship. The May 17 morning worship service at the Bethesda Mennonite Church in St. Louis was interrupted when a young man stood up and requested time to present a concern to the congregation. As he came forward, five other young men followed. Instead of making certain demands, the group presented pastor Hubert Schwartzentruber with a check for $300.

For several weeks these young men worked together, removing debris and clearing a lot for the local Jeff-Vander-Lou organization, and donated the proceeds to the building fund of Bethesda Church. Those involved were Fred Gentry, Michael and Gregory Kinsey, Percy Robinson, and Charles and Eugene Meacham.

John W. Miller's comments on the judgment of Matthew 25:31-46 (May 12 issue) in which he takes the view that the nations are being judged for their responses toward destitute Christians is intriguing and thought provoking. However, this reader is bothered by two problems when trying to accept Professor Miller's thesis: (1) His Hope is based on harsh exclusiveness if we confine the "least of these my brethren" to mean only those within our interpretation of the Christian brotherhood. And, in what sense are the duties of the nations "saved"? How, and on what basis, do nations (or their people) who know nothing of Israel or Jesus "inherit the kingdom prepared for [them] from the foundation of the world"? I appreciate Brother Miller's concern for radical Christian living and hope he will further clarify his understanding of the above text via this readers' column. — John A. Hertzler, Newport News, Va.

John W. Miller's "Comments on a Much-Used and Abused Gospel Text" in your May 12 issue is interesting but does itself abuse Matthew 25:31-46, I fear. Turning the principals at the judgment seat into nations rather than people gives us no strange or radical duty or any duty at all. The point of the Matthew 25 passage, like most of the Sermon on the Mount, is that the people who think they are religious are not at all religious. In fact, it is the people who the world regards as least religious who are most like God. So Matthew 25 is not an exception in Jesus teaching but central in His antiritualistic gospel. The people who were sure that they were ready for the great judgment were those who had said their prayers, fasted, and kept all the holy feasts. So holy were they, they were probably convinced that they would be of the only ones in heaven. (You've met people like this, haven't you, even in Mennonite churches?) The thunderclap comes when the religiously proud and haughty are brought low. All their rituals are turned to dust and ashes. (How the little people of Jerusalem must have relished this tale!)

Do nations behave thus? I'll admit that I don't know what 21st-century non-Christian nations are like as well as I would like to, but I just don't see the Rome of Augustus Caesar turning up at the great judgment expecting to get a special seat because of its piety, though, of course, it was most religious. If Rome boasted of it, it boasted of its righteousness but of its power. And what does it tell us about Jesus to turn this passage into an incantation for Christian missionaries to say to a reluctant pagan king. "Treat us cool or you'll get a whammy in the last great assize in the sky."? I just don't read Jesus that way. — Maynard Shelly, Newton, Kan.

The article, "In Memory of Rowena Lark," in the May 12 issue of Gospel Herald was beautifully written. My own life was blessed by knowing briefly this saintly lady. In 1956 she and Brother Lark visited the Texas mission at Mathis, Texas. I was teaching Kindergarten there. Sister Lark sat and talked with me, gently giving ideas and suggestions for improving the curriculum. Later I breathed these ideas have always been grateful to her for this and felt I had known her for a long time. Her devotion to God and love for people truly radiated from her. Blessed are these women." — Sarah Yoder, Eversville, Pa.

I was so happy to read in the May 12 issue of Gospel Herald the article by John Miller which

What are you thinking about, Daddy? The little one in your arms is so small and so dependent but most important, he is yours. As one tiny hand clutches your shirt and a little arm tries to reach around you, he has fallen asleep with complete trust.

You and your wife have helped God create a miracle—your son. This is a thrilling yet sobering thought which does something to one that nothing before has ever done. They say, “A baby is all future.” If that is true you hold a “lot of future” in your arms right now, not only his future but yours.

We have watched you care for him with the proud look of a parent in your eyes. That look and the words spoken to ears that cannot yet understand, but only trust, seem to be saying, “Nothing is ever going to happen to you, son, while Daddy is around.” You mean it too, for you would gladly sacrifice your own life to save his. A son makes a man stand tall with the realization that God has given him a major responsibility.

Nothing will happen to him while he is in your arms. But perhaps you are thinking of the time when he begins to venture alone into the great big world you have helped to make. Who or what is to protect him then? It will take “arms” longer than yours. It is then that one fully realizes how completely he must be dependent upon prayer and upon the spiritual resources which you have nurtured in this young life.

The trust of your infant son, trying to place tiny arms around you as he lies peacefully sleeping close to your heart, is symbolic of the faith in “Our heavenly Father” which every parent needs. The words “heavenly Father” will convey true meaning to your son as you, his earthly father, interpret God to him in terms of love and life, as he continues to respond with complete trust. Just make sure that you or no one else destroys that trust by methods or words which might cause him to fear you or be afraid of God. When he needs punishing, do it in love, not in anger; and always temper justice with mercy, for “God is love” and He is merciful.

Or perhaps in this pensive mood you are beginning to understand some of the hopes and dreams your parents had for you. How do I know? Because it seems only yesterday that I sat in your place and held you, a tiny infant, and dreamed of the kind of young man I hoped you would become. Now you can understand something of the thrill which passed through me when I first held you in my arms.

Yes, so small, so perfect, so helpless, so dependent, and yet all too quickly the hours turn into days, weeks, and years as he changes and grows into an individual. Today he is too young to think for himself. Tomorrow he will have ideas of his own, and sometimes they will conflict with yours and your heart will be lonely and heavy.

While he is so young and unable to think for himself, it is up to you to think clearly for him so that his attitudes and steps will lead in the right direction. During these first few years he will learn more than in any other comparable period of his life. This learning will come, not from books, but by imitating those around him.

His outlook and his attitude toward God, home, church, and the world of people unconsciously will be patterned from day by day example. Love him, play with him, give him generously of that which money cannot buy — yourself.

I recall so vividly your first spontaneous prayer. As we sat down to eat one evening, from your seat in the high chair you said, “I say thanks.” Then you bowed your head and this was your prayer: “Thanks for Mother and Daddy and to eat dinner, and to go to church. Amen.” You were only two years and eight months old. We had been thinking you were too young to be taught to pray, but all along you had been watching us and had learned to pray.

You are concerned about your son’s needs and you want to take every precaution to protect him from physical harm. Birds and animals do the same for their offspring. The thing which makes human parents different is their ability to join with God in the creative process, not only in bringing a child into the world but in leading him to become a new person in Jesus Christ so that he may live in the image of God. The greatest gift you can give him will be a right attitude toward God and his fellowman; the greatest protection you can offer will be against wrong attitudes which would prejudice his mind against others or even against God.

Only a short while ago you were a carefree boy. Then you became a young man out on your own, going where you pleased when you pleased. This was difficult to accept for we had thought you would be more dependent upon us and were not prepared to share you so much with your friends, your school, and your world. Now others have come to take first place in your life and to change it; first, the girl of your dreams, then this tiny infant, who is doing so much to challenge the best in you.

You are a man! And you are proving it, not by artificial, immature attempts which young men sometimes pursue, but by the way you are assuming responsibility, and by the way you are “thinking life through.” Make these thoughts clear, for you now hold the destiny of your son. Just remember, He trust you, Daddy!

Education for the Indians

Before the coming of the Mennonites to the Chaco, the Indians could not read or write and had no real desire to do so. They were nomads wandering from place to place much the same as their forefathers had done for hundreds of years. However, when the Mennonites began settling in 1927, a new culture was presented to them.

As the missionaries began to work with the Indians, they introduced the concept of education as well as the gospel. Today, just 30 years after the first real efforts of Indian colonization was begun, over 1,000 Indian children are in school.

At present there are over 30 Indian schools with 30 of the 42 teachers being Indians. The teachers learned Spanish as adults and now Spanish is taught beginning in the first grade. It is important for the Indians to learn Spanish because the government of Paraguay does not recognize the Indians as responsible citizens unless they know Spanish.

Their own tribal languages continue to be learned in the homes, but will be their secondary language. Previously the textbooks were written in the tribal languages, but through the efforts of Hans Wiens, one of the leading Mennonite Brethren men in South America, this has changed, and the development of the schools has received the approval of the Ministry of Education.

The schools are unique in that at present they have only grades one to four. Future plans call for adding higher grades as fast as the budget and supply of teachers permit. The teachers themselves are still learning. Many of them have not studied beyond the level of the sixth grade.

Education for the adult Indian is also offered. They are eager to learn because education can help them in many ways. By learning to read, write, and do mathematical problems, they can do their own marketing and estimate their costs and profits. They can also plan to get the best use of their land and natural resources.

One big advantage of the schools is that it has helped to develop leaders for the Indian churches. Special courses are also offered to the men to make them qualified to preach. This school for pastors and church workers moves about the various settlements and is taught by the missionaries. They are eager students and have even learned to sing hymns in four-part harmony so they can sing “like the Mennonites.”

Today there are over 2,000 baptized Indian believers in the Chulupie and Lengua tribes.

As is the case in many places in the world today, there is also a drive among the Indians to be recognized as first-class citizens. When they came out of the bush, they were hired as laborers by the Mennonites. Today many of them have their own land, have the opportunity to get an education, and have a voice in the settlement program which directly affects their future.
Beach-Houses

There are people who do everything except the one thing, the will of God. Once Jesus asked, "Who is my mother, and who are my brothers?" And He answered, "Whoever does the will of my Father in heaven." Those who have obeyed God best are closest to Jesus. At the close of Jesus' manifesto, the Sermon on the Mount, He warns that some will say Lord, Lord, but will never get around to action. More and more serious young people are tired of talk. Action is needed. The will of God as expressed by Jesus must be lived so others can see what the kingdom of God looks like.

But action is not enough either. It must be the right kind. It must be action that is motivated and directed by Jesus Christ. Individualistic deeds and programs out of step with God are wicked. The cruelest words of Jesus went to those who did good things, but on their own. Jesus said, "I never knew you," because they did not get their plans from Him. The shocking thing is that they thought they did. They had a list of all they did, great sermons preached, unusual miracles performed, tough demons driven out. But Christ replied, "We've never met." The will of God is not replaced by mighty works.

The marks of discipleship can be seen on a man as easily as ripe apples on a tree. Fruits of the Spirit are first of all fruits of character. They are love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control. If these are not present in us, we do not belong to His movement. It is as simple as that and as serious as that. He will not accept great results in place of a heart that belongs to Him. No words on the day of judgment will be so final as these, "I never knew you."

Every man is building something. Jesus wants it built on the right foundation. A house on sand looks as good as one on rock, at first. But it does not last. Jesus' teachings must be heard and practiced. To hear and not do is as foolish as building an apartment on beach sand. To do what we hear Jesus say is as wise as building on bedrock. Jesus anticipated sand-builders. He does not give them a building permit. "Your house will crash," He warns. The comparison is not between the man who heard and he who didn't, but between the man who hears and acts and the one who doesn't.

By Still Waters

"He [Holy Spirit] will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment" (Jn. 16:8).

Sometimes we forget that we cannot convince any person of sin. Only the Holy Spirit using the Word of God can give a clear understanding of what sin is and what its consequences are. Our preaching or personal encounter is dependent on the Holy Spirit who does His work through us. Since this is true several things are important.

First, we must realize how helpless we are in ourselves. As long as we struggle by ourselves in the attempt to point out sin we make people feel frustrated, pressured, and even antagonistic. What a difference we sense when the Holy Spirit does His work. He works an inner work of grace.

Second, we must be sure that we are in a relation to God which permits the Holy Spirit to do His work through us. God longs to do His work through us. He can do His work only through those whom He indwells. But for Him to indwell us we must allow Him to root out every kind of impurity and place within us the fullness of Christ.

Third, the primary thing which the Holy Spirit convicts the believer of is not the sin of stealing or adultery or drunkenness or worldliness, but the sin of not believing on Jesus Christ. After one accepts Christ He convicts of all which is not Christlike.

Only Believe

By Lorie C. Gooding

They who believe will call, and He shall answer, but only as He will. If He should send darkness for light, and night for day, and pain for rest, they are His gifts. Take them and trust, because His love is wiser than our wisdom is. All things are possible. The thorny branch may bear a flower of surpassing beauty. Light is more sweet to those who have known darkness, and day more welcome after weary night. All things are possible. His Presence changes stones into bread and water into wine. He asks not strength nor skill, wisdom nor labor, but faith as meager as a mustard seed, saying that faith may be a mountain-mover, and all things are possible if ye will believe.
Will Wealth Determine Direction?

James conveys a current warning in James 2:1-7. He warns against treating one, because of wealth, any different than the poor. Says James, "For do notice, my brothers, that God chose poor men, whose only wealth was their faith, and made them heirs to the kingdom promised to those who love him. . . . Look around you. Isn’t it the rich who are always trying to ‘boss’ you? . . . Isn’t it usually the rich who blaspheme the glorious name by which you are known?"

Unless drastic change takes place, the direction of the church in the next few decades may well be determined more by money than by theology. More and more it seems that those with wealth wield growing power particularly at the local level. This has denominational dimensions also.

One of the real dangers for the church in every age is that belief and behavior are determined by something other than theology based upon Scripture. Politics, materialism, secularism, nationalism, the mass media, and numerous other isms or stimuli can so easily assume a more important part in what we think and do than what we claim to believe. And in an age of affluence money provides a powerful possibility.

For some time the church was headed for trouble here. Often wealth determined what kind of church building was built. Wealth has selected the kind of organ, if any, that was installed. Carpet, colored windows, and other internal furnishings were added according to financial strength. The theology of simplicity, of worship, and of stewardship found little focus on such decisions the last few decades.

But growing wealth not only shows up in the amount of cold concrete and colored windows but also in attitudes toward spiritual and social concern. Jesus points this out in the Gospels and also in Revelation. It also seems clear that as wealth increases many who are inclined to be very venturesome and open to new methods of moneymaking and spending, become more and more closed to the new, different, and venturesome in meeting man’s spiritual and material needs! That is, those most open to the latest methods of work and material progress often become the strongest advocates of status quo in the life and work of the church.

Probably many reasons exist for such an attitude. Certainly Christ’s words always are a tremendous threat to those who find any security in wealth or the things which go with wealth — status, prestige, position, and playing God. Then too, when everything is going well, any change is threatening. The more accumulated the more accumulations must be protected. Or to put it another way, the more we possess the more law and order we need to protect our possessions.

Finally, what happens is that wealth determines our direction in thought and action. There is selective obedience. Those of us with wealth may emphasize "evangelism" or "personal experience," or "preaching the simple gospel." All these are essential. But they can be stressed at the expense of the hard sayings of the gospel about justice and mercy. Or we fight for those things which protect what we have. Anything which protects this gets our support. Anything which threatens our gain gets only our criticism and ostracism. Or we may give with strings attached.

This is not to say that persons who wield wealth will not give to good causes. The point is that some will give only or largely to those causes which please and protect them, perhaps even giving them a feeling that their finances are used to maintain the faith. Such may use wealth to support the church or groups which will jump when they speak. They may support the pastor only as long as he speaks and moves the way they want. Such may withhold their wealth and bring pressure upon all who do not see things as they see them. In this way those of wealth may play God.

Individualism rather than brotherhood takes over. Because of the ability to build big houses and bank accounts some assume they have individually also the ability to determine the direction of the congregation and church. So the power of wealth may do more to shape the churches’ stance on all kinds of issues than those who give themselves to prayer and the ministry of the Word.

And the question is not whether persons with wealth should be condemned or admired, shoved aside or used. The real question before Christendom is will persons, because of wealth, also play God? And this may be the real reason why Jesus said it is so difficult for the rich to enter the kingdom.

Will those with wealth respect and honor the brother of low degree and the brotherhood at large, or will they with their money, by support or lack of support, seek to determine the direction and thinking of the church? Will such put preachers in and out of pulpits? Will such put financial pressures upon the church and its organizations so that leaders will yield to them against their own spiritual discernment and biblical understanding?

There always was and always will be the temptation to place persons in influential positions and to take a disproportionate amount of counsel from them because of their wealth. But in the work of the church more is needed than this kind of success.

Thank God there are many who have other spiritual qualifications along with the power to gain wealth. The church would be lean spiritually and financially without them. It is hoped the concern of this writing really refers to very few. Yet now is the time for warning and the danger remains, a hundredfold more serious today, that wealth places anyone in the temptation to play God over persons and positions. Yes, James’s warning is current today. — D.

Mission '70, God's Spirit, and You

By Jim Boyts

To help design and build bridges out of walls, you are needed. As the seventies open on a revolutionary scene, every Christian must respond in the most Christlike manner possible. The mission outreach of the Christian church is in the line of fire right now — both in terms of believing and doing.

A chance to get involved. In recent years Mennonite Board of Missions personnel have made a concentrated effort to more directly involve the general public in its annual meetings. A special invitation has been given to lay people, including women and youth. Young people are essential — it is through their awareness and candidness that mission assumes a new vitality and a new dimension. In many areas the cutting edge of our work relates to youth, so why not involve them in the very heart of our planning?

Over 2,000 people participated in Mission '69. It proved to be worthwhile, enlightening, informative, and spiritually rewarding for many. "But why should I attend this year?" you ask.

Today God’s Spirit is working in myriad ways throughout the Mennonite Church. Without the presence of that Spirit we believe Mission '70 will be a waste of time and money. If God’s Spirit lives within you, then you have at least four important elements to share with others in the mission outreach of the church:

- His Spirit
- Your unique talents
- Your God-given spiritual gifts, and
- Your uniqueness as an individual.

Young and old, book-learned or experience-oriented, man or woman — it is imperative that we really come together en masse to earnestly worship, work, and fellowship in each other’s company.

Time schedule and new format for delegate sessions. How will you be involved and heard at Mission '70? First, the format has been shifted. Instead of the usual business sessions prior to the public sessions, this year the Board Members and delegates will convene for one day only — Thursday, July 2. At that time they will simply air the issues to be considered during the Friday and Saturday public sessions that will in turn be carried over to the executive sessions the following Monday and Tuesday.

Goals for Mission '70.
1. To help the individual see that he is God’s person for the spot.
2. To help churches, individually and collectively, find and develop their full potential in the mission for Christ.
3. To experience “The Spirit of God . . . upon me” in relation to myself — to God — to my brothers.

Beginning Thursday evening, the first general session zeroes in on the theme for our two-and-one-half days together. During the closing small group leaders’ session at Mission '69, J. D. Graber led a meditation that has caused good vibrations to reecho in my mind many times since. His emphasis was, “Our work, to be valid, must stem from our worship.” This inspiration helped set the mood for our time together this year. We are extremely pleased that Brother Graber, representing many years and a variety of depth experiences, will lead off the evening program to stir spirits and thinking. The basic theme is taken from Luke 4:18 and 19 — “The Spirit of the Lord . . . upon me.”

Friday morning, July 3, a worship experience. John Lederach will open the morning session devoted entirely to a worship experience focusing on the basic theme. John will lead a Bible study; several witnesses are to speak briefly; the audience is to be involved in participation; then Ray Keim will challenge us to better understand or even discover our gifts and talents. We then move into small groups of 12 to 15 participants each called “Strategy Groups” to talk specifically about the morning input.

Following lunch, “Flashes of Action.” “Flashes of Action” are four-minute vignettes — short presentations to expose the audience to many facets of the Board’s mission program around the world. Following ten flashes of action utilizing both sides of the stage (along with a timer), reports from the Thursday session will identify current issues. These will be shared in a brief 20-minute period as the specific input for a second “Strategy Group” meeting.

Each strategy group will include a delegate or Board Member who will take notes on the discussion. These gleanings will be shared in summary form with the large group the following day and specifically with the executive-administrative committees as they meet July 6 and 7.

“Areas of Action” await attention. Following Strategy Group sessions, time has been blocked out to visit “Areas of Action.” These are rooms filled with displays and ma-materials staffed by personnel from the areas represented. Each flash of action is to have a corresponding area of action. You may check areas where you have specific interests, concerns, or questions to further analyze a program and the personnel involved. This kind of information will better equip you for Friday’s session.

Optional Creative Religious Workshop Considered. The possibility exists of providing a workshop involving youth and adults in a creative religious expression session. Since much of our work is with youth, there should be opportunity to discover what it is that communicates with contemporary youth now.

Friday evening stretches from New York to Los Angeles. Guest speakers Samuel Santos, New York City; Horacio Quinones, Los Angeles — opportunities, challenges, witnessing to “His Spirit’s Work.” Late Friday evening a special youth happening will be held for both high school and college age young people.

Saturday the beat goes on. Friday’s experiences should turn us on for increased involvement in the morning worship and the afternoon work session. We will primarily be sharing those issues raised in the Friday afternoon Strategy Group sessions. With this additional insight we will then convene in a final “Strategy Group” — searching, praying, planning, questioning, discerning.

Saturday evening, everyone a participant. Moving from what we felt was a very warm and exciting experience in Kalona, Iowa, we are planning a total involvement climactic evening. We will assemble to share testimonies of what has happened and where we are going. We want to include special music and a commissioning service. Plans also call for a mass breadbreaking experience. At this point it is urgent that we feel a strong bond of unity.

Yes, there’s more. I haven’t begun to mention Lowell and Miriam Byler leading the music, warm Pennsylvania hospitality, Friday morning prayer breakfasts, a wide variety of youth activities, and delegates and Board Members visiting Franconia churches on July 5. Having read this, you say, “Well, it looks like a good program, but I’m still not sure how important it is that I be there.”

Consider this. I believe the New Testament teachings on prayer suggest that when we are better informed and more deeply involved our prayers become much more specific and therefore more effective. However, we recognize that it is impossible for everyone to attend. For those who cannot, we request your prayers between now and Mission ’70 and particularly during the first week of July. We ask everyone to join in our prayers that God’s Spirit will visit us in a mighty and powerful way, in ways that we do not now anticipate, in ways that are beyond our imagination. For this we thank you.

“As I See It”

As I see it, mankind will soon be facing the most serious and frightening crisis since the beginning of time. Ecologists are now telling us that we are well on the way toward polluting ourselves out of existence within the next ten to fifteen years. Furthermore, unless there are some drastic immediate reversals in our present trends, the time may have already passed for us to prevent this calamity.

I am concerned because the majority of us who live in rural areas of America are totally unaware of the severity of the situation which is plaguing our cities. Because it is a slow process, we are unaware of the irreparable damage we are doing to our rivers, air, and to the millions of living organisms that form a delicate balance making life possible.

I am concerned because so little seems to be done. We talk about defeating the “enemy” in Vietnam when a far greater enemy is drowning us in a stagnating sea of pollution.

Perhaps I am most concerned because we as Christians have somehow placed this issue outside the realm of our Christian responsibility. We find it easier to speak out on Vietnam, violence in the streets, or racial discrimination. But we leave the problem of pollution to others much as though it is not a spiritual or uniquely Christian problem.

This is where I take my stand. In all of creation, God Himself has established the natural laws which control and maintain those balances. But man in his intelligence and technology is constantly in the process of blatantly violating these laws. To me this is sin.

If perchance we should say, and rightly so, that the Christian’s responsibility (second only to allegiance to God) is to love and serve his fellowman, certainly a vital role one then has is to help preserve and maintain a viable environment. Thus I feel a responsibility both to God and my fellowman, to do all I can to not only deter but reverse our present rate of pollution.

Certainly we can all act by ensuring that our automobile engines and home furnaces are functioning properly and by sanitary disposal of all our wastes. But I maintain that we also have a responsibility to speak to those in authority. We are quick to act in this way on our own behalf (i.e., our requests for alternative military service) how much more should we speak out for the rights of our posterity and fellowman. — Frank R. King, Kalona, Iowa.

A Bleak Future for Black Rhodesians

By Omar Eby

"Rhodesia has peace and prosperity with a superb climate, friendly people, lovely homes, modern shops, first-class schools, and hospitals. There is little or no unemployment; the nation has no debt and is one of the few nations on the globe that hasn't received or asked for foreign aid from the United States. The taxes in Rhodesia are among the lowest in the world. The cost of living is not only reasonable but is much lower than in any other democratic nation.

"There is tremendous agricultural production in Rhodesia—tobacco, maize, sugar, cotton, tea, coffee, citrus... splendid ranches... countless industries flourishing... commerce booming in spite of the sanctions... not only is Rhodesia the most progressive nation in all of Africa, it is a shining example of democracy in action. This country has more than usual to offer, in sight-seeing and vacation."

It reads like the copy of a brochure prepared by a Rhodesian tourist association, or a circular baiting likely immigrants. And it might easily be a smattering of both, though Dr. Billy James Hargis attributes the words to himself in the lead story of the May 7, 1970, issue of the Christian Crusade Weekly, the mouthpiece of Hargis.

Leading 50 "enthusiastic" Christian Crusaders on a twoweek "Grand Tour of the Holy Land and Rhodesia," (God help the Arabs and the Africans!) Hargis, a physical and spiritual blending of Jackie Gleason and George Wallace, had nothing but praise for Ian Smith's Rhodesia.

"God has especially blessed Rhodesia and South Africa," his article bubbles. "Important minerals are in abundance. Gold, chrome, asbestos, coal, nickel, copper, tin... you name it... Rhodesia's got it."

Hargis should remember that all God's gifts were in the African earth long before the white racist governments carved out their empires. Thus, it is not only bad logic, but also rotten theology, to point to the rich land as proof of God's blessing on the nation and its national policies. If one said anything, he might say that the wealth of these lands is God's blessing on the indigenous people, the black Africans.

One should not bother to follow too closely the madness of Hargis and company, for such men, like McIntire, eventually collapse in the morass of their own inflated rhetoric and half-truths. But occasionally one must fill in some facts to give a fuller picture of the situation they describe.

While much of what Hargis reports about Rhodesia is true, like the witches' prophecies to ambitious Macbeth, they are only half-truths. For there is another side to the Rhodesian picture not published in its travel advertisements nor reported by white Christians who do only the standard rounds of game parks and waterfalls "in light executive aircraft to enjoy a thrill they will never forget," and stay in ultramodern hotels, never dipping into the world of the poor, oppressed black Rhodesian. Or if they do make a token gesture to the African community in such nations, it is a condescending preaching tour which sees the African as only a soul to be saved from hell and godless communism.

Some Facts

What then is the full story on Rhodesia? Some facts might help to round out the picture for those who truly want to know what is shaping up in that southern African nation.

White Rhodesia declared its independence from Britain in November 1965, and last month in Salisbury, the capital, the Union Jack was hauled down as the country further declared itself a republic free of the crown. Also at that time, Prime Minister Ian Smith's political party, Rhodesian Front, won all 50 seats in a new Parliament—all 50 white seats that is, for there are also 16 seats in Parliament for black Rhodesians.

On the surface those 16 black seats might be interpreted as a generous gesture of a benign government. But the population figures show what a hoax of representative democracy those 16 token seats are: 240,000 whites get 50 seats and approximately 5 million blacks get 16 seats. And most of the 16 black seats will be filled with conservative tribal chiefs, considered by some of their own people to be frightened stooges of the government.

The next five years for the blacks under Smith's regime in Rhodesia do not hold much promise of equity and freedom. With the white community firmly behind him, Smith seems bent on taking his nation down South Africa's road of apartheid, a diabolically inspired political scheme which forces the separation of the races, with the whites as supreme, naturally.

One should be under no illusion about Smith's personal attitudes towards black Africans, as Newsweek, April 20, 1970, documented. In anger, he led a political gathering in a chorus of a South African folk song, "Baboon, go climb the mountain," to drown out a group of black students singing "God bless Africa."

Other facts about Rhodesia recently appearing in the press center around the Land Tenure Act which intends to re-divide all the land. Half to the whites and half to the Africans. Again that might seem fair, until one recalls the population figures. It means that every white man would get 200 acres, while every black man only 10 acres. As would be expected, and as reported by an independent observer in Salisbury, the fertile farmlands and the booming urban areas, so well described by the Billy James Hargis article, fall in the white domain.

The immensely complex Land Tenure Act has defined all types of situations which would allow for the white masters to keep black servants in the white areas "for purposes of employment," whether at their plantations or in urban centers. But the plight of black women and children in Rhodesia is in question, for husbands and fathers could be separated from them, as is the case in South Africa. Should that happen, let no white Rhodesian self-righteously puzzle over the breakup of the black family in their nation.

An Ecumenical Press Service report from Rhodesia notes that "many mission stations on which hundreds of Africans farm are thus threatened. Most of these occupy land given them 60 years ago by Cecil Rhodes. Also in these mission farms live retired African clergy and their families. Since the farms are in the so-called European areas, the churches would have to evict men and women and children who have known no other home. One estimate put these church-owned properties at 400,000 acres, supporting between 60,000 and 75,000 persons."

"White missionaries living on mission stations in the Tribal Trust Lands would be allowed to continue work among Africans only with the permission of a government minister. Those working in African townships in urban centers would likewise need a government certificate."

It is perhaps too late to question the wisdom of missions holding such large estates—that might have been done 10 years ago when they saw the direction the country was headed politically, and some attempt made at getting the land into the hands of nationals, privately or in communes, such as Tanzania's Ujamaa villages. But now, the missionaries are caught, and should they leave Rhodesia in protest of the government's racist policies, the mission lands would automatically revert to the government, enriching the whites that much more.

These then are some of the facts about Rhodesia which Billy James fails to include in his ebullient report which conveys Prime Minister Smith's call "upon the American people to be in sympathy with Rhodesia's quest for freedom and to extend hands of friendship across the Atlantic in common bonds of Christian freedom. (Italics mine.)

"Many Americans, including your writer," Hargis continues, referring to himself, "felt that the election of President Richard Nixon would assure better relationship with Rhodesia since it was so apparent that the Kennedy-Johnson attitude towards Rhodesia was un-American, illegal, and certainly unchristian. President Johnson arbitrarily imposed economic sanctions against Rhodesia in spite of the fact that this nation is one of our most trusted Christian allies in the fight against communism."

There one has it—that terrible religious recipe of nationalism, militarism, fundamentalism, with a heavy dash of racism—which supports the rich against the poor, the free against the oppressed, the white against the black. And it's all served up with a thick sauce of scriptural distortions.

Churches Protest

"The only organized force standing in the way of these latest constitutional innovations is the Christian churches (with the exception of the Dutch Reformed which supports separate development)," the EPS reports.

Rhodesian Catholic bishops led the way by informing the Smith government that if the provisions of the Land Tenure Act that bar racial association for religious work are not declared null, they would close all the church's schools, hospitals, orphanages, homes for the aged, and other social welfare institutions in the country. Later a joint conference of Christian churches decided that they would refuse to register as newly required to own or occupy land in either of the so-called European or so-called African areas.

There is no Mennonite church or mission in Rhodesia. But our good sister church, the Brethren in Christ, have a large mission, with 50 missionaries at a half dozen stations, working at hospitals, schools, Bible institutes, and bookrooms in addition to evangelism. Recently the first black Rhodesian, P. M. Kumalo, was elected as bishop of the Rhodesian Brethren in Christ church.

Undoubtedly, they too will feel the squeeze of Mr. Smith's constitution and the Land Tenure Act, and need to give witness both in the African and European communities where they stand on such principles. We offer no advice, save to underscore what they themselves know, that as evangelical peacemakers, they must look on the present crisis as a God-given occasion to demonstrate the social relevance of the evangelical commitment, and not read too many Billy James Hargis reports to erode their convictions for compassion and justice. The North American Mennonite churches will need to stand with the Brethren in Christ church in prayer during these next years as it witnesses by word and deed in Rhodesia.

Many Mennonites, like their common fellow evangelicals, generally say that the church shouldn't interfere with politics, particularly if they are Republican politics. In the case of the churches in Rhodesia speaking to their government, we should be able to align ourselves with their view. Anticipating the charge that the church was interfering in politics, the Rhodesian church leaders said that the reverse is actually the case: government was interfering with religion by introducing racial laws that conflicted with the Christian faith.

As is the case with many African countries, the Rhodesian Christian missions and churches operate many of the educational institutions, providing the teachers and some maintenance and equipment. The government, in turn, sets the curriculum and pays teachers’ salaries. In Rhodesia, there are approximately 3,300 mission schools run for 700,000 black pupils.

These mission schools will feel the immediate brunt of the new Smith government come January 1971, when it will cut 5 percent from the salaries paid to the mission school teachers. To make up the difference, the missions will need to raise school fees, which throws the hardship on to the parents, most of whom are peasants.

The United Methodist Church’s Rhodesia Area has hinted that it will close its schools, dismissing pupils and teachers alike. “The result will be that thousands of African youngsters will roam the streets and countryside idle, unemployed, and lacking opportunities for further education. This, coupled with the existing mass unemployment, is the seedbed of revolution,” a Methodist bishop stated.

“The government also seems determined to change the shape of secondary education,” the EPS report notes. “Stated plans are that only one out of every eight students finishing primary school will go to a four-year secondary school (at present one in every six does). New two-year junior secondary schools would be created with a bias towards vocational training. Why train children in academic studies when there are no jobs for them? it is argued. Actually the government is unwilling to increase the number of jobs open even to the vocationally trained, favoring white immigrants instead.”

This then is the Rhodesia Billy James Hargis would have us support. But it is precisely because Rhodesia claims to be Christian and to uphold Christian civilization that we must condemn the oppressive action of the Smith regime in Rhodesia for violating simple human rights. Likewise we must condemn such supporters of Rhodesia as men like Hargis. But condemnation is not enough; there must also be reconciliation.

While the Brethren in Christ work at reconciliation in Rhodesia, the Peace Section of the Mennonite Central Committee could sponsor one or two persons to join the Hargis-led Rhodesian tour, asking all the “wrong” questions and making the “wrong” observations while they attempt a spiritual rap with Billy James and his cohorts. The Tour Department of the Christian Crusade, of which Hargis is founder and director, has a tour of Rhodesia in the making for September 1970 and three for 1971. Perhaps this would be a program for the Schowalter Foundation which seeks constantly for robust ventures in Christian witness to support financially. It would cost less than $1,000 per person, according to Hargis.

What You Say, You Are!

The average person spends 13 years of his life talking. On the average, you produce 18,000 words a day. That’s equivalent to a book of 54 pages.

In a year’s time you talk enough to fill 66 books of 800 pages each. It would take a twelve-foot shelf to hold them. For a lifetime of talking that shelf would grow to be three lengths of a football field.

And for most of us, what dreary reading those volumes would contain! What tedious listening if all our speech were played back for us!

Some scientists have suggested that might be possible. “The universe is like a gigantic tape recorder,” they say. “Every vibration is recorded; every sound is stored away and could be picked up, amplified, and heard. From Cain’s murderous blow and Abel’s plea for help down to those words of yesterday you’d love to take back.”

Some psychologists have warned us that our subconscious is a far more efficient recording secretary. It codes and stores away every thought and word ready for instant playback, if turned on by the right drug or electrical impulse.

If that were possible, we’d all stand in line for shock treatments that could erase from our minds the tremendous backlog of words we wish we’d never said.

Who could stand to listen to a week’s worth of their own talk? Very few.

What a shock it would be! And the greatest shock would be the simple realization that—

We are not what we say we are, but what we say, we are!

We should know that already, but most of us have automatic defenses against such a conclusion.

“I didn’t mean that; I was just talking,” we say to cover up a slip of the tongue.

“I just said that; you know me. I don’t really feel that way,” we may explain in the embarrassment that follows a few bitter or hasty words.

Or we may insist, “I didn’t mean that at all; you’ve got to take me by what I mean, not by what I say.” But if we don’t mean what we say, why say it?

Let’s face it. “A slip of the tongue” is just that. The tongue let the thoughts slip out.

That’s why it’s serious. As Ben Franklin observed, “A slip of the foot you may soon recover, but a slip of the tongue you may never get over.”

When “your speech betrays you,” doesn’t it betray you by revealing the real you?

Often it’s in those unguarded moments when we forget to keep our front up that the listener can catch a quick glimpse of what’s in back—the speaker’s real self.

What you say, you are!
By David Augsburger

Talk is not cheap. Speech is one of man’s most priceless possessions. It can be cheapened by man’s misuse or abuse. But rightly used it is of most incomparable worth.

How a man values, selects, and controls his words reveals his true character.

A doctor is not the only person who judges another’s health by the condition of his tongue! Most people judge you by your words.

Recognizing that fact, Lincoln once said, “It is better to remain silent and be thought a fool than to speak out and remove all doubt.”

There is much that can be said in praise of silence, especially when one has nothing to say.

But what we are inevitably comes out. In words first and then in deeds. And men inevitably judge you by what they hear.

Sir Walter Raleigh once observed, “Men more often make their fortune by their tongues than by their virtues; and more often lose their fortunes by their tongues than by their vices.”

But that was only a shallow observation. A man’s tongue reveals his virtue, and an undisciplined tongue is a vice. A man can be judged by the words out of his own mouth. That’s the hard truth Jesus Christ taught without mincing words. Listen!

A tree is known by its fruit.
Every good tree bears good fruit.
Every rotten tree produces poor fruit.
You must either make the tree good and the fruit good, Or make the tree bad and the fruit bad.
For a tree is known by its fruit.

How can you say good things out of your evil hearts?
For the mouth speaks what the heart contains.
A good man, out of the good treasure in his heart, Says good things!
And a wicked man, out of the wicked things in his heart, Says wicked things!
I tell you, therefore, that on the day of judgment, Men will have to give an account

For every thoughtless word . . . spoken.
For . . . by your words you will be acquitted,
And . . . by your words you will be condemned.

—Mt. 7:16, 17; 12:33-37, Norlie.

You are being judged by your words.
And isn’t that fair to you? Look how easily you can read the state of another man’s heart through the words he speaks. “He’s only saying what’s in his heart,” you say. (You’re quoting Jesus.) You don’t have to talk to a man long before you know whether he has a mind that is pure or dirty, kind or cruel, clean or cloudy in thought. Of course, others are constantly revealing themselves to you, and you judge them by their words.

Then what about you? What about your speech?
And be warned. It’s the words spoken in an unguarded moment, without much thought, that can reveal the real you.

The careful, thoughtful words are usually planned to conceal you; they generally carry a touch of calculated hypocrisy. You are on guard. What you say and how you say it are planned cautiously.

A man can be fine and noble in public, but coarse and crude in private.

He may be charming and courteous when among friends, but irritable and unkind at home.

We may be tactful and pleasing when in control, but in anger? Then we say what we really think, what we often wanted to say, but knew it was unwise. No amount of insisting, “I didn’t mean it; I wasn’t serious,” can undo it. What is said, is said.

The “idle words,” Jesus said—the purposeless words that tumble out, the thoughtless words that spill out, the angry words that lash—these will appear with us at the day of judgment!

A man’s character can be known from his words.
What about your speech?
What does it reveal about you?
What if this week’s words were recorded and replayed for you now?
Would you care to be judged by them?
You were! By all those about you!
You will be! Someday the touch of God may release the stored up records of your words and thoughts—and then, justice will be done.

Out of our own mouths, we will be judged.
By our own idle words, we will be condemned.
Unless!

Unless something has been done about those speech patterns, about that language, about the words that you and I use every day.

Unless we have taken seriously these words from God’s Word.

“Let there be no more foul language, but good words instead—words suitable for the occasion, which God can use to help other people . . . Let there be no more resentment, no more anger or temper, no more violent self-assertiveness, no more slander and no more malicious remarks. Be kind to one another; be understanding. Be as ready to forgive others as God for Christ’s sake has forgiven you” (Eph. 4:29, 31, 32, Phillips).*

That calls for a change of speech that comes from a change of heart.

Only a change of heart can change the tongue.
Have you let God enter, cleanse, and change your heart?
Give up your own way of life, own up to the real problems in your life, look up to Him . . . for His new life in you.
Let God change your heart.
Nothing else can change your words.

What you say, you are!—David Augsburger, Harrisonburg, Va., delivered this message over the Mennonite Hour radio broadcast.

The Primary Need of the Church

Ed. note: These responses, along with the last two weeks' responses, were selected from letters written by persons who answered an editorial which asked the question, "What is the primary need of the church as you see it?"

Christ Preeminent

That in all things He, the foundation, the builder, the redeemer, the purchaser, might have the preeminence (Col. 1:18). — Ursula Miller, Protection, Kan.

Able Leaders

Churches always progressed or retrogressed with their leaders.

Our teaching system does not indoctrinate our people. Remedy: Apostolic shepherding, pastoring, teaching, discipling, (Acts 20:28) in home, church, and school; instead of secular education, and International Lesson Series, which were never designed to indoctrinate. — Shem Peachey, Lititz, Pa.

Love for Christ

A little girl said she was thankful for erasers to erase her mistakes. Probably the greatest need of the church today is to have a proper love and appreciation for what Jesus did for us on the cross. My appreciation will determine my commitment and obedience to my Lord. Most of our individual and church problems stem from a lack of love and unity for Him who died for our sins. — John H. Herr, Jr., Holtwood, Pa.

Anticipate Christ's Coming

The church needs to begin living in real anticipation of Christ's coming, and having this hope, purify herself even as He is pure. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. — Mrs. Elbert Yoder, West Liberty, Ohio.

Love for Scripture

The primary need of the church today is for more men and women who use the Word of God to the extent that it becomes a part of them. We have a rather unique expression in Acts 19:20: "So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed." The secret of this growth was because it was loved and appreciated by those who heard it. We note in Acts 19:18, 19, it effected a change of life. Oh, for more men with feeling like the psalmist in Psalm 119:97, "Oh how love I thy law! it is my meditation all the day." — James Martin, New Holland, Pa.

Life Needed

What is the primary need of a man drowning in a pool? Let's ask him. "Sir, would you like warmer water, chlorinated water, or the sides of the pool painted in soft blue?" He gasps, "I need life and breath." So the need of the church is also for life and breath. "and this life is in his Son" (I Jn. 5:11). Let the church be committed to Christ, then evangelization, social concern, and brotherly love will follow. — Clayton Hofstetter, Dalton, Ohio.

Uphold Christ

If the church of Christ is to be spared of losing its members to worldly conformity, its societies and entertainments and its pride, the church needs teachers and preachers who uphold the living of Christ and the apostles, not condoning the bringing in of worldly fads. If the latter would be warned that they would lose their membership in its continuance, the sincere in heart would be strengthened and result in a stronger church. The preachers should be tested for conviction. — L. C. Garber, Goshen, Ind.

Separation

Get the world out of the church and put Christ back in. The church is to be in the world, but not of the world.

Romans 12:2, "Be not conformed to this world."

2 Corinthians 6:17, "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate."

James 1:27, "To keep himself unspotted from the world."

Jeremiah 6:16, "Thus saith the Lord... ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein."

Isaiah 58:1, "Cry aloud, spare not." — Amos W. Strite, Hagerstown, Md.

Exposure to the Word

The primary need of the church today is an exposure to the Word of God. Mennonites have taken so many things for granted for so long that we have departed from the realization of the need for a thorough knowledge of and close adherence to the Word of God. Many no longer believe that salvation is something that needs to be worked at in cooperation with God according to His Word. Philippians 2:12-15. — Paul H. Hege, Gettysburg, Pa.
This is where the excitement is going to be in the Mennonite Church during the July 4 weekend. Shouldn’t it be exciting when Christians open up to the Holy Spirit in a new way?

This is where the attention of the Mennonite Church is going to center during the July 4 weekend. Hundreds of Mennonites from all corners of the world will be there – from all over North America: California, Texas, Canada, New York, Arizona, the mid-west; missionaries from India, Argentina, Brazil, Europe, Africa, etc.

This is where youth will have a chance to express their views to each other and to their elders. In the Strategy groups there will be consideration, sharing, listening, praying – a sincere, open search for what the Spirit is saying.

This is where there will be opportunity for youth to fellowship with their peers. Special activities are being planned for the extra energy which youth possess.
Brother Ben and Me—
And Sunday School

By Hal Lund

I can’t understand Brother Ben. He seems to actually enjoy these Sunday school lessons in The Acts. He even studies his lessons before class, and he’s not the teacher, either. Often he mentions some new idea that he gained from his study.

I seldom read the lesson before class because I think we should be paying more attention to modern problems. We need to meet the needs of people. There’s poverty, which we should discuss more. The race problem keeps plaguing us. Just getting along with other church members is hard enough. Of course, I think we need to ask God’s help in understanding these problems.

When we discuss them in class, Brother Ben often has an illustration from the Bible to fit into the discussion. He’s rather naive—he seems to think the early church had something to say about poverty, race problems, and just getting along together.

Sometimes I wonder if he doesn’t stretch his imagination a little. I don’t recall many of the examples he uses, but I think I know the Bible fairly well. After all, I’ve attended Sunday school regularly for years, and we’ve gone over these Scriptures at least four times before.

Brother Ben says that discussing modern problems is fine, but he thinks we need to work at solving them, too. He has rather strange ideas about that, like contributing at least the suggested minimum for the Compassion Fund of the Minority Ministries Council. He thinks we should also contribute more to the Mission Board and Mennonite Central Committee. That would be hard for me to do just now — my older son turned sixteen last month and that meant buying another car (and he does like his Mustang).

But the most unusual thing about Brother Ben is that he keeps saying we can personally help solve these problems. One evening each week he helps an illiterate adult from Westside learn to read so this man can finish his training and get a job. Ben and his wife even entertain the man and his family in their home sometimes — as though they are friends.

Well, now we’re talking about studying Genesis for the next quarter. What good was it do me to hear again the stories of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob? I’ve heard them at least four times before, not counting the Bible stories my mother read to me as a child. Now a current problem, like what to do when your neighbor digs his new well close to your property line and your own well gets weak (now I can’t even water the lawn every evening), or what to do about your children’s jealousies (our older son says we get his young brother everything the child wants) — these would be practical problems to discuss. No, I doubt that Genesis can open up any such discussions. But Brother Ben will probably try to help us find “an abiding principle,” as he says, even from the patriarchs.

I hear rumors that we may take a preliminary test on Genesis just before studying it, then again at the end of the quarter. The test would be in two parts, one on the facts, the other relating the facts to theological themes of the Bible. Now that’s taking Sunday school too far — expecting us laymen to have that kind of knowledge. (Perhaps I’ll not be able to be there when the test is given.)

But I do wish we would study something more modern, something I’m not so familiar with. Maybe Sunday school would be more interesting.

Missions Today

Seeing Things
From the Other End

By Ivan Kauffmann

In this modern age it is unusual for a pastor to serve the same congregation for 20 years or more. Not that I felt odd in doing so, but in that span of time I was becoming less aggressive in performing my pastoral tasks. Obviously a change was in order.

After prayerful counsel and consideration with my family, the congregation, and other trusted friends, I was granted a leave of absence from the pastorate at Hopedale, Illinois. After further consideration it was arranged for our family to move to Elkhart, Indiana, where I would serve as Acting Secretary of Information Services with the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities.

In spite of a few inconveniences, a good many feelings of apprehension, and the rather reluctant consent of those we left behind, it has been a good year. God has blessed in many ways:
For me it has been a time of revitalization, the challenge of a new job in a new setting. A change of routine and schedule has been good medicine for an anemic pastor.

For the family it has been a wealth of new experiences— an opportunity to meet new neighbors in a new community; to get acquainted with Bethany Christian High School; to become part of an exciting fellowship at Belmont Mennonite Church.

It has been a time of evaluation. The Hopedale congregation and I have had ample time and opportunity to look more objectively at each other and grow to a new understanding of our tasks.

It has been a time of growth. Because of this year's experience I better understand our church institutions. I trust that the Mission Board better understands pastors and congregations because of me.

I would encourage more exchange of personnel within the church. More people should see things from the other end:

— Pastors and agency administrators could exchange jobs for a year;

— Doctors and nurses could serve overseas or in a large city hospital for a short term;

— Individuals and/or couples could serve in VS a year or two;

— Public school teachers could trade places with church school teachers for a year (with school boards permitting);

— Pastors and writers could exchange spots temporarily to experiment with a different form of communication in a new setting;

— Members of nearby congregations could exchange places and responsibilities for a year.

This is not a proposal to "upset the fruit basket" just for the fun of it. Rather, this would be one way to develop more understanding and appreciation for other persons and their tasks while discovering and developing the unused gifts of many persons. This would be an effective way to unite our efforts more as a team in the church's mission.

I'm thankful for the blessings of this year and I recommend this experience to others. The church could serve more effectively if more of its people could occasionally see things from the other end.

Book Shelf

Books reviewed here may be purchased from your local Provident Bookstore, or from Provident Bookstore, Scottsdale, Pa. 15683.

Your Child and You by Caroline Clark and Garry Cleveland Myers. Hewitt House. 1969. 224 pp. $4.95.

This book is very interesting, easy to read, and highly practical. I especially like the way it deals with some ideas one rarely even considers. The authors understand children and how parents can relate to them in joyous living. They believe that only disciplined children are happy and feel worthwhile to live as a child. Also they believe a preschool child "is able to think far more than most of us have supposed he can."

This is a book to keep handy like a cookbook. You may need the fresh encouragement these authors can give you. Their approach is positive.

Parents will recognize the authors as editors of Highlights for Children. Excellent for church libraries. — Alta Erb.

In reading this volume I am reminded of another book title, The Man Nobody Knows. It is extremely important for teachers, pastors, and students to look at Jesus today through the perspective of these pages. Too many of us really do not know the human-divine Jesus who lives in the pages of the New Testament. We are at a loss to explain His reaction to the foreign woman with a demon-possessed daughter. We cannot understand why John the Bap*tist sent men to ask Jesus if He really was the Messiah. We are hard put to understand why Judas would betray Jesus. Is there really a great similarity between Judas and Paul?*

I would highly recommend this book. The author used a quiet conservative approach to the biblical record. He has provided a provocative, enlightening discussion. Pastors cannot afford to be without this help in preaching to today's youth and adults. Fine for church libraries. — Nelson E. Kaufman.

Please Touch, by Edwin McMahon and Peter Campbell. Sheed and Ward. 1969. 46 pp. $2.95 (paper).

Please Touch is an invitation to look inside, to reflect, to reach toward God and others. God is in the human situation, waiting to be discovered. Trust and love are the stuff of life. To stretch and use what God has given is to glorify God and to celebrate life. The dynamic and the power come from affirming joyously, "God with us."

Words are sparingly used. Each is in its place and heavy with meaning. There are many reflective groupings of words such as: "spirit comes alive when we are made alive by love . . . spirit ebbs away with love's decline" and "the world is charged with the grandeur of God."

The pictures are loaded with meaning. They catch moments of love, surprise, relationship, and community.

The words and pictures invite return for second and third participations. One does not read the book but rather joins the life-love experiences carried by the pages and goes beyond into the byways and detours of one's own choosing.

If cast in the larger context of God as both Creator and Redeemer, it is a delightfully warm human record of life. — Atlee Beechey.

A remarkable account of a rather exciting campus ministry by the Dean of Princeton University Chapel. "It is refreshing to have a 'college report' that is free from the current jargon and abstract analysis of problems and many will welcome this straightforward account of real students — how they think and speak" (From the jacket). Refreshing indeed when placed alongside of much of the current analytical and sometimes cynical descriptions of the religious situation on campus. It is an autobiographical account and personal testimony about ministering to students in real life situations. Lives are touched or changed, the ministry is growing, the status quo is confronted. Leaders desiring to serve this generation of youth and students will profit from the inspiration and outlook of the author.

The major personal, social, religious, academic, and moral questions and problems students face are met. Fine for church libraries. — Virgil Brenneman.

Over 60 percent of the drownings each year result when people who have no intention of getting wet fall into the water from docks, boats, bridges, shores, or pool decks. Frequently they are only a few feet from safety, the American Red Cross reports.

The issue of national moral failure and the question of how the U.S. can admit a mistake were aired before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee as three clergymen appeared to testify on the war in Southeast Asia.

Invited to address the panel, chaired by Sen. William Fulbright (D-Ark.), were Roman Catholic Auxiliary Bishop John J. Dougherty of Newark, N.J.; Dr. John C. Bennett, president of Union (N.Y.) Theological Seminary, and Rabbi Irving Greenberg of Yeshiva University, New York.

After listing the moral effects of the war, the rabbi told the five Senators present that "only those who can admit mistakes and accept the irony and tragedy of the defeat of the assumptions can be trusted with power."

Dr. Bennett said that when it becomes evident that a mistaken policy is continued as "a concession to pride of a nation that has never been defeated, it is time to see even the mistake in a context that calls for moral judgment."

Hymns revolving around the basic Christian theme of hope, the "key word in positive theological thinking today," are being sought by the Hymn Society of America as its major 1970 project.

The Rev. Charles B. Foelsch, chairman of the society's executive committee, said that the response so far by churchmen to the project is generally favorable.

He attributed this to the fact that the "theology of hope" poses a sharp contrast to the negative, short-lived "death of God" concept, adding that "this note of hope ... clammers for expression in new hymns and new tunes for the new decade."

Hymn writers-ministers and laity-are invited to submit new texts on the theme to the society at 475 Riverside Dr., New York, N.Y. 10027, by Oct. 31. A committee of judges will screen the entries and publish an approved list.

New texts may be written in meters common to church hymnals, but may be submitted by the society to composers for new tunes. All accepted hymns will be copyrighted by the society.

A nation — richest and most powerful in world history — mourned, protested, agonized, and debated. The shooting of four Kent University students, coupled with dissent over the Indochina war, brought the U.S. to what the Episcopal bishops of New York called "the deepest crisis in our memory."

Virtually no segment of society was unaffected in early May by the series of events set loose when President Nixon announced the sending of troops into Cambodia.

The antiwar movement, which had languished in 1970, was revived with a new urgency and with the support of many who formerly considered themselves "moderates." New attention focused on student unrest and the role of the academic community in national life escalated.

Membership of the United Methodist Church appears to be down 200,000 and its giving $77 million. United Presbyterian enterprises face possible cutbacks. Unitarian Universalists have had to cut their budget by $1 million. The Episcopalian budget in Pennsylvania is down 23 percent. Catholic dioceses of Boston, New York, Detroit, Tucson stagger under deficits. Financial crisis jeopardizes the existence of the Canadian Council of Churches and it is predicted that in the future Christian denominations will largely disappear and will be replaced by "small intensive" groups according to Harvey Cox.

Every year an estimated 1,000 of the nation's 2.6 million college students commit suicide. Suicide is the number two killer on campus according to studies recently sponsored by the U.S. National Student Association. At the rate of 15 suicides per 100,000, students are killing themselves at twice the rate of their age bracket and well above the 11 per 100,000 rate for the nation as a whole.

The Supreme Court has upheld the constitutionality of a 1967 postal law that permits any private citizen to stop mail-order companies from sending advertisements he considers "erotically arousing or sexually provocative."

The law was challenged by a number of mail-order houses in the Los Angeles area, including some that specialize in the sale of erotic material and sexual paraphernalia.

They charged that the law violated First Amendment rights to communicate, and that orders to strike individuals from their mailing lists would be prohibitively expensive. The removal of each name costs about $51 they stated.

Writing for a unanimous court, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger said the citizen's right "to be left alone outweighs the law's inconvenience and expense to the mailers."

Thus far, some 300,000 persons have invoked the law, which gives the individual absolute discretion in deciding what material is too erotic to accept into his home.

Cliff Dudley, widely known in religious publishing circles, has been named general manager of Creation House, Inc., a new religious book publishing activity with offices in Carol Stream, Wheaton, Ill.

Creation House, Inc., will present its fall list in magazine space and direct mail advertising in June. Cornerstone to Creation House's program is the publication this year of the New American Standard Bible, the product of nine years of translation by evangelical and conservative scholars.

The symbolic 20 millionth copy of Good News for Modern Man, the New Testament in Today's English Version, was presented by the American Bible Society to Mr. and Mrs. James Cash Penney in a ceremony in Bible House, 1695 Broadway, headquarters of the Society.

In receiving the white leather-bound volume, printed in extra-large type, the 94-year-old founder of J. C. Penney Co., gave testimony to his reliance on the Scriptures when he said: "If it hadn't been for the training of my mother and father there would be no J. C. Penney Co. today."

The American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker agency, has completed agreements with the Nigerian government to undertake a million-dollar rehabilitation and reconstruction program in the war-damaged sections of eastern Nigeria.

Roger Fredrickson, Philadelphia director, said the two-year project in Nigeria was designed to bring relief to a number of tribes, in addition to the Ibo of the former Biafra area who suffered as a result of the Nigerian civil war.

The major effort of the program will be a village reconstruction project among the 175 villages in the war-belt zones of South East State. The villages will decide their own priorities for rehabilitation, consulting with Quaker-trained Nigerian counselors, Mr. Fredrickson said.
Youth Team Begins Orientation

On May 30 and 31, 1970, the five persons selected for the North American Youth Team traveling to South America met at Camp Luz near Orrville, Ohio, for a get-acquainted retreat. Ken and Kathryn Seitz of Elkhart, Ind., along with Art and Nova Smoker of Scottsdale, Pa., met with the team as resource persons and retreat leaders.

Team members are Arthur Griffin, Norristown, Pa.; Fred Kauffman, West Point, Neb.; Blanca Ruiz, Grantville, Pa.; and Becky Lehman, Elkhart, Ind.

The retreat took on an informal atmosphere although certain activities were planned in advance. The afternoon of May 30, the group shared highlights from their first 12 years of life, which included descriptions of family background and Christian experience. Another block of time was spent in an exercise to help team members become aware of the process involved in group decision-making.

The evening session included a study of the nature of the task the team has been asked to perform in South America. Information was shared concerning the four Latin countries and those Mennonite churches the team will visit. The evening closed with the film presentation, "A Chairy Tale," which creatively explores interpersonal relationships.

Sunday morning was devoted to corporate worship led by the Smokers. Two groups formed to consider assigned passages of Scripture. After discussing a passage, the message of the Scripture was dramatized. The five team members presented a variation of Christ's parable of the rich young ruler, indicating that they are not going to South America simply to present a polished program of music and drama. Rather, they said, the emphasis needs to be on building personal relationships with individuals in host countries.

Participants at the weekend retreat felt very positive about what was accomplished. Ken Seitz, coordinator for the upcoming youth exchange, indicated that the retreat has made it possible for team members to reassemble in Elkhart on June 21 with a certain degree of cohesiveness and equipped with some spiritual resources needed for their tasks.

During the week of June 21, team members will be engaged in concentrated orientation in preparation for their South American departure on June 27. The week will include attending a number of missionary orientation sessions sponsored by the Overseas Division of Mennonite Board of Missions. James Kratz, associate secretary for Overseas Missions, is serving as liaison between the team and the Mennonite churches in South America.

The Overseas Office has worked out an itinerary in consultation with South American churches as follows: June 27—leave New York for Sao Paulo, Brazil; July 1-11—visit South Brazil churches including Curitiba and participate in Brazil Mennonite Youth Conference; July 12-15—Uruguay visit; July 16-27—Argentine visit in Buenos Aires province; July 27-29—Cordoba visit.

Also July 29-Aug. 3—Argentine Chaco; Aug. 3-5—Asuncion, Paraguay; Aug. 5-8—travel and visit Brasilia; Aug. 8-12—Araguacema; Aug. 14—arrive in New York; and Aug. 16-21—Mennonite Youth Convention, Lake Junaluska, N.C.

Presently the team is thinking and praying about things from their own life and experience they wish to communicate in South America. They are considering a theme for their programs to help guide their selection of musical material, religious drama, and Scripture to blend with their own testimonies.

Days of Prayer

June 17. Pray for Paul Detweiler and his helpers on the Building and Grounds Committee making preparation to host a large gathering of Mennonites from around the world.

June 18. Pray for the planners of the Men's Prayer Breakfast and the Women's Prayer Breakfast to be held on Friday morning, July 3. Pray for the moving of the Holy Spirit in these meetings.

June 19. Pray for Mrs. William Bergey and her helpers as they plan accommodations for babies and toddlers during Mission '70.

June 20. Pray for persons participating in the WMSA program on Wednesday and Thursday. Pray for Beula Kuffman, Executive Secretary, as she finalizes program details.

June 21. Pray about the song service at Mission '70 and ask that God will direct Lowell and Miriam Byler as they prepare to lead these services.

June 22. Pray for these Mission '70 committees: Public Address, Publicity, Parking, and Transportation. Pray that those who carry these responsibilities will have vision in providing these necessary services.

June 23. Pray for these Mission '70 committees: Health Committee, Historical Committee, and the Information Committee. Pray that these people will find meaning in the services rendered.

Peacemaking Seminar Invites You

More than 80 persons, involved in a special part of the Eastern Mennonite College summer school curriculum, are convening June 15-26. They will study political struggle, economic issues, race relations, cultural change, and evangelism.

During the two-week course, 12 lecturers will speak at the morning convocations. They include John A. Lapp, historian; John H. Yoder, theologian; and John W. Miller, theologian, who will lecture on political struggle and economic issues.

Lecturing on race relations will be Tom Skinner, evangelist, and Michael Haynes, minister.

The subject of cultural change will be treated by Daniel Yutzy, sociologist; Donald R. Jacobs, anthropologist; and Paul Peachey, sociologist.

Myron Augsburger, evangelist and president of EMC, and Dr. D. Elton Trueblood, philosopher, will address the subject of evangelism and the church.

Guest lecturers and resource personnel include Elvin Byler, attorney; Frank Epp, Canadian journalist; Darrell Fast, social service director; Ray Horst, social service director; and Dr. Ronald J. Sider, historian.

Also serving on the seminar staff will be seven EMC faculty members.

While more than 80 persons have registered, Mr. Clemens said that others may still apply. Interested persons may register or receive more information by writing to EMC.
Nurses Graduate

International Agricultural Seminar

Ken Martin, Penn State University agricultural economics major, is serving as leader and guide for the seminar. The group left Washington, D.C., on June 13 for a direct flight to Guatemala City. They will spend ten days in Guatemala, Honduras, and Haiti visiting agricultural development projects sponsored by Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions Voluntary Service and Mennonite Central Committee. They will also visit government agricultural development projects and will tour the countryside. Upon their return to the U.S. they will spend five days visiting cooperatives and rural development projects in Appalachia and Southern United States.

Each participant is completing a required bibliography of reading in agricultural development. Each person is also doing special research in an area of his own choosing. The participants will keep a daily journal of their feelings and will prepare an essay of their experiences at the termination of the seminar.

The participants were involved in an orientation at Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions and Mennonite Central Committee May 15-17, Benton Rhodes, John W. Eby, Delton Franz, and Paul Longacre served as resource persons. Informal discussion focused on international agricultural needs and the interpretation of philosophy and practice of agricultural development programs.

It is hoped that the seminar will give the participants exposure and stimulation for personal involvement in agricultural development programs of the Mennonite Church. Scholarships in the amount of $600 are being provided by Christian businessmen and other interested persons. Additional funds are still needed. For further information contact Youth Ministries Office, Salunga, Pa. 17538.

New Editor for Words of Cheer

Helen Alderfer of Winston-Salem, N.C., has been appointed editor of Words of Cheer according to Ben Cautrell, Publisher, and Daniel Hertzler, Director of the Periodical Division of Mennonite Publishing House. Paul Schrock, who has edited the publication since August 1961, will leave on Aug. 15, 1970, to become an instructor on a half-time basis at Eastern Mennonite College, Harrisonburg, Va.

Schrock is beginning a two-year leave of absence from Mennonite Publishing House, but will continue a half-time assignment as editor of Purpose during the first year of his leave. In the fall of 1972, he is scheduled to join the Book Division at Mennonite Publishing House.

The new editor for Words of Cheer is Home Life Editor of Christian Living magazine and will continue her Christian Living assignment also. A resident of Scottsdale, Pa., from 1958 to 1969, Helen plans to return in July from Winston-Salem, N.C., where her husband, Edwin, has been enrolled in a yearlong intern program in pastoral care.

Helen taught English in the Carver Junior High School in Winston-Salem during the past year. In addition to her work as Home Life Editor, Helen has edited a devotional book for women entitled A Farthing in Her Hand. With her husband, Edwin, she has authored a family life booklet, Helping Your Child to Grow. The Alderfers are parents of five children.

One of Helen’s first tasks will be to plan a revision of Words of Cheer which

Seven Volunteers to Central America

Seven volunteers left the United States on June 1, 1970, for assignments in rural development under the auspices of Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions Voluntary Service. They are assigned as follows:

To Guatemala: Daryl Lehman, Chambersburg, Pa.

The fellows will spend ten days in their respective countries in a "boot camp experience" before going to San Jose, Costa Rica, for language training and orientation. Boot camp, an experiment in overseas orientation, is designed to provide severe cultural shock for them. It is hoped that the ten-day exposure will develop motivation for language training and orientation.

On June 15 they began language training in San Jose. From August 3 to 24 they will attend a special orientation sponsored by the Council of Mennonite Colleges. The theme for study will be recent economic and political history and community development.

During their stay in Costa Rica, they will live in private Costa Rican homes. At the end of August they will return to their respective countries for 24-month assignments in rural development.

Nafziger is heading up a new position in the Voluntary Service program. He will be teaching agricultural engineering at the recently formed University of La Ceiba in Honduras. Recently graduated from Le Tourneau College, with a degree in mechanical engineering, Nafziger will aid in the development of an agricultural engineering department at the university.

July 26 MCC's 50th Birthday

July 26 has been designated as the official Sunday on which the Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches of North America will be celebrating the 50th anniversary of the Mennonite Central Committee.

All congregations belonging to MCC are being urged to name July 26 as a day of thanksgiving and remembrance. Many Mennonites have not only been using MCC as their channel for relief and service, but they were themselves helped by this agency following World War II.

Special church bulletins, giving a brief but readable resume of MCC's development, are being sent to congregations for their July 26 services. Illustrated booklets have also been printed for distribution to all Mennonite and Brethren in Christ families.

Ed Herr Named Dean of Frosh

Ed Herr, who has been associate director of admissions at Goshen College, has been named dean of freshmen and director of orientation.

The new post has been created to make additional staff resources available to freshmen. In addition to coordinating counseling for freshmen and being ready to help them during their orientation, he will be a resource for parents. Herr will also be responsible for coordinating Freshmen Parents' Weekend, directing testing, and advising the freshman class.

Experienced in teaching and school administration in the high schools, Herr brings many years of experience with young persons to his new assignment. He will also continue to be associate director of admissions on a half-time basis.

In other assignment changes, Paul Mininger, president, announced that C. Norman Kraus, professor of religion and chairman of the division of Bible, religion, and philosophy, will be director of the newly established Center for Studies of Christian Discipleship.

Larry Mann, former head resident of High Park, will be coordinator of student activities and recreation next year. He will also continue to teach physical education.

John M. Zook will be acting director of admissions next year during the absence of J. B. Shenk, director, who will be on sabbatical leave.

WMSA to Consider Affluence, Poverty

The Women's Missionary and Service Auxiliary (WMSA) sessions during Mission '70 the first week in July are to focus on their devotional theme for 1970, "Poverty and Affluence..." and will consider the Christian's response to them. The general theme, "What Will I Do?" as well as the subthemes for each of the four scheduled assemblies, are phrases taken from Luke 12:19-33, as they appear in various modern translations.

WMSA sessions beginning 1:30 p.m. on July 1 will feature music, inspirational talks and worship, panel discussions, and drama in charge of housewives, WMSA delegates, and home and overseas missions personnel presently on furlough. All WMSA activities, with the exception of the July 1 evening public session, will be held in the Christopher Dock auditorium.

Special-interest groups, slated for 3:30 p.m., July 2, are an innovative feature of this year's WMSA sessions. Subjects under consideration and resource persons include "Affluence-Poverty," Evelyn Kreider; "Building Relationships," John and Naomi Lederach; "Coffee Cup Evangelism," Ella
May Miller; "Creative Bible Study," Doris Lehman; and "Help from the Arts," Sylvia Jantz.

A July 3 morning prayer breakfast of praise and intercession will climax WMSA events. Home and overseas missionary women are serving as small-group leaders.

According to Beulah Kauffman, WMSA executive secretary, anyone having an interest in the work and program of WMSA is invited to attend any or all scheduled activities.

WMSA sessions are one among many component parts of Mission '70, an annual missions convention sponsored by Mennonite Board of Missions in Elkhart, Ind. This year's meeting, to be held July 1-7 at Christopher Dock Mennonite High School near Lansdale, Pa., is based on the theme, "The Spirit of the Lord . . . upon Me" from Luke 4:18. 19 Program planning is attempting to provide a strong spiritual mission emphasis whereby every member of the family can participate and find opportunity and growth on his own level.

Confusion in Russian Missions

In Russia and the Eastern Europe millions of people live under communist governments. Since communism is committed to atheism, Christians and the church are placed under limitations and pressures.

The missionary concern of North American Christians includes supporting a ministry to Christians and non-Christians within Russia. The oppression of the church and Christianity in Russia engenders a sense of emotional appeal to persons in the free world.

Yet the church in Russia does have constitutional protection, and — far from being "underground" — is visible and active. Congregations meet freely, within state-imposed limits. In Eastern European countries, such as Poland and Czechoslovakia, the church is even more significant within the structure of society.

Many mission organizations in North America are appealing for funds to carry on various types of mission work to and for Russia. Some are reputable organizations carrying out valid programs. However, there are those that should be questioned for not providing sufficient information concerning their operations.

Congregations and individual members should be aware of those organizations which, through emotional and elaborate fund-raising activity, give the impression of doing more than is actually being carried out or even can be done. Stewardship responsibility should necessitate investigating organizations before supporting them, making certain that they are authentic and that contributions are being used wisely.

Several organizations in the Mennonite Church are involved in work with Russia or Eastern European countries. For information on their activity or programs operating in communist countries, contact Peter Dyck, European Director, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pa. 17501, or Gordon Shantz, Russian Director, Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., Harrisonburg, Va. 22751.

Nelson Kauffman, interim pastor at Mennonite House of Friendship in New York City, also maintains active files on various nondenominational mission organizations. He may be reached at 1190 Gypsy Hill Rd., Lancaster, Pa. 17602.

Eleven Pastors Graduate

Eleven pastors were among the 208 graduates of Eastern Mennonite College, an unusually high percentage. In addition, there were six graduates of Eastern Mennonite Seminary. The 11 are as follows, left to right: (row 1) Paul G. Burkholder, BS in sociology, pastor of the Corvallis (Ore.) Mennonite Church; Lonnie Richardson, BA in Bible, pastor from Louisville, Ga.; Wayne Wingfield, BS in history, pastor of the Clover Hill United Methodist Church in Dayton, Pa.; Arthur McPhee, BA in Bible, pastor of the Stahl Mennonite Church, Johnstown, Pa.; (row 2) Daniel Longenecker, BA in Bible and sociology, no charge; Henry Helmut, BA in Bible, missionary pastor to San Jose, Costa Rica; Daniel Lapp, pastor of the Sunnyside Mennonite Church, Lancaster, Pa.; (row 3) John Freed, BS in Bible and sociology, dean of men at EMC and former pastor in New York City; Peter Giesbrecht, BA in sociology, assistant pastor of the Aylmer (Ont.) Mennonite Church; Michael Shenk, BA in history, pastor of the Tuttletown Mennonite Church, Sarasota, Fla.; and (top) Henry Dyck, BA in history and Bible, pastor of the Central Mennonite Church, Fort Wayne, Ind.

MCC Investigates Peru Earthquake

Much of northern Peru was devastated Sunday, May 31, by an earthquake. Reports said that roads blocked by landslides kept the most seriously affected communities isolated from rescue teams. The Peruvian government officially placed the estimated death toll at "near 30,000, with 200,000 homeless."

Reports from the town of Yungay, near the presumed epicenter of the earthquake, said that there were only 2,500 survivors in the town which had more than 20,000 inhabitants. Other smaller villages were reported covered with water from broken earth dams.

The Mennonite Central Committee instructed Dale Linsenmeyer, MCC director for neighboring Bolivia, to make an investigatory visit to the earthquake disaster area, contacting other relief agencies in Lima, capital of Peru.

MCC informed Linsenmeyer, now in Peru, that it is ready to coordinate an emergency relief team, using MCC Bolivia personnel, and medical and technical personnel from the Bolivian national church.

Should the need for short-term nonmedical personnel be needed, the Mennonite Disaster Service would be much interested in helping, too, according to Executive Coordinator Delmar Stably.

People interested in contributing to emergency relief operations in Peru should channel their contributions through their conference offices.

MCC Reduces Overseas Budget Midyear

A 10 percent slice from the Mennonite Central Committee's 1970 program budget was approved by its executive committee in session Thursday, May 21. This amounts to a total reduction of $105,500, of which $100,000 is from overseas programs.

Asia programs, especially in Korea and India, which rely heavily on contributed funds, were reduced the most; Latin America and the Middle East programs had $18,000 each pared from their projects. MCC programs in sub-Sahara Africa emerged nearly unscathed with only a $1,000 reduction. Budgets for domestic programs were not touched, except for a similar 10 percent cut in Akron administration budgets.

In the treasurer's report to the executive committee it was further noted that contributions totaling $100,000 were needed to erase the deficits in the MCC Overseas Services and Peace Section funds.

"There does not seem to be any one reason for the lower contributions," William T. Snyder noted. "Some of the reasons include lower conference remittances to Akron, an adjustment in 1969 CROP funds due to Study Commission Announces Joint Conference

The special session of General Conference and the three Boards (Mission, Education, Publication), scheduled for Oct. 20-22, 1970, will be held at the Yellow Creek Mennonite Church, R. 3, Goshen, Ind. The remodeling program in progress will be completed in time to provide very adequate facilities for this meeting, which will be hosted by the Indiana-Michigan Conference.

This location is particularly appropriate because northern Indiana was the home of John F. Funk, one of the early leaders in the founding of Mennonite General Conference, and the area where a number of significant Mennonite organizational movements were born.

The meeting is being called as a delegate conference to consider a revised model for the Mennonite Church organization. Invitations will be the 1969 General Conference delegates and the members of the three Boards. Visitors will be welcomed. They are asked to register in advance. A form will be provided in a later issue of the Gospel Herald.

FIELD NOTES

High school freshmen may now register to attend Convention 70, according to a decision by the Convention Planning Committee which met June 5 and 6. Because openings are still available for the Aug. 16-21 youth convention at Lake Junaluska, the decision was made to include in Convention 70 persons who have just completed the freshman year. Registrations will be accepted on a first-come, first-served basis.

Freshmen or other persons interested in attending Convention 70 should contact their local Mennonite Federation sponsors for registration information or write to Convention headquarters at Mennonite Building, Scottsdale, Pa. 15683.

The Providence Mennonite Church, Montgomery, Ind. (former address: Washington, Ind.), held the dedication service for their new church building Sunday, May 31, with Russell Krabill, Elkhart, Ind., as guest speaker. Tobias Slaubaugh is pastor.

"The Story of God and His People" series of Sunday school lessons comes to a close on Sunday, June 28. Superintendents, youth and adult teachers, or pastors are encouraged to send for special Survey Tests on the past year's lessons. They will serve to review the series, indicate progress made, and give a sense of achievement for each pupil. We will supply these to all who order them at approximate mailing costs. ($1.00 for each packet up to 50 tests; $2.00 per hundred; 25¢ for several copies only.) Order from MCCE, Mennonite Building, Scottsdale, Pa. 15683.

Pastors were appointed in an appropriate service at the Elkton Mennonite Church, Elkton, Va., May 31, 1970. Gerald Martin asked to be relieved as pastor in order that he might finish his college work. Orval M. Shank was licensed as pastor and Brother Lester Hoover of the Lancaster Conference, who has been attending Eastern Mennonite College this past school year, was appointed associate pastor. Brother Shank and his wife have related to the Elkton congregation almost since its beginning about 20 years ago. Mrs. Shank is presently Secretary of Girls' Activities, under the General WMSA of Elkhart.

Stanley Shenk, Goshen, Ind., spoke at the Burr Oak Mennonite Church, Rensselaer, Ind., May 31, on the Mennonite History subjects: "Why Did the Mennonite Church Begin?" "Passing Through the Fire," and "The Long Sleep and the Great Awakening.

Installation of student pastor for the summer of 1970 at Grace Chapel, Saginaw, Mich., was held on May 31 for Oliver Hardaway, Laurel, Miss. He had four years of study at Goshen College and plans to attend seminary this fall.

Santee, Calif., formerly pastor of Sycamore Grove Church near Garden City, Mo. Fifty-four charter members began meeting in the church parsonage in Oct. 1968. Homes of two nearby members were also used for Sunday school classes. The Harrisonville Church has 65 members at present and is still meeting in the pastor’s home.

The building is 50 x 114 ft. and will cost about $70,000, plus about $10,000 for furnishings. The seating capacity is about 150, plus overflow in side rooms which have folding doors. There is a large fellowship hall which is divided by folding doors and will be used by the church’s Kinder Kastle nursery school program.

The David Powell family arrived on the continent from Puerto Rico on June 1 for a six-week furlough. Address: c/o Rev. Harold W. Powell, 410 McComb St., Fort Atkinson, Wis. 53538.

The S. Paul Millers, missionaries on furlough from India, were called to Tiskilwa. All Mesia’s boarding school, John Kaufmann, was killed in a farm tractor accident on May 30. The funeral was on June 2.

Paul Wyse called James Kratz from Peru (via ham radio) on June 4 to report that his family is safe and well following the earthquake near Lima. He reported that they felt a bit “shaken,” but there was no serious damage in their immediate area. All Wycliffe personnel are safe, although two workers were stationed in a town that was completely destroyed. At this point contacts can be made with the most badly hit cities and communities only by helicopter. All roads are closed. Paul reported that he flew over a city of 100,000 in which every house was destroyed. Possible Mennonite relief involvement is being explored.

Missionaries traveling to their field of service in June: Florence Näfzger to Dhamati, India, on June 26; B. Charles Hostetter to Lagos, Nigeria, on June 14.

Missionaries returning to North America during June: Frank Byler from Uruguay on June 27; Joyce Eberly from Brazil on June 16; Don Heisers from Puerto Rico on June 1; Roy Kreiders from Israel on June 15; Anna Marie Kurtz from Ghana on June 20; David Powells from Puerto Rico on June 1; Willard Roths from Ghana on June 12; Peter Sawatsky from Brazil on June 15.

Missionaries returning to North America in July: Jake Flishers, India; Erma Grove, Ghana; Ellis Goods, Algeria; Marian Hostetler, Algeria; Merlin Swartzes, Lebanon.

A missionary orientation for new and furloughed mission personnel sponsored by the Overseas Missions Office at Elkhart, Ind., began on June 18 and continues through the 26th. The theme is “God at Work in the World.”

A World War II CPS reunion is scheduled for June 19 at the Mountain View Mennonite Church, Kalispell, Mont., for all persons who served in CPS Camp, Number 55, Belton, Mont. Additional information can be received by contacting Willard Unruh, Box 26, North Newton, Kan. 67117.

Readers Say

Submissions to Readers Say column should comment on printed articles.

I want to commend you for the guest editorial, “The Double Threat,” in the May 5 Gospel Herald. There is a great need for wise Christian voices to be speaking in this time of great unrest and resulting confusion. We are so prone to seek simple, easy, quick answers and thus end up betraying Christ and the good news He brought.

I have really appreciated the article by Allon Lefever on “The Generation Gap.” My feelings were expressed in this writing. How timely was “If You’re a Christian, Smile,” by Robert Baker. Facial expressions tell so much. Thanks for publishing these articles. — Mrs. Lloyd Harnish, Lancaster, Pa.

Thank you for the honest article by Allon Lefever on the subject of the generation gap in the May 12 issue. It will help all of us to see a matter on which side of 30 we are to really think it through. His second to the last paragraph hit the problem dead center. Also the article by Dr. Hall on the rebellion in the May 26 issue calls for thankfulness and amen. — Leroy H. Bowman, Kinzers, Pa.

When I read John Lapp’s editorial in the May 26 Gospel Herald, I was astounded (and mad, as the kids would say). My first impulse was to cancel my subscription. Then having dropped that idea, I wrote a scorching letter but did not send it. I’ll write a brief note in a brotherly tone. Please don’t ever again give us the readers of the Gospel Herald, anything like John Lapp’s editorial. I cannot imagine why you let such a terrible piece get into the Herald in the first place, let alone as an editorial. To compare President Nixon to Hitler is an unparsable travesty.

Please carry some kind of a public apology to our president. Please don’t let the Gospel Herald be used as a mouthpiece for the Democratic Party. In other words keep politics out of our church paper.

I hope and pray that our Lord will forgive you. — Samuel S. Wenger, Lancaster, Pa.

"Some things die so that new ones can be born." I respond to this quotation of John Rempel with a sense of deep concern for Mennonite students at colleges and universities across our nation. As a graduate student, college instructor, and adviser to a Mennonite Fellowship on a secular campus, I still can feel the pulsebeat of the twofold adjustment which each maturing student makes. Inner turmoil, doubting, searching, weighing, rejecting, building, refining, and synthesizing one’s personal faith is the first adjustment. Similarly and concomitantly the student struggles with his relationship to his congregation and the church body.

In addition, undergraduate and graduate students develop insights and concerns in theological and social issues which they sincerely explore and espouse.

Christ, the Great Illuminator

By Takio Tanase

Chapter 3 of the Gospel of John tells us that Christ came into the world as the Light. If the basic function of light is to illuminate things as they truthfully are, then what kind of truth does the Light of Christ show?

Lighting a Path to God

First of all, Christ shows who God is. In the same Gospel when Philip asked Jesus to show him the Father, Jesus replied, "You have been this long here with me... Those who see Me, see the Father." This may not be a correct translation, but this is how we Japanese say it. If one sees Jesus, he knows God.

Maybe this statement is self-explanatory for Americans, but not for Japanese. We have many gods — a god of fire, a god of literature, a god of rocks, a god of trees, and even my uncle is a god. He is a god because he died for his country. Any Japanese who died during World War II, who sacrificed his life for the emperor, was a god. And so missionaries come and find it difficult to explain to people the difference between Japanese gods and the God of the Bible.

It is necessary and important to make this distinction. Although Japanese talk about many gods, most are regarded as products of superstition. When missionaries tell us about God, then we think that He is also a superstition. A basis exists for this kind of understanding.

We Japanese stress science. We find it difficult to understand the miracle stories, for example. These people cannot believe that Jesus Christ could walk on the water. They cannot fathom Jesus driving out the demons. Even children would say that was a superstition, because Japan had those stories many years ago, but they are outmoded now.

However, these people who refuse to believe in God are not really satisfied in their daily living. They know they need something to give meaning to their lives, but for the present they can't find the answer in religion. So I maintain that if Christianity is true, it is necessary to distinguish between the Japanese gods and the God of the Bible. The best way to do this is to show Christ as the Light of the world: to show what kind of life Jesus lived — what He taught, how He lived, and especially how He died and rose again.

Lighting a Path to Man

When John wrote his Gospel he wanted to point out that Jesus not only reveals who God is but also who man is. People who do evil things hate the light because they don't want their evil deeds to be discovered. Jesus shows us what kind of men we are; what kind of sinner I am.

This concept of sin is difficult to understand. Christians often talk about men sinning without actually feeling this applies to them personally. We are so self-centered that we don't want to admit we are sinners. We say everyone is a sinner, but when we say that we usually think of someone else, not ourselves.

I recall one incident at Hesston College, 15 years ago, which showed me in reality who I was. You see, I was rather critical of my roommate. As a very nice Mennonite Christian he was kind enough to show me what kind of clothes I should wear to church. He said I have to wear a tie. But the church in Japan where I attended emphasized matters more important than attire, and I didn't like Sunday clothes, Sunday shoes, Sunday smiles. In fact, this was one of the things that prevented me from accepting Christ when I was in Tokyo. My roommate said I had to wear a tie and that I shouldn't study on Sunday. But for a foreign student like me, this was the only day I could catch up with fellow students.
One Sunday I decided to be a nice Christian like him, so I began polishing my shoes, feeling certain he would be glad to see what I was intending to do. But he said, "Are you shining your shoes on Sunday? You should have done that yesterday."

Then Spiritual Emphasis Week arrived with Bro. George Brunk as speaker. All roommates were supposed to have private prayer meetings. My roommate was very glad to pray with me, but the feeling wasn’t mutual. But since he was so glad, I felt I couldn’t refuse, so I decided to pray in my native tongue and ask God to forgive and straighten up this roommate of mine.

That November evening he and I knelt together on the floor, and he prayed fluently, beautifully. When my turn came a strange thing happened. To my surprise I started asking forgiveness for myself. As soon as I addressed God, I knew I was talking to Jesus Christ, the Light. I knew I was wrong. Christ showed me who I was.

Jesus Christ reveals the truth — He reveals who God is; He reveals who we are and what kind of sinners we are. But He doesn’t do this to make us feel bad. He reveals this truth in order to save us. God sent His Son into the world as its Savior, not as a judge.

Lighting a Path to Life

Christ the Light gives life. I’m not a farmer, but I do know that if plants don’t have sufficient light, they don’t grow. In similar fashion the Light gives the church life. If a church loses this Light, it loses life.

When I study church history I discover that the severest wars have been fought between “Christian countries.” Buddhist priests like to point this out and say that Buddhists emphasize love and mercy. But Christians seemingly prefer to fight each other — especially those who love their countries more than Jesus Christ. This makes it difficult for Japanese to believe in Christianity or to accept the missionary message. I know many people who find it difficult to listen to missionaries talk about love, sacrifice, and loving your enemy and then read in the newspaper about race problems in the States or the war in Vietnam.

In what way does Jesus Christ give life to the world? This Light gives life by burning like a candle. A candle provides light; it shines in the darkness by consuming itself, by dying. That is exactly what Christ did.

Increasing the Light

Jesus Christ is the Light, but the Bible also says that those who follow Christ must be the light of the world also. Followers of Christ are to be the light of the Light. This means we are to imitate Christ. How?

First of all, one cannot hide the light; the light must cut through the darkness. I mentioned that Japanese need the light of Christ in order to know the real God. In order for that to happen, every Christian has to be a missionary. If he isn’t, the little church in Japan would soon be swallowed up in the overwhelmingly secular culture. So every Christian in Japan must be a missionary-evangelist.

I understand the sixteenth-century Anabaptists were like this. When I read a book like Littell’s _The Anabaptist View of the Church_, I realize that here was one group that took the Great Commission seriously. They made a distinction between the church and the world. They didn’t want to live like the world. Why? Because they knew the world was living in sin and darkness. So on one hand they stressed non-conformity, but in doing so they went into the world. They didn’t withdraw to form nice compact Mennonite communities. They went into the world to witness that Jesus Christ is the Savior. We Japanese are facing the same mandate today.

A Japanese Candle

When the Bible says that disciples are to be the light, this means they need that “candle-quality” in their lives. Last year we sent our first missionary to Quito, Ecuador. I understand the Hiroshi Kaneko family was here last July during Mission ’69. North Americans have been sending missionaries to many countries for years, so maybe this is a common thing. But it was really an exciting event for us to send a missionary.

I think Kaneko earlier described how he sensed his calling to be a missionary. He came to a meeting of church leaders and shared this conviction, and some of us felt it was a good thing. But others felt we were not mature enough to send missionaries. These people wanted to be realistic. After all, we are not rich. The average per capita income in our church is $150 a month. How could we Japanese Christians send and support a missionary with so few funds available? That was one opposition.

Another point was this: there are enough non-Christians living in Kushiro to whom we have to witness. Why send a missionary to a distant country where one has to learn another language? It’s foolish, they argued.

The leaders and lay leaders gathered together and prayed, and as we studied the Bible we felt this was the will of God. We discovered that our argument of lacking the necessary money to send a missionary meant we were actually saying we didn’t want to make a sacrifice.

As for the second reason for opposition, while it is true that many non-Christians live right around us, this shouldn’t prevent us from sending missionaries to other countries. It simply means that each church member is to be a missionary in his own home and community.

I know this is a dangerous adventure, but so far I am receiving favorable reports that Christians in Japan are giving quite a bit to this missionary endeavor. I am particularly grateful because through this experience we learned that to be a Christian, to be saved by Christ through His cross, means to live sacrificially. To live like Jesus Christ, the Light of the world, who gave Himself — who consumed Himself — to give the Light.
Nothing to Confess

The amazing thing about Jesus is the way He could start where men were and take them to a point of thought where no man had ever been. He did it when He showed the difference between the way the Pharisee and the publican prayed.

In Jesus’ day when people saw a strict law-keeping Pharisee, like Paul had been, they said, “There is a man after God’s own heart.” The Pharisee in Jesus’ story was better than most. He fasted twice a week. The law required once a year. He paid tithes on everything he bought, though corn, wine, and oil would already have been tithed by the producer. If anyone had a right to think he did more than God expected, this Pharisee had that right.

We often pray like this, “Lord, we are grateful that You have blessed us so abundantly. We know there are many hungry in the world, but we have plenty for ourselves and to spare. We thank Thee for religious liberty in a land where we can worship unmolested and undisturbed. And we thank Thee that we were not born in a heathen land like many men are.”

It never occurs to us that that prayer is remarkably like the Pharisee’s. Is it wrong to thank God for being especially gracious to us?

Jesus’ listeners saw no hypocritical arrogance in the man’s prayer, but appreciation for God’s good grace. Now look at the publican. Tax collectors leased their areas. The highest bidder got it. It was practically inevitable that such a system produced swindlers. How could a sinner like a publican be forgiven? Sorrow for sin in the view of the Jews was not enough. A publican would have to quit his job, pay back all he took, plus a fifth. But how could he remember everyone he had swindled?

Jesus lets His tax collector pray the only prayer he had a right to pray. “God be merciful to me a sinner.” Now note what Jesus’ hearers see. The sinful man does not stand miles below the “righteous” Pharisee. But in the very place where God forgives. If God forgave the man right where he stands, he is not now a sinner. He stands full height, forgiven, beside the Pharisee. Then what is all this talk of merit, of earning God’s approval? It can’t be done (as Paul saw later).

So, the righteous man is really the forgiven man. Since the Pharisee asks no forgiveness, God can’t help him. That’s what’s wrong with a man who has nothing to confess. And that’s what’s wrong with the prayer of any Pharisee, ancient or modern.

The Sin of Carelessness

In Isaiah 32:11, the prophet is rebuking Israel for this sin of carelessness. He says, “Be troubled, ye careless ones.” They had become careless about many things; their fields, their crops, their conduct, and especially about their attitude to God. Most of us find it very easy to become careless. Many of you remember Benjamin Franklin’s saying about the lost horseshoe nail, which caused the loss of an empire. There is danger in carelessness. The careless automobile driver is often the most dangerous part of an automobile.

Spiritual carelessness is the most dangerous kind. But sad to say, most folk feel that spiritual carelessness is but a minor thing. It is that cooling-off process in one’s spiritual life that is deadening. It is an indication of losing interest in God and His program. It first shows itself in a lack of Bible study which leaves one without fire in the bones, and iron in the blood. This is soon followed by a lack of prayer, family altar, fellowship with the saints; unprepared Sunday school lesson, sleeping in church, and so on. It is one of Satan’s most effective weapons. To offend God with sin is always to injure oneself. — Christian E. Charles.
Law of the Boomerang

I remember how impressed I was as a boy the first time I saw how a boomerang works. A friend of the family made one. We went out in a field and he threw it into the air. It soared out over the nearby trees, making a large circle returning to the very spot from which it was thrown. I was impressed.

Over the years I’ve learned that the boomerang illustrates an unchanging, unyielding, law of nature. What goes out comes back. The Scripture speaks of this law like this: “With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again” (Mt. 7:2). Another scriptural statement which expresses the same truth is “Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days” (Eccles. 11:1). Here is the law of the boomerang.

What we say and do, good or bad, always has a way of returning. It never fails. God planned and placed this law in the universe. All of us sometimes surmise that we can break this law, that what we do or say will not return, that somehow we, the first ones in all history, will escape the consequences of our words and deeds.

Take the example of the parent in the home. He is harsh, unkind, and critical. He lives to see these very traits returned to him in his own flesh and blood. A certain young man grew up rebellious, refusing to obey his father, and treating his father with ridicule. Before his own death he lived to bear the beatings of his own son.

Here is a young person in school who somehow thinks he can escape the consequences of cheating in class. He may even get through with flying colors because no one knows of his dishonesty. But after many days it turns to his own destruction. Not only his guilt but the grades he really deserved begin to display themselves on his life’s work. The law of the boomerang is unyielding.

Or here a businessman who takes advantage of his laborers or his customers. He thinks he’s going to escape the law of return. But, be it long in tarrying, it shall not fail.

Perhaps the hardest area to find agreement that the law of the boomerang never fails is in the area where persons take advantage of others while becoming richer and richer. David, the psalmist, tells how he almost faltered in his trust in God and in his belief that God rewards righteousness and punishes wickedness when he looked at the rich. To him such could commit every kind of injustice and oppression, yet remain healthy, grow old, and increase in wealth and respect. David had different thoughts, however, when he took time to look at the end of such persons. “When I consider their end,” he said, “I no longer long for their life or largeness of lands.” The prosperity of the wicked becomes the heavy chain which chokes out all meaning of life here and hereafter.

But the law of the boomerang not only applies to individuals. It also applies to nations. Does anyone imagine that this law will be broken for America? Does anyone think that our atrocities to other people shall not return to our own heads? Does anyone conclude that the cruelties we exercise in other countries will escape us? The boomerang always has returned. And it shall again.

So also our actions and words to the American Indian, the black man, and all others who suffered our injustice, shall return. And who is so blind or insensitive or stupid that he cannot even now know that the boomerang is no longer going out from us to fly over other nations and peoples but it is returning to us full speed. We shall soon be forced to acknowledge that America, you and I, great as we are, cannot break this law of nature and of God. “With what judgment you mete, it shall be meted to you again.” Sometimes it may seem like a long time for our doings to return. But it shall not fail!

So far this editorial concerns the return of evil. But this law of the boomerang applies equally well in the return of loving words and deeds. “Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days.”

To cast bread speaks of love and kindness. For such the rewards are always abundant. To cast bread on water is to help, assist, feed without thought of return. It looks foolish to most. And plenty will point out that such actions do not pay. Bread on water is carried away by the waves without any thanks. No one notices what was done.

But because the returns are not usually immediate does not do away with nature’s law. Look at the person who, out of love, is kind and gracious. Though he grows old and poor in material things he would not exchange his joy for all the wealth in the world. Kind words and deeds return again.

So, on and on, in every walk of life, good given freely, right done regardless how ridiculous it seems, and love lavished even upon the undeserving shall not go unrewarded.

Thus the law of the boomerang becomes both a warning and a wish. It is a warning in that no one will escape the results of his evil thought, deed, or word. For even forgiveness and pardon cannot stop the results of the poisoned word or deed. It is a wish in that we long to see those who are a blessing to others be blessed above what we can ask or think. In this also God’s law is unyielding. — D.
The Indian Settlement Program-Where Are We?

By Myrtle Unruh

The Chulupi Indian was looking into the window at the hospital lab on their station. "We want to say thank you for the things we have received during the past year," he said to the technician, "and we want to ask you to continue to help us, we need and appreciate your help."

It wasn't so difficult to express appreciation to the doctor, the nurses, or those who work directly with the Indian, but how could they thank all those who have given so freely of their material goods and their prayers and their advice? Somehow he had felt a need to do so, but how could his "Thank you" reach out to all the local Mennonites and perhaps even to the "Nortes" as they call the North Americans?

Then an idea! For the local Mennonites, it could be done.

Even in the tropics the Christmas programs portray the birth of Christ in pageantry. This same group had practiced for many hours, they had learned the Christmas story and some Christmas songs. And even though many of them had never appeared on a platform, progress at the practices was good. So why not give this program a second evening as a "Thank you" for those who have given and could attend. The announcement was made that the white people would be the guests at the program. The church was cleaned thoroughly, the benches arranged, and even some ushers appointed. Those who attended the program (it was a full house) were happy for the expression of gratitude, they enjoyed the wonderful singing, and all were amazed at the nice performance of the Christmas story.

It proved to be a real blessing to the Indian group as well. Somehow the idea of being orderly about their church service took on meaning, the ushers are continuing their service, and the church building is being cleaned regularly. When not used for services, the church building is no longer used for a shelter, it is considered a sanctuary.

From a village of Lengua Indians a letter of thanks was given to the Executive Committee which was forwarded to MCC headquarters. These expressions of gratitude are sincere. The gifts were gratefully received and some needs have been met.

Do you ever wonder how well an Indian home is furnished? A few days ago I had the opportunity to visit with Marichen. Marichen's Lengua name is Yellow Girl. When she was born her skin was very yellow, hence the name. We shook hands, she smiled, asked where we came from, and from experience knew that we wanted to look around.

In her one-room house, there was one chair, one bed, a night stand, and two small trunks. In the one trunk she had some books and papers, in the other trunk she kept some clothing. There was a calendar on the wall, a nice alarm clock on the nightstand, an umbrella hung on a nail, and a lantern stood on the floor. Half of the floor was brick, the other part was packed dirt. She told us that the roof leaks. Around the chair she had small batches of broomcorn. She had brought it in from the field and was preparing a broom and would have one ready to sell in a few hours.

Quite as important is the tree near the Indian's house. On Marichen's tree, we saw two hammocks, one blanket, one coat, and a bag containing some soap. Nearby there was another bed. One small log was smoldering — this was the kitchen fire. She had not begun with meal preparation. There were three kitchen bowls, two kettles, two pails, one frying pan, one dipper, and a small tub. There was nothing orderly about the arrangement and nothing was clean. The Indians usually wait to clean utensils just before they use them. When we asked if she had any flatware, she took us back into her house and showed us some shiny spoons which she kept in a cloth bag. They were new and she guarded them well. Also well protected in a little tin pail with a lid were her sewing supplies, needle, thread, scissors, and a piece of cloth that she was working on. She was doing nice work and enjoyed her sewing.

She seemed quite happy and content and thanked us for coming. The meticulous North American housewife would have fretted over the unexpected guests, but not she. She was radianty happy that we had thought to pay her a visit.

Melita Wall, RN, is from Fernheim Colony and works as a nurse at the Yalee Sanga station. This story shows the heavy responsibility that a mission nurse carries and also proves how challenging the work is.

After a busy day, Melita and her co-workers were relaxing in their hammocks. There was a bright full moon overhead and a radio near at hand. They were half-listening to the radio and half-recounting the incidents of the busy day. Their hearts were filled with gratitude to God because they had been able to help many patients. Suddenly, a news flash on the radio reported a plane crash. Everyone listened trying to get details when a man's voice beside them asked them to come to the Mission Hospital immediately. Quickly, they responded to this urgent call and found a wagon in front of the hospital. A patient was lying on the wagon. The team of horses that was drawing the wagon was bathed in sweat, so the long trip had been a hurried one.

As she neared the wagon, Melita was handed a crying but otherwise healthy baby who had been born en route. The mother was immediately transferred to the hospital and bathed in preparation for examination. The baby also had to have the travel dust washed off, and was then wrapped in a clean blanket.

In the light of the kerosine lamp, the examination soon showed there were some complications and that the Indian woman needed to be taken to the doctor some 20 miles away. After 10 p.m. there is no telephone service, so the patient must be taken to the doctor. The nurse’s ambulance was brought quickly and in one hour the patient was ready for the doctor’s examination.

In his own yard, Dr. Epp listened to the nurse’s report. With the help of flashlights and their yard light, he examined the patient. The ambulance had to serve as operating room, and the doctor’s hands as instruments. Only a nurse knows how happy Melita was when she could say to the doctor that she had sterile gloves for him. So Dr. Epp set to work immediately. Later the patient was returned to the Mission Hospital and after some shots of penicillin and a day and a half of bedrest she took her little boy, Caesar, and returned to her home.

Klaas Wiens is the manager of farm operations at Pozo Amarillo, the Indian Settlement of Menno Colony. He relates this recent experience which shows that there are many unplanned setbacks in the work.

Among the different projects which are planned to help the Indians become self-supporting is the sheep project. The Indians at Yalve Sanga had taken to their sheep project with such enthusiasm that one was also started at Pozo Amarillo. First, the fence had to be made. The Indians cut their own fence posts in the bush for a pasture that adjoins their village. They also did all the work connected with the fencing of 140 acres in 1968.

From time to time grants from the Schowalter Foundation have been designated to help in projects for the Indian. Some of these funds bought the wire and also the sheep. Eighty ewes and one purebred ram were purchased from a nearby ranch. Another purebred ram and two ewes imported from Argentina were purchased in Asuncion.

These sheep were sold to individual Indians, each family taking one ewe, on credit. The first lamb is given back in payment. An Indian family was hired to tend the sheep and everyone seemed happy about this project.

The Chaco bush still is a home for wild animals. Last June, a puma (mountain lion) helped himself to several lambs, both of the rams and one of the imported ewes. This was a great financial loss for the Indian and discouraging for the settlement manager. To date, the puma has not been captured. We hope the Indian will continue to work and appreciate the sheep project.

Anne Klassen, missionary nurse from Winnipeg, Canada, is now in the Literature Room at the Yalve Sanga station. She is happy to report this incident.

The Chaco Indian of today is very anxious to get ahead. He would like to have what the Mennonites have. Choir and congregational singing receive top priority. Both a Chulupi and a Lengua hymnal have been published. Several of the Chulupi teachers contributed several songs which they themselves had translated from the Spanish.

The Lengua Indian is somewhat less aggressive and slower to become independent. Their songs had been almost entirely translated by the mission workers. What a pleasant surprise when last month Mateo, one of the Lengua teachers, showed me a four-stanza hymn which he had translated. He had come to ask if I would duplicate it because the choir wanted to sing the new song the following Sunday. Some of the syllables did not quite fit in with the notes, but the contented look on everybody’s face was worth far more than good timing. We praise God for Indian initiative.

Alex Bartel, missionary and settlement worker, has worked at the Campo Largo Settlement from its beginning. He tells the following story which shows some of the experiences which a family has when trying to adjust to a new way of life.

The news that some Indian families had settled on small farms at Yalve Sanga spread rapidly among the Indian people. Soon the requests for small tracts of land found their way to the missionaries in Neuland. The Indian could already imagine how much progress he would make, how he would plow and plant, and how he would build his house. For some Indians it was a dream come true when the Settlement was begun.

A Lengua Indian (called Peter in this story) settled at Campo Largo. How do these Indians get along in the settlement? Peter is an average Indian. He has a wife and family and his wife’s parents also live with them. The different tasks that need to be done on a farm were not new to him for he had worked for the Mennonites and had learned from them. He had also observed that it is good to have small savings for other necessities besides food and clothing. Before the settlement was started, Peter had already bought a team of horses and a much-used wagon. As a settler, he received the same equipment as the others had. He was about 35 years of age and his wife somewhat younger. They were indeed courageous new settlers.

An Indian’s house can usually be built in a few days. Soon Peter was busy hauling fence posts which he had cut in the bush. His poor horses and wagon, however, were not adequate for the job, so he traded his wagon for three stronger horses. The stronger horses were better for plowing. and his crop was good enough so that he and his neighbor could buy a better wagon. The next three years, Peter made progress.

One morning I noticed that my friend was gone. How could it be? Surely Peter knew that it was planting time and it had just rained. In the Chaco one must make use of the moisture in order to sprout the grain. Where had he gone and why? I learned from a neighbor of Peter’s that he had left because of family problems. And so I had to convince myself that Peter’s farm would not bring a crop that year.

What a joy it was to see, after many weeks, that the family was back home. It was too late for a crop that year, but the family problems had been solved and they had returned.

The following year Peter began his farming operations with new zeal and new courage. He borrowed money and fenced an additional three hectares so that with his other five hectares he now had eight hectares. This new fence was made for the heifer which he had also bought that year. The same year he was also able to pay for his half of the wagon. Two of his five children attended the mission school and he paid for most of the schoolbooks and helped to pay the teacher’s salary.

Peter’s cow had calved several times. They do not milk the cow, because they do not drink milk. Mothers have yet to learn the nutritional value of food as well as milk.

Often we wonder why the Indian is listless and discouraged. We sometimes class him as lazy. They no doubt suffer from many deficiency diseases. During a general clinic it was discovered that Peter’s wife is sick with tuberculosis, and he is not well either. At this writing the whole family is being treated for tuberculosis. Until he and his family are well again, progress on their farm will be slow. We must help the Indians through the medical as well as the spiritual program. If we neglect our responsibilities, the Indians will perish at our doorstep.

A Just War, or Just a War?

By David Augsburger

If a war were declared unjust, by all international opinion, by all religious principles, by all men of careful thought . . . would you fight in it?

Would you fight in a war which—everyone agreed—was an unjust war, an unjustifiable war, an immoral war?

No, of course not. Not if you have any personal convictions about right and wrong. Not if you have any personal commitment to love justice and truth.

Easy question. Easy answer.

But let’s be specific. Concrete. If you had been a twenty-year-old male citizen of Germany in 1940, would you have obeyed orders to machine-gun Jewish mothers, daughters, and babies into a muddy trench grave? Or would you have fought in the Rhineland in unquestioning obedience to a regime committing the mass murder of an innocent race?

Would you really refuse to fight in an unjust war? If so, how do you go about determining whether the war was or was not unjust?

You can’t use the twenty-twenty vision of historical hindsight. You won’t likely have access to international opinion, in order to shape your own in a time of national crisis.

When you come right down to it, the responsibility rests on you. On your conscience. On your best insight, your convictions, your principles, your sense of truth. You must be either a conscientious supporter, or a conscientious objector to a particular war, or to any and all wars. And you must decide.

Now then, how would you go about deciding if a war is justifiable or not?

The first and most natural justification is: “Any war that my government declares or enters, I must support, and any-thing my government asks I’m responsible to obey.” Yes, of course we’re responsible to obey our government. But to obey it responsibly is one thing. To follow it blindly is another. To give the state a blank check. “I’ll go anywhere, do anything to anyone in obedience to any command.” is to cease being a moral being—a human being. That’s the old creed, “My country right or wrong.” If you swallow that justification for war, you’ll have to fight in any war—just or unjust, legal or criminal.

No, the blind obedience of a blank check attitude just won’t do.

A second justification often given is, “Any war that defends our American way of life is right and good.” That’s nationalism become a religion. Patriotism turned into idolatry. Is our American way of life good simply because it is American? Of course not. To give everything for one’s country, simply because it is one’s country is absolute worship. It denies that there is a God in heaven whose truth is eternal and whose kingdom is above all. Such idolatry is neither moral nor rational.

A third justification is, “Any war that defends a Christian nation, or Christendom against communism, or Christians against paganism is just and right.” Yes, you can wage war in the name of your religion. Muslims, Marxists, and many who label themselves Christians have gone to battle to advance their causes. But how can anyone justify a war as a “Christian crusade”? That is like talking of dry wetness, or hot coldness. Jesus Christ never sanctioned war, never approved violence. His every word and action repudiated man’s way of hate, murder, violence, and self-defense; He laid down His life for the sake of others.

Self-defense is no Christian virtue.
If the survival of our culture, or our own survival is our sole remaining purpose, we are not Christian. Survival is not a Christian virtue. Life is not to be maintained by any means. The ends do not justify the means.

How then can you justify participation in war? How will you decide which war is justly worthy of your moral and physical support?

There are ways men go about judging and justifying wars as "just." Ways set forth in our own U.S. Constitution, in the Geneva Conventions on warfare, and in the creeds of most major Christian denominations.

All agree on four major criteria.
(1) A just war must be declared by a just authority: (2) fought for the one justifiable cause of establishing an orderly and just peace, (3) fought with justifiable proportionality between the amount of harm done and the benefits hoped for, and (4) fought by a just means, respecting noncombatants, and refusing inhumane weapons.

Why don't thoughtful men—Christian men—apply these principles when they are called up to fight?

They can apply them to wars fought by others; why not to our own? Why have so few Christians even attempted to apply them to the Vietnam war? Perhaps because it's agonizingly difficult? It's compromise all the way. Compromise with truth, with the gospel, with the Word of God and the example of Christ.

But if we are going to be human beings, to be responsible men, or what is more, to be Christian men, there are only two alternatives. Either the agony of deciding on the justice or injustice of war—any particular war we are asked to support or—Or—we must absolutely reject any and all war as did our Master, Jesus Christ.

For the first 200 years of the Christian faith, Christ's followers, like their Master, denounced the sword, rejected war, and died refusing violence even in self-defense. But by the year 400, Augustine was approving a "just war"; and by the year 1000, "Christians" were fighting "holy" crusades, and by 1968, churches and Christians are blessing almost any violence, as long as it serves to stop communism. It brings back the dark memories of the World Wars, when bishops blessed bayonets and bazookas on both sides.

A 1965 study by the Canadian Peace Research Institute indicates by and large the attitudes of "Christians" today. Quoting Norman Z. Alcock, president:

Christians are more warlike in their attitudes than non-Christians, and the most dogmatic Christians are more warlike than the less dogmatic Christians or than the less churchgoing Christians. Churchgoing people have no greater "sense of responsibility" toward war and peace than do the nonchurchgoing. And what is important and conclusive, among all groups measured—the general public and the various elites—churchgoers showed the same tendency to believe in military might rather than the power of love. For a church that is founded on the teachings of Jesus, these findings should come as a shock.

Yes, they should and yes, they do. Because they reveal that "Christians" at large are refusing the only two responsible alternatives: to weigh, to discern, and to support only that war which can be rightly called a "just war," or to say that every war is just "a war" and refuse it on the basis of Christian conscience and conviction.

Which are you choosing? If you choose the alternative of supporting just wars, then be aware of the almost impossible choice you are making. To begin with, who are you to judge? To judge rightly, you need the vantage point of history and the wisdom of God Himself.

History can testify to the difficulty of making this decision. Christian thinker John Howard Yoder asks, "Did any Christians [who held to a 'just war' doctrine] ever conclude, after their government had committed itself to war, that the cause was unjustified and/or the means used were inappropriate and that therefore they should not serve? Such cases are few, or nonexistent." Once war is declared, the pressures to give blanket approval usually win out over any and all moral considerations. Read, read, and reread the New Testament. You will find that the way of Christ is a way of love—self-sacrificial, self-denying, self-defenseless love.

Of course the price is high for such a life of love—but so is the price of war. Would you not rather die in the way of Christ than in the way of those who killed Him?

Listen again to Peter's words:

For Christ suffered for you and left you a personal example, and wants you to follow in his steps. He was guilty of no sin or the slightest prevarication. Yet when he was insulted he offered no insult in return. When he suffered he made no threats of revenge. He simply committed his cause to the one who judges fairly. And he personally bore our sins in his own body on the cross, so that we might be dead to sin and alive to all that is good (1 Pet. 2:21-24, Phillips)."

This is the alternative Jesus Christ presented. He disarmed His followers because weapons are weak, and self-defeating. He armed them with love. Self-giving love. His way is not a way of justifying just wars. It is the willing way of living a peacemaking life of love.

Have you considered the Jesus way?—David Augsburger, Harrisonburg, Va., delivered this message over the Mennonite Hour radio broadcast.

Confronting Revolutionary Change

By C. Norman Kraus

For over a decade now analysts have been using terms like "atomic age," "post-Christian era," "secularization," "new morality," "rise of the third world" to describe our present era. In order to describe the radicality of the social and moral convulsion others have even spoken of God's silence or death. When, for example, Gabriel Valhanian first used the phrase "the death of God" as the title for a book in 1957, he was heralding the profound dissolution of the world view which had been built upon the western philosophical concept of theism during the last millennium. That he was describing a cultural phenomenon is clear from his subtitle, "The Culture of our Post-Christian Era." The later "Death of God" movement was simply one more indication of how traumatic the whole cultural revolution has been.

Although the very word revolution threatens many people, there is really no other word which so precisely describes our present situation. To say that we are in the midst of a revolution is simply another way to say that we are living in the midst of profound irreversible change. There are many evidences of this constantly confronting us. In the area of technology changes are taking place so rapidly that industrial development and production can hardly keep pace. The designs for new machinery are out of date almost before they can be produced. In the area of political change we have seen the rise of literally dozens of new nation-states and the violent overthrow of established governments within the last decades. We have witnessed the dissolution of great world empires many of which had stood for over a century. In the area of social relations there has been a radical shift in attitudes and in the social status of minority groups. There is much turmoil, demonstrating, rioting, and physical violence among us as dissatisfied groups attempt to bring about immediate changes in the political, economic, and social structure. And all this has resulted in unprecedented upheaval and confusion of cultural and moral values.

The Threat of Revolution

The word revolution is related to both the words revolve and revolt. For example, we measure the speed of a turning wheel in "revolutions per minute." Following this metaphor we sometimes describe a person who moves in thought from one position to another and finally returns full cycle as having made a complete revolution in his thought.

More often, however, the word is used to describe a complete change in thinking or style of life—a change more closely related to a "revolt" against an earlier position than a revolving full circle. Thus when demands are made for major immediate changes, that is, revolutionary changes, the psychological association of the ideas of revolt and rebellion are obvious; and because of this association the word revolution as well as the reality conjure up fearful and often irrational images. While such emotional associations are understandable, they are not very helpful in analyzing our present crisis.

When one considers the jolting impact of contemporary changes, it is little wonder that the words revolution and revolutionary trigger an explosion of resentment and suspicion among the great majority of established, middle-class Americans! Indeed, for the majority revolution is a synonym for insurrection, rebellion, and revolt against a familiar, tolerable order which has given stability and a degree of meaning to their lives. But pause a moment for reflection. Why is the "silent majority" so passively tolerant of the status quo, or, as it has come to be called, "law and order"? Why are they threatened by the possibility of radical change? Is it not in part because they are afraid that change will mean more loss than gain for them? Those who have nothing, "the wretched of the earth" as Fanon calls them, are the ones who favor revolutionary change. They have nothing to lose at worst and possibly something to gain. When middle-class American Christians instinctively react to the possibility of revolution with fear and hostility, does it not betray their identity with the affluent—the rich of the earth?

A blind reaction of fear and anxiety have made it very difficult for Christians of middle-class America to see the real issues at stake in the present revolution. No revolution within historical memory has been an unmixed blessing. Certainly neither the Protestant revolution of the sixteenth century nor the American political revolution of 1776 resulted in unadulterated good. And one would be worse than naive to expect only good to come out of the present conflict of interests and values. But it is likewise only the hopelessly credulous who could suggest that the pre-World War II era of the New Deal was the best of all possible worlds! It is, therefore, exceedingly important in this time of crisis that we calm our emotions and give ourselves to rational reflection.

A Christian Response

Christians who understand their New Testament will not be against change per se, not even revolutionary change. The very concept of Christian conversion calls for immediate and profound change in one’s life orientation and style, which also clearly implies the desirability of radical social change consequent on conversion. Indeed, the church is supposed to be just such a revolutionary community. Did not Jesus identify with the “wretched of the earth” and announce the good news of a radically new day for them? The kingdom or rule of God which He proclaimed both in His teaching and in His ministry to the poor turned the old order on its head as can be plainly seen in the Sermon on the Mount. Its revolutionary character is portrayed in the “Song of Mary” (Lk. 1:46-55) and in Jesus’ characterization of His own ministry in the synagogue at Nazareth (Lk. 4:18, 19). Jesus so threatened the political and religious institutions of His day with this “good news” of God’s revolutionary righteousness that they executed Him as a common criminal. He took up His cross (Mt. 10:34-38).

In more recent history the Anabaptists represent the valid revolutionary element in the Christian message. Anabaptism was born in the vortex of a major socio-political revolution in Western culture, and its leaders were themselves revolutionaries. They called for the rejection of the old system and for the radical restructuring of the social and religious order. They demanded a fundamental change in the relation of church and state. They challenged the accepted institutions of private property and the rights of the aristocracy to hold property at the expense of the peasants. They rejected the authority of either secular government or institutional church over conscience. They redefined the relation of men and women in society and repudiated the canon law which had regulated marriage for generations. Little wonder that they were viewed as fanatics both by those who wished to preserve the old order and those who sought a more conservative reform.

Added to all this they demanded immediate change. Their convictions led them to acts of civil disobedience and protest against the religious and the political corruption of their day. In Zurich for example, they refused to delay action until the town council would legitimate their reforms. In the name of a higher authority they demanded that Zwingli not only teach and prepare the way for eventual change under due process of law and order, but that he act immediately to correct public morality and the practice of religion. This is the very essence of revolution!

These precedents from the past are fairly easy to recognize and affirm because they no longer threaten us, but who is the Christian revolutionary of today? Where is the Christian prophet who challenges not only the sin and selfishness of individuals but the injustice and sin structured into the social order? Where is the Christian revolutionary who calls for radical changes in the social order as well as in personal life? Martin Luther King was such a man calling the Christian church and the nation to end discrimination and segregation in its own midst, and because of the violent reaction caused by his forthright insistence on revolutionary change millions of Christians condemned him. Are “pray ins” and “speaks ins” so very much different from the “cleanse in” which Jesus held in the temple? How shall we discern the work of God’s Spirit in the midst of revolution?

There can be no doubt but that the New Testament calls for radical changes both in the individual and in the social order. Prophets like Paul and Silas were called men “who turned the world upside down” because they interfered with the “business as usual” of their own day. Recognizing this, however, does not imply that all revolutionary change is good. There is much in the current revolutionary situation that is in direct conflict with God’s redemptive plan for the world. We need to ask, therefore, what the real issues are and what is or is not worthy of our support. Christians are called upon to “read the signs of the times.” They must “test the spirits,” and in this they must be wise as well as harmless! But followers of Jesus Christ should never reject revolutionary change simply because it threatens their own man-made security. That is the great temptation of the present.

Remember to Forget

By David McCarthy

If you have a poor memory, stay away from airplanes! The airlines could open a department store with the belongings left on commercial flights.

In 1968, 26 million passengers traveled on United Airlines, and 60,000 of them left something behind. They overlooked everything from false teeth to fur coats, including expensive cameras and even wheelchairs.

An attendant at lost-and-found remarked, “You name it, and if we haven’t got it we’re going to get it!”

On any given day United has $250,000 worth of forgotten belongings waiting to be claimed.

Sometimes forgetfulness can be a blessing. The Book of Genesis tells how Joseph was sold into slavery by his brothers and was later jailed on a trumped-up charge. When he finally became prime minister of Egypt he testified, “God . . . hath made me forget all my toil” (Gen. 41:51).

Is there something God wants you to forget? Is a hurt, real or imagined, gnawing away at your life? Perhaps God is calling you to give up a grudge, or to throw away that worn excuse about hypocrites in the church. Maybe He is asking you to forget sins, long ago confessed to Him, but still haunting your conscience.

If it seems hard to forget, think about this verse, “Thus saith the Lord . . . I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more” (Jer. 31:34). When you become a Christian, God forgives all your sins, no matter how wicked! If He has put your sins out of His mind, can’t you do the same to those who have wronged you?

Be sure that you remember to forget!
The Primary Need of the Church

Ed. note: These responses, along with the past several weeks' responses, were selected from letters written by persons who answered an editorial which asked the question, "What Is The Primary Need of the Church as You See It?" This issue concludes the series.

God’s Will

I found this thought in the book, Splinters from an African Log. "I must get to the place where I can pray that the Lord will make me willing that He should make me willing that His will be done in my life; not my will but His be done in and through me at any time and in everything."

This is the great need of the church. It might take a civil war or some other terrible thing to bring us to this place but until we do get there, the church will continue to fall. "Not my will, but thine," is our crying need. — M. Lena Kreider, Palmyra, Mo.

Filled by the Spirit

The primary need of the church today is for each member to have a new awareness and fresh infilling of the Holy Spirit. Church members need to be disciples of Christ, ready and willing to be led by the Spirit. Let us deny ourselves and sell out to God in daily obedience to Him. Only then can the Spirit lead us and give us power and boldness to win souls into the kingdom of God. — Paul Good, Carstairs, Alberta.

New Testament Repentance

I believe a great need of the church today is repentance as the Lord told many of the churches in Revelation 2 and 3; repentance of spiritual coldness, pride, worldliness, etc. If each Christian realizes the greatness of his salvation, the victory over sin through faith, and daily lives and walks with his Lord, continually searching his heart for right motives in all areas of life; the church would be on fire for God. — Betty Denlinger, Strasburg, Pa.

Teaching on Second Coming

As we see it a need might be to let God’s Word and especially the New Testament be the authority for our decision-making. Another need might be for our ministers to study again of Christ’s second coming and give sermons on it. It is taught many times in the Bible and especially in Matthew 24 and in Acts, the Epistles, and Revelation. We believe He is coming soon and may we all be ready and not as the foolish virgins in Matthew 25. — Elmer Gingerich, Baden, Ont.

Understanding of the Devil

One avenue that is much neglected today is the preaching of the devil and his cunning, wily ways. Children grow up not really knowing how he is a real person just as real as the Holy Spirit and God. The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye (includes the one-eyed monster in so many Christian homes), the pride of life etc. in 1 John 2:15-17 where it says, "Love not the world."

Every Christian should know and be reminded often of the devil, sin and its consequences as well as love. Hell is real too but it is not mentioned much anymore. Is this a trick of the devil? — Mrs. Sam Egli, Atlantic, Pa.

"As I See It"

I was privileged to be born into a Christian home, grew up in the Mennonite tradition, studied in one of our denominational schools, am proud to be identified with our Mennonite Church today, and have no desire to be in any way controversial.

However, as the result of the experiences God has so graciously given me, I have come to the conclusion that, as a denomination, our theology of the Holy Spirit is not adequate. There is such a thing as the baptism or filling of the Holy Spirit, and I am afraid that we as a denomination have not been open to it. I am not saying that this experience cannot take place at conversion, but the sad fact is that for many of us it did not happen then.

It was after being a Christian for a number of years that I became aware of this possibility, and asked God to fill me with His Holy Spirit. In answer to that prayer, there has come into my life a sense of the supernatural that was not there before, and how I thank God for it. I am convinced that this is the norm for the New Testament believer.

I am well aware of the excesses: perfectionism, undue emphasis on tongues and other gifts, emotionalism, and spiritual pride, among other things. However, fear of these things dare not blind our eyes to that which is perfectly biblical, valid, and glorious, and the source of the flow of power that we read of in the Book of Acts.

It is my concern that our people do not have to continue to go outside our denomination to groups such as the Pentecostals and the Full Gospel Fellowship to find teaching on the Holy Spirit. I have every respect for what God is doing in these groups, but feel that often there is an unhealthy emphasis on tongues, making the exercise of them a criteria for the presence of the Spirit. Rather, I see tongues as one among the gifts, and it has been my observation that sometimes an individual moves into the fullness of the Spirit without any physical manifestations whatsoever, other than a deep sense of inner peace.

It is my hope that we can preserve our own worship tradition, with all its richness and dignity, and at the same time open ourselves to the reality of the Spirit, and let the charismatic movement enrich us in a way that will bring new life and power.

It will require some humility on our part for we have always prided ourselves on being biblical and teaching the "all things" of Scripture. However, God always blesses genuine honesty and openness.

I am fearful, that unless we can give the Spirit His proper place in our midst, God will pass us by, and that on every level: denominational, congregational, and individual.

Drugs: Ten Reasons Why

By Leighton Ford

Today drugs have become for many a way of life. A conservative estimate is that at least five million Americans have tried marijuana at least once. Some would push that estimate up to twenty million.

It is no answer to the problem to panic or give way to hysteria as many parents have done.

First, we need to recognize that the drug problem is a growing one. We are now faced with multiple drug use. It's not a matter of simple answers to one drug — marijuana or LSD. Drug users take many other drugs — amphetamines, barbiturates, sedatives. Young people often make up names for these drugs — "speed," "grass," "red-birds," "yellow-jackets," "acid" — in order to confuse adults.

The age of drug users has gone down alarmingly. New York has had its first heroin death of a 12-year-old. Drug use has also spread from the deprived inner city to the affluent suburbs.

Why do people use drugs? From my study I have listed ten different reasons:

(1) Plain curiosity. Spare time, plenty of money, and pressure from peer groups is probably the biggest reason.

(2) Lack of leadership. Young people looking for charismatic heroes to follow have become disillusioned with our so-called leaders.

(3) Rebelliousness. Some use drugs in a deliberate effort to flout parents, tear down authority, and widen the generation gap.

(4) Mind-expansion. Some users are searching for greater insights into themselves.

(5) Fear of the future. A teenager said, "Our generation knows that the wrong finger on the right trigger could blow up the world. So we live for today, 'cause tomorrow may never come.'"

(6) Boredom. This is the result of an affluent society that gives nothing to live for and nothing to die for.

(7) Loneliness. A University of Florida co-ed who is a former drug user says that loneliness of students on big campuses leads many to drugs.

(8) Alienation. This is a deep personality problem for many who find it impossible to give love or receive love and hide from it by drugs.

(9) Sexual problems. Some are so confused and frightened by changing sexual mores that they seek either to relieve their guilt or run away from contact with the opposite sex through drugs.

(10) A spiritual hunger. Man has an inner need. If his spiritual craving is not satisfied by a real relationship with God he will seek false fulfillments.

Parents: Four Things to Do

You may be a parent who has discovered that your child is using drugs. My advice is: (1) don't panic; (2) go to your doctor or some competent person and find all you can about drugs; get educated; (3) then forget about drugs and start looking at your child and trying to understand his or her motivation; (4) look at yourself; examine the priorities of your life and your home; is there a spiritual vacuum? Perhaps you can take the lead in helping your whole family to find a satisfying relationship with God.

There is no simple answer to the drug problem. Proper legal control, proper medical treatment, proper social action are needed. The ultimate solution must be in the spiritual dimension. As one teenager says, "We have to go to the root of the problem and the root of the problem is not where people get their narcotics. It has to do with the heart."

The surest way to make it hard for children is to make things easy for them.

It is a mistake to think there is always a right way and a wrong way — there is always a right way, but a hundred wrong ways.
Orion Over Me-Akan

By Adella Kanagy

From my kitchen window on the outskirts of Ashoro, Me-Akan Peak rises in the distance, over the rugged terrain of eastern Hokkaido. Cloudy days conceal her, but when the glistening snowfields of this volcanic peak are bathed in sunrise hues, or glow in the sun’s last rays as shadows creep over the nearer landscape, Me-Akan Peak is a thing of beauty. Her crown of steam from the old crater is always radiant in the sunlight.

On a winter afternoon’s drive through the mountains of nearby Akan National Park, our car plowed into a snowbank near the foot of Me-Akan. The family walked the snowy road for several miles before finding help at the one hot-spring hotel in the area, and had time to see the scenery we had been speeding past.

The sun had already left this high valley where Me-Akan Peak rose before us. Deepening shades of sky and evergreen forest contrasted with the whiteness of the snowy roadsides, the ice-covered lake, and towering Me-Akan. Every drift reflected diamonds a small moon scattered there.

Even with steady walking, the near-zero cold penetrated. When the road began to seem endless, we looked up to see stars in the dark canopy overhead. Above the silent, frozen volcano with its whip of steam, the constellation Orion rose, and moved imperceptibly along its course, the precise path it has followed throughout the ages. Above the setting was Job viewing it some three thousand years ago when he marveled, “[God] alone stretched out the heavens . . . who made the Bear and Orion, the Pleiades and the chambers of the south; who does great things beyond understanding, and marvelous things without number” (Job 9:8-10)? Three thousand years later we were seeing Orion still moving ceaselessly in the pattern traced by its Creator. Recalling the splendor of that winter scene, I can sing with the psalmist: “Praise the Lord! . . . Happy is he whose help is the God of Jacob, whose hope is in the Lord his God, who made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that is in them; who keeps faith for ever” (Ps. 146: 1, 5, 6).

In time we reached the Nonaka Onsen (hot-spring hotel), and our needs were met: shovels and willing hands to move the car; hot sulfur bath and steaming bowls of noodles to relieve the cold. Thankfulness for help, and a breathless realization that truly “God has made everything beautiful in his time,” are memories that remain.

“[God] does great things which we cannot comprehend.

For to the snow he says,
‘Fall on the earth’; . . .
By the breath of God ice is given,
And the broad waters are frozen fast . . .
Stop and consider the wondrous works of God” (Job 37).

Communique

To: Chief of Staff: Demon Division
From: Agent 787, Christian Subversion Detachment

High expectations of associates in the faith can lead to alienation and, sometimes, bitterness. Take, for example, two church families who have been friendly handshakers-at-the-door for years. Brother A is a building contractor; Brother B decides he wants a new house. Because they have shared Communion in the same sanctuary they feel a certain bond of loyalty. B contacts A and discusses plans. In a warm glow of fraternity they draw up a contract; ninety days therefrom the house is to be finished and both are to be well-satisfied.

Disillusionment begins to set in as B sees A spending what he feels is an inordinate amount of time at another construction site. At the end of ninety days the house is not ready, and tension mounts as B has to pay the new owner of his old home week after week of rent. Finally moving day arrives, and as the last piece of furniture is put in place Mrs. B—a pernickety woman—discovers that the paneling on one wall is crooked, part of the woodwork is missing, the bricks are not laid evenly, and there’s a crack right in the middle of the front porch. Comes the rainy season and cascades of water pour down the basement walls. Mrs. B complains mightily to Mr. A . . . and Mrs. A . . . and various other members of the congregation. But business is business, and no enterprising contractor is going to waste time on paid-for projects when there are new customers to court. Thus ends what might have been a beautiful Christian friendship . . . and there’s a bonus to boot for our side. The B’s have become suspicious of other entrepreneurs with whom they share the pew on Sunday; they figure that if there’s an element of risk, they’d rather deal with some Gentile than to have their faith shaken again.

The whole trouble, of course, comes of expecting too much. This is one of my best weapons—in marriage, in business, in religion. I always make the dream exceed reality. Which brings me to a matter I’ve been meaning to discuss with you. What . . . do you have in mind for my next assignment? I don’t want to set my hopes too high. Devils can be disappointed too, you know.

For Satisfaction

Many people depend on situations outside of themselves for satisfaction. This is unfortunate for then they have no control over the sources of their satisfaction. They live unhappy, resentful, frustrated lives, because they cannot afford the kind of house, car, or clothes that others were privileged to have. All true sources of satisfaction come from within. They depend not on what we have, but what we are and the degree of spiritual quality we possess. Qualities such as kindness, unselfishness, forgiveness, understanding, reverence are life’s greatest sources of satisfaction. Jesus embodied all these qualities in His life and we would do well to emulate Him.
Then Jesus stopped by Mission 70, where he noticed that many Mennonites were saying a lot of things about Him. And so when the crowd assembled for a public session, He went in and found a seat in the tent. The moderator invited Him to come to the platform and read from the Gospel of Luke, the theme for the annual meeting. He opened to the passage and read:

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me; He has anointed me to preach Good News to the poor, to proclaim liberty to the captives, to recover sight for the blind, to set free the oppressed, and to announce the year of salvation for His people."

Jesus closed the book, gave it back to the moderator, and sat down. By this time the whole audience was watching Him closely. An usher handed Him a roving mike, and He spoke again, "This passage of scripture is being fulfilled in 1970."

(A paraphrase of Luke 4:16-21 by Jim Bishop)

Delegates to the American Baptist Convention's 63rd annual meeting were told that the "one sure road to renewal" for the church cannot be accomplished by "some revolutionary detour or by a conciliatory compromise."

Instead, there must be a return to "God's three R's — repentance, regeneration and regathering," declared Dr. Carl F. H. Henry.

Without this, he said, the church "remains trapped in the status quo of the present and is linked only by verbal ties to the best of the past; without divine renewal we are cut off from the kingdom of God and from a hopeful future. Without divine renewal the church-so-called reverts swiftly into the world."

Within this framework is a worldly response to current crises like war and poverty, Dr. Henry said. He urged the churches to debate seriously the issue of just and unjust war. Unless this is done, "the churches will be as ignorant of the basic issues when the new war begins as when the present one ends, if it ever does."

In such a discussion of the war, the following is one of many questions which Dr. Henry thinks the churches should assess: "When churchmen discourage youth from carrying a gun in Asia, have Christians not a right to ask whether they prepare them instead rather to carry Bibles there — or is Christian activism content simply to fuel the fires of political protest?"

The current situation in the U.S. is similar to the "confused political atmosphere" of Germany in the 1930s and the nation is "perilously close" to dictatorship, 39 local clergymen said in a statement released in Evanston, Ill.

They charged that the U.S. is "ripe for an attractive dictator to engineer a totalitarian government for our own protection." And they said many ministers should "be at the barricades" with students protesting the Indo-China war and the killing of students at Kent State University.

More than 56,500 men, women, and children were killed in highway crashes in 1969, according to the annual highway accident data booklet published by The Travelers Insurance Companies. The toll was up from the 55,300 killed a year ago.

Figures in the booklet show that excessive speed was the chief cause of death, that drivers under 25 years caused a disproportionate number of accidents, that three out of four people were killed or injured on dry roads in clear weather, and that crossing between intersections was the major factor in the deaths of nearly 10,000 pedestrians.

A revival of fundamental Christianity is growing out of hippie and drug cultures of San Francisco. Disenchanted dropouts of the 1960s from among the "burned-on generation" are boldly proclaiming the message of Jesus Christ. Their 19-word theological statement of faith reads: "God is angry with the wicked" (Ps. 7:11), "Study to show thyself approved unto God" (2 Tim. 2:15), and "Working for Jesus is like wow!" Many of the modern-day disciples are bearded and beaded, but their message is one proclaimed from evangelical pulpits the nation over.

Jack Sparks, 40-year-old leader of the Christian World Liberation Front in Berkeley, observed, "Somehow or another God is suddenly doing something among the youth of our country." The former Penn State professor, once a staff member of Campus Crusade for Christ, insists that "the youth of this age haven't rejected the church as an institution any more than other generations." He sees a "major change in the atmosphere in respect to receptiveness to Christ in the Berkeley scene."

Editors of evangelical (conservative) publications were criticized by a speaker — introduced as "one of the most significant black evangelicals of our day" — for failing to confront race problems adequately.

Evangelist Tom Skinner, whose Tom Skinner Associates organization holds evangelical crusades in black communities throughout the country, addressed the Evangelical Press Association.

Implying he was not particularly interested in being the "black prima donna of evangelical Christianity," Mr. Skinner said black people picking up evangelical magazines get the impression that God works through only white people. He charged that evangelical periodicals do not report on black activities, and that when they do the activities reported are "filtered" by white writers in such a way that it would be better if there had been no report.

White evangelicals, he charged, promote a few blacks, but only to "pit them against other blacks," listening to and supporting only "safe Negroes." He did not elaborate.

"I challenge you white evangelical people of the press to hire black people at the top echelons of your staffs and to report the black news as it is," the 27-year-old black evangelist told delegates to the EPA convention. "Recognize your own racism and then rub shoulders with your black brother and sister in Christ. . . ."

"You white evangelicals need us more than we need you. We black evangelicals may be your last hope," Mr. Skinner said.

The 1969 statistical report of the American Lutheran Church shows slight declines in baptized membership, number of congregations, and church attendance.

Small increases are reported in confirmed membership, number of clergy, and cash contributions.

The drop in baptized membership, from 2,576,105 to 2,559,588, was the first decline since the ALC was organized ten years ago. The drop of 16,517 represented a percentage loss of 0.664.

A United Nations agency has been asked to give recognition to conscientious objection to military service as a human right.

The request was presented by Pax Romana, international movement of Roman Catholic students and intellectuals.

Eileen Egan, Pax Romana's representative at the U.N., reminded the world organization's Commission on Human Rights that recognition of the right of conscientious objection "would be a logical fulfillment" of Human Rights Year.

For the first time in this century, the Roman Catholic population of the United States has decreased — by some 1,149 in a year — as of Jan. 1.

There are now 47,872,089 Catholics in the U.S., they make up 23.5 percent of the population. Of the total Catholics, 5,179,787 are full-time students attending Catholic schools.

Other decreases were recorded in the number of converts, priests, religious and seminarians; Catholic college, elementary and high school students; teaching staffs, schools and seminaries; and in public school children receiving religious instruction.

Increases were noted in the number of Catholic bishops, overall resident parishes, and marriages.

These and other statistics are reported in the 1970 Official Catholic Directory issued by P. J. Kenedy and Sons. The directory was first published in the U.S. in 1817.

Congregational Visitation Teams

Monday through Tuesday noon, July 6 and 7
8:00 a.m. — 1:30 p.m. — 7:00 p.m. Board Business Sessions (Gymnasium)

Mission ’70 will be held near Lansdale, Pa., on the campus of Christopher Dock Mennonite High School, located on Rt. 63 one mile east of the Lansdale interchange of the Northeast Extension of the Pennsylvania Turnpike.

Upon arrival, everyone is asked to complete his registration forms in the school’s cafeteria. Information and registration, lodging and transportation desks are located here. No charge is made for registration. Everyone is invited for the evening public sessions even if not registered.

Children’s Mission Education Programs are planned for all children, nursery through junior-high, on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. Activities for preschoolers will be at the Penn View Christian School near Franconia, and for first graders through junior-high at the Pennfield Jr. High School. Bus transportation from Christopher Dock and back again will leave at 8:45 a.m. and return at 4:00 p.m.

Activities include art and crafts, music, missionary speakers, recreation, films, field trips, and drama.

Youth activities are open to all young people in attendance. They are also encouraged and expected to participate fully in Strategy Groups and other Mass Session activities throughout the convention.

Meals, served Tuesday through Saturday in the cafeteria, will be eaten in the tent located south of the building. The meal schedule is: breakfast, 7:30-8:30, $1.75; lunch, 12:30 p.m., $1.35; and dinner, 5:30 p.m., $1.35. A snack bar, located in the dining tent, will be open throughout the day.

Lodging is available without charge in community homes. Motel accommodations are located in the vicinity. Areas for camping will be provided at a minimal fee at a campground two miles from Mission ’70. Persons in the local area are making campers or camper space available at their homes for those desiring this type of accommodation.

A nominal fee will be charged for meeting trains, planes, or buses. Please notify the transportation committee (215) 368-4772 in advance of such plans. The transportation desk is located in the cafeteria.

Mail should be addressed to Mission ’70, Christopher Dock School, Route 1, Lansdale, Pa. 19446. For transportation call (215) 368-4772.

For local arrangements: 368-4770. For Mennonite Board of Missions staff personnel: 368-4554.

Registration should be completed as soon as possible to assist local arrangements committees in planning services. Mission Board members or other representatives in local Mennonite congregations should have the necessary materials and other information.

A Preschool Curriculum for Today’s Children

A new Sunday school curriculum for kindergarten children has been produced cooperatively by the Mennonite Church and the General Conference Mennonite Church.

At the heart of the curriculum is a Bible story book, beautifully illustrated in four colors. The teacher’s manual for Year I of the curriculum is ready.

The teachers’ manuals, Bible Lessons for Kindergarten Children (there are separate books for Year I and Year II), were written by Mary Rempel of Hestown, Kan., a mother with experience in public school teaching and curriculum writing.

Mary worked from an outline prepared by four educators representing the two cooperating conferences: Melva Kaufman, then professor of education at Hesston College, Hesston, Kan., who is currently involved in curriculum development for schools in Afghanistan; Laura Troyer, a public school kindergarten teacher from Elida, Ohio, who used the Bible stories in her classes; Cornelia Lehn, editor of the new curriculum and writer of the core piece, God Keeps His Promise, A Bible Story Book for Kindergarten Children; and Mary Rempel, writer of the lessons.

The curriculum begins with the believing community, gathered around the Word, in which the child is found. In this way the church relates to the child and rehearse with him the acts of God which have provided the basis for the community.

The curriculum attempts to allow God to speak to the child through relationships and narration, using child development theory only as a servant in developing relationships and in communicating the Christian community’s heritage.

As in the Mennonite Graded Sunday School Curriculum for children in grades one to eight, the new curriculum incorporates the three unifying themes of Redemption, the Church, and Discipleship. But instead of emphasizing a different theme each year, the curriculum relates the themes to each session, as stated in the introduction to the course. “The theme Redemption is developed in the class session through the telling of the Bible story. The theme of Church is developed through the loving relationships and interaction between children and teachers and among the children. The theme Discipleship is developed as children become aware of the problems of day-to-day living, through listening and responding to the Bible stories, through personal interaction, and through creative activities.”

The new kindergarten curriculum is planned for children four and five years of age. In large churches, there will be separate classes for four-year-olds and five-year-olds. In smaller congregations, both age groups will be combined into one class.

When congregations have separate classes for four-year-olds and five-year-olds, Year I materials will be used for four-year-olds and Year II materials with five-year-olds. However, when four- and five-year-old children are together, Year I will be used one year and Year II the next year.

The lessons are intended for one-hour sessions, but the teacher can lengthen or shorten each session by the choice of activities. The session guides also assume that children will go directly to the classroom (either before or after the congregational worship service) without taking part in departmental worship or other opening exercises.

In September, classes will begin with the unit, “God Saves His People.” The course will be used in September in anticipation of the quarter change in all curriculum materials coming in 1971, when all curriculum will change to September to November, December to February, March to May, and June to August quarters.

The curriculum emphasizes the fact that the Bible tells one story. To help the teacher sense this wholeness, Helmut Harder, professor at Canadian Mennonite Bible College, Winnipeg, has written concise theological introductions for each unit to unify the biblical stories into one story of salvation.

Children are given opportunity to express freely out of their own experience what the Bible story means to them. It is hoped that this freedom of response will make the new curriculum usable anywhere—in the city or the country, at any economic level, with any race.

Many creative ways of letting children respond to the story are suggested. Children may respond by playing the story, either with the colorful figures from the teacher’s packet, with clothespin puppets, with their fingers, or with their whole selves as they relive the story by becoming characters in the story. Or children may make their response through art, with such media as fingerprinting, crayons, colored felt pens, tempera, mosaics, or Play-Doh.

The teacher’s manual also contains many helps for the teacher. Interspersed throughout the lessons are many short articles to help teachers with such topics as the use of the Autoharp in the Sunday school class, Scripture memorization, children’s behavior, the library, and a snack in class. There is also an annotated list of children’s storybooks and helpful teachers’ books, a suggested list of filmstrips, and a list of class equipment and supplies. In the back is a section of twenty songs not found in The Children’s Hymnary.

The teacher’s manual also contains many suggestions for using the two-color weekly readers. Learn for Year I and Think for Year II. These readers provide the intersection between the Bible story and life issues. Many mind-stretching activities which the teacher can use in the class are suggested in the papers: puzzles to make children think, stories to help them solve problems, and pictures for discussion.

The last page of the readers will feature regularly original animal characters, Lyric (a squirrel) and Leifert (a rabbit), created by artist Naomi Yoder from Hesston, Kan. The animals were used because all children, regardless of their socioeconomic background, will be able to identify with them. Some of the other illustrators of the weekly readers are Thelma Thiessen, Esther Rose Graber, and Jan Gleysteen. There will also be songs, poems, mission and relief stories and projects, Mennonite history stories and suggestions for activities at home.

The teachers’ manuals purposely contain a variety of activities for each lesson so that a teacher can choose what suits the pupils, the classroom, and the teaching situation.

The whole curriculum is made of seven pieces:

God Keeps His Promise, A Bible Story Book for Kindergarten Children, is written by Cornelia Lehn and illustrated by Beatrice Darwin. The book contains seventy Bible stories, thirty-four from the Old Testament and thirty-six from the New Testament. There are seventy full-color illustrations and ten black and white illustrations which can be used as teaching pictures.

Bible Lessons for Kindergarten Children (Year I and Year II), are teachers’ guides written by Mary (Mrs. Dick) Rempel, with theological introductions by Helmut Harder. Each book has fifty-two lessons, each lesson based on a Bible story.

Learn (for Year I) and Think (for Year II), are four-page weekly readers which can also be used by the teacher in the class.

A Packet of Teaching Helps contains twenty brightly colored figures of people and animals drawn by Clifford Johnston (these can be used by the teacher to clarify concepts in the stories), a Palestinian house, and twelve pictures.

Living with Kindergarten Children, by Paul M. Lederach, Director of the Congregational Literature Division of the Mennonite Publishing House, is a book for parents of kindergarten children.

Songs for Kindergarten Children is a 12-inch record of most of the songs suggested in the curriculum.

Your Kindergarten Department, A Guide for the Sunday School Superintendent is a brochure to acquaint the Sunday school superintendent with the curriculum.

A sample kit containing the Bible story book, a teacher’s manual, a quarter of weekly readers, and a parent’s book along with additional descriptive literature is available for $7.50. For further information, for samples or placement of orders, write to the Mennonite Publishing House, 616 Walnut Avenue, Scottsdale, Pennsylvania 15683.

Which Way to Mission ’70?

Many of the 2,500 persons expected to travel from a distance to attend Mission ’70, the 6th annual meeting of the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, will be using private transportation. Here’s how to get where you’re going.

If driving east on the Pennsylvania Turnpike, take the Northeast Extension to the Lansdale interchange, No. 31. Turn left on Rt. 63. At traffic light in Kulpsville (about 1/4 mile), turn left on Forty-Foot Road to Christopher Dock School, site for Mission 70.

If driving east on Interstate 80 (north central Pennsylvania), take the Northeast Extension of the Pennsylvania Turnpike south to the Lansdale exit.

If driving north on Route 202, turn left at the William Penn Inn (about six miles from Norristown). Follow Sunnymeade Pike to village of Kulpsville. Turn right at traffic light. Follow Forty-Foot Road about 3/4 mile to Christopher Dock.

If all else fails, read the directions.

Second Brotherhood Consultation Held

A second Brotherhood Consultation meeting, sponsored by the Church Welfare Committee of Mennonite General Conference, was held in Salt Lake City, Utah, May 27-29, 1970. About 30 persons participated in the Consultation, coming from six different conferences in the West in addition to members of the Church Welfare Committee and resource persons.

The purpose of the meeting was to identify issues confronting the church which tend to polarize the brotherhood. Points of agreement and differences were identified.

A meaningful brotherhood experience was realized. Participants engaged in honest search for truth and for an understanding of the will of God in our time.

A third such brotherhood consultation meeting is now being planned for the Central States area. These consultations have been made possible through a grant from Fraternal Funds of Mennonite Mutual Aid organization.

Ministerial Concern Priorities

Special attention will be given to recruitment of pastoral leadership during the next year. The rapid increase of the number of congregations in the Mennonite Church over the past two decades places a heavy demand for leadership. The 1950 Mennonite Yearbook gives the figure of 534 congregations in the brotherhood. The 1970 Mennonite Yearbook sets that figure at 1,534. This factor is often overlooked, but we note the increasing demand for pastors in our congregations.

The Ministerial Committee of Mennonite General Conference established this as a top priority for its executive secretary, Paul M. Miller, during the next year. In addition to this, special effort is being made to provide refresher courses of one kind or another to our ministers in service. From 50 to 60 ministers of the Mennonite Church will have the privilege of taking refresher courses this summer under the joint sponsorship of the Ministerial Committee and Laurelville Church Center.

Paul M. Miller, Goshen, Ind., continues to serve on the first-time basis in the area of ministerial concerns. Clayton Beyler of the Hesston College Bible faculty serves as committee chairman.

Rehoboth Has New Unit

The St. Anne, Ill., Voluntary Service unit now has new living quarters, thanks to the efforts of individuals and groups from the local community and beyond. The rural-oriented St. Anne unit, established in 1956, offers community services in conjunction with the Rehoboth Mennonite Church.

Since construction began April 1, 1970, the Rehoboth congregation has been largely dependent on volunteer labor. Unit members Richard and Judy Kaufman, Harrisonburg, Va.; Elden Begly, Seville, Ohio; and Terry Murphy, Mogadore, Ohio, could only do so much and still attend to ongoing responsibilities. More help was needed.

A call sent out from the Personnel Office at Mennonite Board of Missions was answered by the David Hostetler family of Louisville, Ohio. Hostetler, a building contractor, arrived in St. Anne with his wife and son Danny in April to assist the unit and community with construction on a volunteer basis. Since then, carloads of help have come from several Mennonite churches in Indiana and Illinois and from the VS units in Chicago. In addition, Hostetler was able to summon some fellow builders from Ohio to assist with the block work.

Persons directly responsible for the building project are the church trustees: Adams Marshall, Samuel Rover, Marvin Krabill, Richard Kaufman, VS program director; Gladys Jones, and pastor Mark Lehman. The new unit dwelling was scheduled for completion near the end of June.

Days of Prayer

June 24. Pray for these Mission '70 committees: Finance Committee, Duplicating Committee, Poster Committee. Pray that God will use these committees to help fulfill His will for these days.

June 25. Pray for the Home Missions Council which will meet on Wednesday, July 1. These are leaders from district mission boards gathering together to plan strategy for further outreach. Pray that the Spirit will guide them.

June 26. Pray for the ushers who will serve during Mission '70, that God will guide them in providing this important service.

June 27. Pray for the Overseas Committee which meets on July 1. Those on the committee are: Carl Kreider, John R. Mumaw, H. Ernest Bennett, Roy Kiser, David Mann, Adam Martin, Emerson McDowell, Glen Miller, John Mosemann, John H. Yoder.

June 28. Some persons are beginning to travel toward Mission '70 today. Pray for God's blessing upon all who travel in the next several days.

June 29. The WMSA Executive Committee meets today and tomorrow. Pray for Doris Lehman, Gladys Ropp, Fern Massanari, Ruth Graybill, and the various secretaries as they consider women's activities in these meetings.

June 30. Pray for the Mission Board Executive Committee in session today. Pray for John Mosemann, Samuel Janzen, Leamon Sowell, James Detweiler, Donald Yoder, Lloyd Weaver, Jr., and H. Ernest Bennett, Executive Secretary.

Holsinger Appointed Secretary

President Robert Kreider, Bluffton College, chairman for the Council of Mennonite Colleges, has announced the appointment of Justus Holsinger, Hesston, a member of the Bethel College faculty in North Newton, Kan., as executive secretary of the association.

As secretary Holsinger will be responsible for all International Education Services sponsored by the Council of Mennonite Colleges. These programs include an academic year abroad in four countries: Colombia, Ethiopia, Kenya, and Japan, and summer seminars in Colombia, El Salvador, and the Congo. In 1965 Mr. Holsinger was leader of a summer seminar group in El Salvador.

Mr. Holsinger joined the faculty at Bethel College in 1960 as instructor of political science and teacher education. He was academic dean at Hesston College from 1953-59 and acting dean at Bethel during 1967-68. In addition to serving on the faculty at Hesston College and Bethel College, he has been associated with the teaching staff at Bluffton College at Bluffton, Ohio, and Freeman Junior College, Freeman, S.D.

Holsinger served overseas in Puerto Rico for seven years, from 1943 to 1946 and again from 1948 to 1952. During the second term he was director of the La Plata Community Service Program in La Plata, P.R.
A Mennonite Church Urbanizes

Eureka Gardens Mennonite Church is dead. But this is not an obituary; this is a rebirth notice. The grain of wheat fell into the ground. But it did not rot; it resulted in a new birth.

Dead is the rural orientation of the Eureka Gardens Mennonite Church. What has emerged is the life-cell of that kernel, coming to new life in the specific urban community where it lives.

Born is a new kind of urban church that is taking the best of early Christian belief and applying it to contemporary needs. The spirit behind the statement, "See how they love one another!" is the spirit that guides the progressive new venture at 3406 Taft, Wichita, Kan. It is a spirit of fellowship and concern for one another's needs and anxieties. It is a spirit that sees itself involved in bringing the message of the gospel and of Christian love into the urban community.

Born is a witness to faith acting as community servant. It is action empowered by reconciliation with Jesus Christ as Lord. It is obedience to the call to be ambassadors to the West Side community of Wichita.

A substantial part of the area surrounding the Eureka Gardens Church is inhabited by families of low economic background. It is to meet the needs — the immediate and long-range needs — of these families that a Christian Community Center has been established. Unlike its rural counterparts, Eureka Gardens has no regular Sunday services. The message of Christian love is brought to those who most need it by acted out love. These actions are directed and planned by the Christian "family" that makes up the membership of Eureka Gardens Church. Meeting every Wednesday night, the small group of committed Christians shares experiences and cares, takes part in a very personal kind of worship, and plans for the implementation of programs designed to demonstrate love to the people of the community.

For Sunday worship and nurture experiences, members and their families attend larger churches in the Wichita area. In those settings they demonstrate their unity with the larger Christian brotherhood and benefit from the interaction with larger congregations. Sunday school becomes a time for participating in dialogue with others and for placing children in adequately staffed and taught classes. Although the group originally proposed this move because of its own limitation in size, it now is aware of many advantages. Now it can emphasize mission, rather than its own nurture, as a priority. Other groups can provide the Sunday experiences the small congregation desires, thus freeing the Eureka Gardens Mennonite Church to place its gifts at the disposal of those in the community who desire wholeness.

The congregation has designated two categories of involvement for participants:

1. Members — those who officially are members of the congregation and actively involve themselves in the group life and ministry.

2. Active Participants — those who officially are members of other churches but wish to participate in the fellowship and ministry of the congregation as well.

Visitors are welcome at any of the 7:00 p.m. Wednesday meetings at the 3406 Taft headquarters.

At these regular meetings the congregational family assesses and evaluates projects already available for area residents. The Community Center, which was formerly used for worship and nurture meetings, is the center of activity for a preschool, senior citizens, adult basic education, clubs for children, nutrition classes, and recreation. During the summer an intensified program of recreation and education is provided.

A class of 12 three- and four-year-olds meets three mornings each week to play together, express themselves creatively, and learn concepts and language fitting to that age. It is taught by members of the congregation and supported by contributions from interested groups, supplies from Community Action Agency, and a small tuition fee.

Elderly people of the area, who are very hesitant to socialize, have nevertheless been experiencing release from loneliness and boredom by meeting twice each week for work projects, discussions, games, songs, and lunch. Occasionally special meetings are held in conjunction with the city-wide Senior Activities group. (This agency, funded through the Office of Economic Opportunity, carries programs in three other areas of the city, besides the Taft Center.) One breakthrough came recently when Mr. Reyes, a musical entertainer for children and youth, and Mr. Davis, who fiddles for personal enjoyment, pooled their abilities at a regular session. As they began playing together, the guitar and fiddle music led the others to join in singing: folk, contemporary, and oldtime gospel favorites were chorused by everyone present.

Since one deep need of community people is for further education, Eureka has established and are teaching an Adult Basic Education course, which is designed to prepare adults who have not finished high school to take a test which will earn them an equivalency diploma.

Clubs have been directed by Hesston College volunteers. Presently a girls' club is being taught jointly by Mrs. Marjorie Patzkowsky (a Cumberland Presbyterian), Sister Catherine (Christ the King Catholic School teacher), and Mrs. Cindy Gable (General Conference Mennonite V.S.-er).

The congregation for some time had a food bank for supplying emergency food needs of area families. Resulting from these contacts came the awareness of needs in the poverty community for instructing mothers in nutritious meal preparation. Through the Sedgwick County Agricultural Extension Office a teacher has been acquired to counsel and demonstrate the proper methods for preparing and serving a balanced meal. The meal's nutritious merits are taught; the meal is prepared and eaten; the menus and recipes are distributed at the weekly meeting of the ladies. Commodities foods, as well as inexpensively purchased groceries, are combined for delicious consumption.

These programs have been enthusiastically supported by some of the surrounding Mennonite churches, as well as the local secular and religious community. Contributions from congregations have been invaluable to modify the modes facilities for greater usefulness. Further resources are being sought to complete the renovation. Contributions are most welcome.

— Keith G. Schrag and Phil Gable.

Missionaries Evaluate Roles

A meeting of historical significance for Anabaptist-related churches in Japan took place in Tokyo May 4 through 6. More than 30 Mennonite and Brethren in Christ mission personnel converged for study and discussion on the theme, "The Indigenization of Anabaptism and the Gospel."

Robert Ramsever, veteran General Conference Mennonite missionary, drew from his background in anthropology and social science in presenting a depth study of the church in mission and life as Christian disciples in Japan.

Grappling with questions raised by Ramsever quickly took on a practical nature, according to missionary Ralph Buckwalter, stationed in Obihiro, Hokkaido. For example: How can the church utilize social ties which are basic to Japanese social structure and simultaneously develop a church which gives its ultimate loyalty to Jesus Christ? Are vertical relationships an apparent factor fostering rapid growth of certain new religious sects — compatible in a brotherhood church where each member is supposedly equal before Christ?

In a concluding self-evaluation the group felt that the meeting resulted in a coming together of Anabaptists sharing their sorrows, joys, and hopes; rather than a genuine seminar concentrating on a thorough discussion of the selected theme. But the thrust of common concern was clear — how to be obedient communities of Christ's disciples in modern Japan, translating God's Word into vital action in everyday life.
Field Notes

The reunion of CPS Camp No. 20 of Sideling Hill, Pa., will be held on Aug. 23 at Grantham College, Grantham, Pa. All campers are invited to attend. Watch for more details in the first week of August.

India, Indonesia, to Receive Commitments

A major shift in the Mennonite Central Committee’s priorities for Asia is the chief recommendation to the executive committee made by William T. Snyder following his April administrative visit there.

Of the Asian countries, Vietnam has been receiving the most attention during the past number of years from MCC. In terms of long-range program developments, Snyder noted that there are other areas in Asia as important as Vietnam or the larger Indochina scene.

India and Indonesia are to receive a greater commitment of funds and personnel in the 1970s than they have in the past. The shift to these countries is less a deemphasizing of the MCC role in Indochina, but more an emphasis on these two countries in which there is broad Mennonite Church interests. In those terms, Snyder sees India and Indonesia as pivotal, even at a time when mission boards in general are attempting to disengage themselves from institutional commitments.

During the past five years MCC has strengthened its commitments to longer-term development programs in sub-Saharan Africa and Latin America. The proposed shift for Asia now attempts to do essentially the same thing, looking beyond the present emergency period in Indochina by progressively reducing over several years its commitments there.

Relief Work Needed Following Earthquake

The earthquake which devastated an area of Peru on the western side of the Andes on May 31 has completely destroyed the town of Marcaria, a Quechua Indian town of 5,000 people situated 9,000 feet above sea level.

In a letter received June 9 at Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, Paul Wyse, a Mennonite missionary serving with Wycliff Bible Translators in Peru, stated that a Wycliff translator team of two women stationed in Marcaria were safe, although confusion and anger followed in the wake of the disaster. They were able to contact the Wycliff base at Yarinacocha via ham radio. Wyse writes: “On Sunday morning there had been a baptismal service conducted by the evangelical church in that area. Now, outside of the girl's house (which had been destroyed) a mob was gathering. The mob was blaming the Evangelicals for all the damage. As soon as we received this message everyone here at our base was alerted and we all united together in prayer. The Lord heard and gradually the mob broke up.”

Wyse flew over Huaraz, which with a population of 100,000 was the largest city in the area. “It looked like there weren't even a half dozen houses intact,” he said.

Initially all efforts were made to give medical aid to the wounded and to bury those who were killed. Roads into the area were cleared, opening the way for clean-up work and reconstruction. “Hundreds of people were sleeping under the stars at night and ten thousand feet altitude with temperature down in the 40s and 50s with limited blankets,” Wyse said.

Readers Say

Submissions to Readers Say column should comment on printed articles.

From “War Taxes Questioned,” by James K. Stauffer, I quote: “It's about time for our people to give a consistent testimony against war...” Maybe one should say, “It is about time the Christian Church gave a consistent testimony in every area of their life. In relationship of neighbor with neighbor, church with church, etc.” Why be so conscientious about the way the government is spending the tax dollar as it relates to war? I understand that more people are killed on the highways than in the war, and yet we pay our road taxes, pay our property taxes on our big cars, yes, we even allow our underaged children to illegally ride their mini-bikes, their motorbikes, and their motorcycles without even thinking about our testimony to our neighbor. If we can't, with a clear conscience, pay our taxes—all our taxes—then why do we want to enjoy all the benefits and liberties of our United States? Why don't we just quietly go to another country where we don't have to pay taxes?

Yes, we refuse to give our bodies to the war gods, but, at the same time give them over to all types of lust, food, travel, and the mad rush of the age, making money all the while, and disregarding the truth of the Word that our bodies are the temple of the Holy Ghost.

THEY MET GOD

edited by J. C. Wenger

Here is an intimate sharing of personal encounters with God by men and women you may know. Review your own experience with God as you read how He dealt with others. It will soon be obvious that God deals with each person according to his needs, and that there is no “standard” or “normal” conversion experience. The editor says, “Every generation needs to learn afresh that Christianity is more than a system of thought.”

The Nature and Causes of Revolution

The Nature and Causes of Revolution

By C. Norman Kraus

A revolution in the broadest sense of the word is a rapid, radical, violent change in the established patterns and structures of our lives.

Revolution means rapid change in contrast to gradual or evolutionary change. Of course, the speed of change is a relative matter, but the increasing acceleration of change is a major characteristic of our time. Most persons above forty years of age in the United States have already lived through at least three distinct eras. (An era is a period of time with its own cultural characteristics, mood, political climate, and social problems.) Social analysts point out that we have gone through five such eras since 1900. They are 1900-19, 1920-29, 1930-45, 1946-60, 1960-present. We are also told that from 1900-1950 our knowledge of the universe doubled every ten years, and that in the past twenty years this growth has continued at an ever increasingly rapid pace. In order to understand the significance of this accelerated pace of change it must be compared with previous eras which lasted from 100 to 500 years when knowledge grew at a snail's pace. Certainly, the rapid and accelerating pace of change in our world today must be described with the word revolution.

In the second place, revolutionary change is radical change in contrast to superficial change. As Paul Tillich put it, we are experiencing today a “shaking of the foundations.” There is a point at which qualitative change begins to make a qualitative difference in our lives. This is to say that there is a point where the accumulation of small changes or a single technological breakthrough causes the breakdown of traditional patterns of community which changes our habits and life-style. When the level of change reaches this point of qualitative difference it causes disruption and convulsion which we call revolution.

Agricultural techniques, for example, have gone through a number of quantitative levels of change from the use of a hoe to an animal-drawn machine to relatively simple machinery with steam or internal combustion engines to highly complex and even automated machinery. Where along this line one makes the point of significant qualitative change may be in question because qualitative change is a result of an accumulation of smaller changes. But certainly by comparing the two ends of the continuum we can see the principle in operation. There is qualitative but not quantitative change between the use of hoe and ox-drawn plow. This change did not revolutionize the life-style of rural societies. But the change to complex, automated machinery has “revolutionized” farming and is changing the face of our rural communities. In this context it is interesting to note where the Amish have drawn the line between quantitative and qualitative change. They wished to stop short of revolutionary change.

Within the lifetime of the present generation the amount of change has been so great that it has broken down the traditional patterns and structures of our life together. In the realm of technological development, which has played such a significant role in the present revolution, the invention of the automobile, the application of electricity to our industrial life, and the use of atomic energy may be cited as examples of such qualitative changes. They have in many subtle and yet profound ways changed our style of life and mode of thought. Indeed, so great have been the changes in the past twenty-five years that some sociologists and anthropologists point out that the “generation gap” is really a culture gap like that between immigrant parents and their children born in the adopted country.

In the third place, violent disruption is an inherent characteristic of revolution. The violence I speak of is an inevitable result of collision between demands for immediate change and the inertia of social institutions. It is the violence of disorder often bordering on anarchy. Because human nature is historically conditioned and finds security and meaning in tradition, rapid, profound change inevitably causes conflict and tension. This is true not only in the individual but even more so in society. We need to use our words carefully here, but in this sense of the word there is no such thing as a peaceful revolution. There may, of course, be a "bloodless revolution," that is, a revolution without physical violence, but all revolutions profoundly disturb the psychological and social processes. Therefore they are experienced as periods of violent turmoil and upheaval.

It is in this sense that we are to understand the words of Jesus in Luke 12:49-56:

"I came to cast fire upon the earth; and would that it were already kindled! ... Do you think that I have come to give peace on earth? No, I tell you, but rather division; for henceforth in one house there will be five divided, three against two and two against three. ... But why do you not know how to interpret the present time?"

This violent disruption inherent in revolution presents a special problem to the pacifist or nonresistant Christian. How shall he then relate to revolution and revolutionaries? Should he be on principle be one of the "silent majority"? Should he champion "law and order" that is, the status quo, in the name of "peace"? Or should he work for desirable changes? If so, how should he attempt to change public opinion? Shall he use only the legalized procedures provided by the political system, or shall he protest in nonviolent civil disobedience if his conscience tells him that the laws and customs are wrong? The dilemma is that while physical violence may be avoided in a period of revolution, there is no escape from the social violence of turmoil, disorder, and disruption inherent in revolutionary change. This is equally true for both those who side with the old order and those who attempt to change it.

Causes of Revolution

Revolutions often appear to come suddenly and without warning. This is, however, by no means the case. Historical perspective reveals that the present world revolution has been long in preparation. It will be helpful in understanding our present situation to take note of a few of the more far-reaching causes of today’s moral, social, and political turmoil.

In the first place the technological developments of the last 100 years are a major cause. I need not describe this development in any detail, but let me call attention to one result of technology which has created fundamental differences in our life-style and values. For the first time in the history of mankind our industrial technology has made it possible to produce more than we can consume. This single fact has changed the relation of work and wages. It has led to vastly new attitudes toward waste and thrift. It has necessitated a new definition of and attitude toward luxury. This represents a basic change in our value structure and has many implications for our political, economic, and moral practice.

Within the past 50 years the rapidly accelerating growth in world population has reached alarming proportions. This is a second cause of the contemporary revolution. As Margaret Mead has pointed out, the central concern of all societies to the present has been the preservation of themselves through procreation. So far as we know this is the first time in human history that the survival of viable human society depends upon reducing the population growth. This unprecedented upward spiral in population growth has had a revolutionary effect on attitudes toward contraception and abortion around the world. Until very recently childbearing was considered the moral responsibility of every married couple. It was wrong not to bear children if conception was physically possible. But today in a country like India the survival of the nation at even a tolerable level of human existence depends upon the prevention of conception and childbearing. This factor alone, not to mention other contributing causes, has revolutionized our thinking about the meaning and morals involved in human sexuality.

A third cause lying back of the contemporary cultural revolution is the new mobility. Our world has literally become one world. It is possible to travel from any point in the United States to any other point on the globe in less than a day. When we add to this the modern communications systems which make it possible to be simultaneously in touch with many cultures, we can begin to understand the impact which it has had upon our thinking. We have become aware of many more possible and legitimate options for thought and action. And we have become emotionally acclimated to a great variety of social and moral responses. This new mobility has added an element of relativism to the value judgments of our society which has profoundly affected our life-style. Witness, for example, its influence upon the variety of styles in clothing, art, and music, not to mention political ideologies and social patterns.

The fourth and last example of changes which lie back of today’s revolution is the amazing breakthrough in human knowledge about the universe and ourselves. As noted above, from about 1900 to 1950 it was estimated that our knowledge doubled every ten years. Since then it has been doubling at an ever accelerating pace and computers have now made it possible to speed up the process of data gathering even more.

This new empirical knowledge means new possibilities for controlling human destiny. Particularly in the area of human genetic “engineering” and control disturbing questions are being raised. The adequacy of many of our most cherished and unchallenged moral assumptions about the regulation of human life and society is being called into question. For example, the old rule that one was responsible to keep a dying person alive so long as he could be fed orally, or in other cases so long as the heart was beating, is now quite inadequate in light of our technical ability to keep unconscious bodies alive for weeks through intravenous feeding. And who can predict what will be the ethical and religious modifications demanded by the new knowledge and techniques now being pursued in the field of human genetics? The revolutionary implications of this new empirical knowledge for the restructuring of our life is at the moment even beyond imagination.

It would appear from this, therefore, that we are only in the beginning stages of a revolution which will in all likelihood continue for many years, and from which there is no reasonable escape.
VS Is Only the Beginning

By David Birkey

Voluntary Service can provide an eye-opening experience to social and spiritual needs of people and what the Christian can do in response. Especially during the final six months of his term, which usually prove to be the most productive, the VS-er finds himself enthused and optimistic over what he has accomplished and what he can continue to do. This is the antithesis of the new VS-er who often takes six months just to get oriented to his assignment. After he becomes adjusted, watch him go. This is what VS is about — in helping others in Christ’s name, we find ourselves.

What happens when the VS-er completes his term? Does he assume his prior-to-service role in his home church? Was his one- or two-year term just an unforgettable experience, or was it an education in Christian service to be utilized following “graduation”?

Each VS-er, upon completion of his term, should be given opportunity by the home church to share his experiences with them. In addition he should share his newly acquired convictions with the pastor and board of elders. Quite likely he will soon discover needs in the local community which could be met by the church. His suggestions must not be discredited as a passing youthful fancy. In most cases, VS has been an experimental process for him — some things worked, some didn’t. Most VS-ers mature in many ways during their service term.

Church members — don’t stifle or water down his excitement; instead, let it infect you. Don’t expect him to return to old habits. Harness the VS-er’s new drives for constructive purposes. Encourage him to actively participate in the Christian work and outreach of the local church.

VS-ers — be ready to help the local church define Christian service. Tell what you have experienced. Be willing to help your church develop its mission and service program. If it is dead, rejuvenate it.

Christian service cannot be restricted to one- or two-year terms — it is a way of life. Church likewise isn’t just the Sunday worship service, but is evidenced in how we live every day and how we cope with the problems around us. Hopefully, the VS-er has discovered this maxim during his assignment and is ready to put it into practice.

David Birkey, originally from Hopedale, Ill., is program director for the Surprise, Ariz., VS unit serving with Mennonite Board of Missions.

Honor Father and Mother

"Honor your father and your mother, that your days may be long in the land which the Lord your God gives you" (Ex. 20:12). The Apostle Paul puts this in even a more personal way in Ephesians 6:1, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. "Honor your father and mother" (this is the first commandment with a promise), 'that it may be well with you and that you may live long on the earth.'"

This Scripture does not mean that the more obedient you are the longer you will live. It was given to the Israelites during their trip to the promised land. Some felt what they needed was a strong army, fortified cities, and strong leaders like the heathen around them. God reminded them that if their homes were ruined by disobedient children mighty armies, walled cities, or great leaders could not protect them. The promise means that the best assurance of protection, prosperity, and peace as a nation is dependent upon persons who have learned obedience and honor as children.

Are we overdue to look at this truth again? Sometimes the impression is given that parents should make no demands or even suggestions as to what children should do, where they should or should not go, with whom they should keep company or how children should appear clothed. To make demands or suggestions on these or other points is to create a generation gap and parents are to blame for all the rebellion.

Although it is not new for youth to feel parents are old fogy and behind the times it seems a climate has developed today in which honor for parents on the part of a growing number is more and more difficult to come by.

One of the basic evidences of this breakdown is that many young people today openly criticize their parents and freely point out the faults of parents to others. This is a serious undermining influence. To honor means more than mere obedience to the letter of the law or obedience only when in the presence of the parent. It means to uphold and protect the name of the parent as well. The Old Testament tells God's great displeasure when honor to parents is disregarded. A son or daughter who mocked father or despised to obey mother was to be punished with death. Although there is no record of this ever being carried out it does show the serious sin in such attitudes.

A curse was pronounced upon Ham because he mocked his father when his father lay drunk and naked. And Deuteronomy 27:16 says, "Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or his mother." In other words this Scripture says it is a serious thing for children to dishonor parents by word or act even when parents may live or act dishonorably.

Because parents are imperfect and make many mistakes does not annul the command of Scripture to "honor." It is striking as Bossuet says, "Thirty years of our Lord's life are hidden in these words of the gospel: 'He . . . was subject unto them.'" Jesus though perfect honored imperfect parents.

If it were not difficult at times to honor one's father and mother the fifth commandment would not have been necessary. Parents are charged by God to give guidance, love, and direction to their children. Children are charged to obey and honor parents. The primary way God chooses to guide children is through parents. And the primary responsibility of children is to "honor" their parents. Children who do not honor their parents will lead a dishonorable adulthood. A Chinese proverb says, "Rogues differ little. Each began as a disobedient son."

This of course places a tremendous responsibility upon parents to guide with love and patience. It is by the parents' love, patience, and respect that the child learns love, patience, and respect. It is by bearing kindly with the child's weaknesses and shortcomings that the child learns to bear kindly with the parents' weaknesses and shortcomings.

Further, to gain respect or honor does not demand continual preaching. Respect cannot be commanded. It is earned.

Probably it is true that every child at times thinks he knows better than his parents. Parents perhaps have attended less school, speak incorrect grammar, know less history or math. Yet God says "honor your parents." Joseph showed his greatness in honoring his father by placing him at the head of the table though all Egypt despised a shepherd.

Paul, the apostle, mentions that the last times will be characterized by children who are "disobedient to parents." Disobeying or dishonoring parents will forever be a sign of the last days of a happy life, a happy home, country and nation. And disobedience will particularly characterize the world at the end of time.

Children are to obey. Parents are charged to avoid those attitudes or actions which bring rebellion or anger and to bring the children up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Perhaps a disobedience in giving nurture and admonition in the things of the Lord is the reason for a growing attitude of disobedience on the part of youth. — D.

Seeking Applause?

"A man as a rule does not care much for applause or recognition except when he is not quite sure that he is working on the right lines. When he is sure, as St. Paul was sure, it is a very small thing for him to be judged of man's judgment." — David Christie.
Letter to Draft Board

By Dennis Byler

Selective Service System
Indiana Local Board No. 18
Spohn Building
109 East Clinton Street
Goshen, Indiana 46526
Dear Sirs,

When I returned to you my draft cards several weeks ago, I promised I would provide you with a full statement expressing my reasons for feeling I cannot cooperate with the Selective Service system. The following is that statement.

As I said in my letter, my motivation for taking this action is religious. The war in Vietnam, though it may have served to stimulate my thinking, is not important in the outcome of this decision. I object, rather than to this specific war, to the whole military system and the martial patterns of thinking which made it possible.

There are four considerations I will discuss here in presenting the thinking that led me to returning my draft cards and refusing to cooperate with the Selective Service system.

The first of these considerations concerns my understanding of the Christian’s attitude toward the state. For me, all other thinking in this matter springs from the view of a qualified allegiance to the state which the Christian holds.

The Christian is a disciple of Christ. As His disciple, he owes first allegiance to God. All other things must be relegated to second place. The Christian has given his entire life to Christ. He is no longer free to do as in his prior weakness and ignorance he would have wanted to do. Rather, he has a new set of values, and a power endowed in him by God to desire and live by those new values. Not that he is perfect in his attempt to live by them. God in His grace has provided forgiveness when one falls short. But the whole purpose, life, goal, and satisfaction of the Christian comes from obedience to God. The Christian finds such joy, love, and fulfillment in his discipleship to God that he is willing to endure all manner of hardships in his endeavors to follow Jesus.

The Christian understands the state to be ordained by God to preserve order, execute justice, and maintain peace. Therefore, the Christian has a duty to be obedient and comply in everything that the state requires of him, so long as it does not violate Christ’s teachings. The Christian is removed from the state. He does not participate in it: he merely obeys it. For the Christian there is no “good” state as opposed to a “bad” state. He is bound to obey the tyrant just as much as any other government. Insofar as God can use a government and a state, no matter how oppressive, for His purposes, the Christian is not to blindly dismiss it as evil and plot for its overthrow. But, of course, that obedience to the government is qualified by the prior and higher calling of obedience to God and His precepts. In the same way that no government can be completely evil, every government falls short of the perfection of God and is, therefore, less than good, and at times in opposition to God’s commands. And when that kind of a situation develops, the Christian is bound by his higher allegiance to disobey the state.

The second of these considerations is the tradition I stand in of opposition to war. The Mennonites, as the Anabaptists before them, as Jesus Himself taught, and as we see reflected in the Scriptures, believe that war is against everything that Christ taught. War is unchristian, immoral, and unjustifiable under the Christian’s set of values.

Christianity is basically a religion of love. The whole message of the gospel is centered around the concept of love. Had God not loved us would He have sent His Son to be killed by us? Had He not loved us would He have bothered to provide for our eternal well-being, even at the cost of Jesus’ life? God’s love is expressed in all of His dealings with man. And He also expects His followers to love.

It is interesting to note two illustrations of love which Jesus used as He explained it to His disciples. The one He used was the Sermon on the Mount. He explained that His disciples should love not only those who love them. Just as God doesn’t love only those who deserve His love (who could ever be loved by Him if that were so?) neither are we to love only those who deserve our love. If we loved only those who love us, and those who agree with us, and those who bear us no harm, are we any different from the rest of the world? Of course not. The special distinction of a Christian’s love is that it is extended to his enemies as well as his friends.

Another time, explaining who His followers are supposed to love, and having used the term “neighbor” or “fellowman,” He told a parable. It concerned a Jew who had been attacked by highway robbers and was helped by a Samaritan. This, in the context of the relations between the Jews and Samaritans at that time, illustrated how Jesus expected His followers to love and be of service to those who would consider themselves their enemies. Jesus’ illustration of a Christian’s neighbor concerns the foreigner, not only the fellow countryman.

Now I think it is obvious that when someone loves another, he will try to do good for him. He will endeavor to help him and not to harm him. I think the idea of killing someone whom you love is rather ludicrous. But most people would agree with me on that. Where some would draw the distinction is in separating one's personal action and responsibility from the standards that govern one in the time of war. But this is not biblical. Jesus did not say "love your enemy except during a war." And He didn't hold us responsible for our neighbor's well-being only should the government not step in and claim responsibility. In the final analysis, I am ultimately responsible for my actions. And no abstraction like "freedom," "democracy," or "patriotism" can relieve me of that responsibility.

The Christian's approach of love and nonviolence as a solution to man's problems seems simplistic and idealistic to someone who does not think in the Christian's terms. But then, neither can war claim to be much of a solution. The Christian understands, because of a personal experience with God's love, that love can be a real and practical solution. War, rather than being a solution to any situation, is a bigger problem, and leaves bigger problems in its wake. One of the most illustrative examples of this is the First World War, where all manner of sufferings were endured for the sake of a war that was to end all wars. And within a quarter of a century a worse war than that one had developed. War gets rid of the problem; it doesn't solve it. War destroys the problem and replaces it with others. Love solves the problem and arrests any other problems that may arise.

But arguments, both theological and philosophical, for opposition to war have been stated many times, by many people, and better than I can do here. I have only tried to point out a few examples of the many reasons why the Christian is inherently in complete opposition to war.

The particular Protestant tradition in which I stand, as a Mennonite, is one of resistance to participation in war. For reasons such as those outlined above, my spiritual forefathers refused to fight in wars. This brought them many difficulties, both in Europe and in America. Here in the United States, for example, despite a long and good tradition of abstention from the temptation of militarism (which was one of the chief reasons for their coming to America), conscription became more and more accepted, till we have our present draft system, established during peacetime. In the face of this growing militarism, the Mennonites have traditionally taken some alternative to the killing of fellowmen, which such a system would have imposed on them. During the war between the states, they paid for exemptions. During the First World War they suffered much persecution and misunderstanding because of their refusal to enter the armed services. During the Second World War they accepted the alternate service under a civilian authority which was offered them. Since then they have cooperated under a similar arrangement, though only under the specification that it must not be subject to military control. Thus the Mennonites have shown unwavering opposition to war and the military.

In the third place is my understanding of the implications of cooperation with the Selective Service system. In my mind, as in those of an increasing number of our people, the basic assumption that we can cooperate with a conscriptive agency and still feel we are outside of the authority of the military is unrealistic. The conscription system is an integral part of the military situation today. Despite the fact that it may be a nominally civilian entity, its actions are regimented by the needs and desires of the military. Its sole purpose is to provide the military with the raw material for the production of soldiers. Its one and only reason for existence is to channel young men into the armed "services." Thus the distinction between the military bodies and the Selective Service system is an artificial one. Without conscription the military system we now have would be impossible; without a military system such as we now have, military conscription would be unnecessary. The two are complementary. They are a part, the one, of the other.

Cooperation with the Selective Service system, as cooperation with no other civilian government agency, becomes cooperation with the military. Other civilian agencies have civilian duties and purposes, aside from whatever military connections they may have. Their existence can be justified in civilian terms. Not so with the Selective Service system. Therefore, since it has no civilian functions, to cooperate with it; to participate in its functioning; to identify oneself with it by carrying cards issued by it is to cooperate with, participate in, and identify with, the military establishment.

This leads to the fourth consideration: the position I feel is required of me in view of my Christian understanding of war, and my understanding of the meaning of military conscription. In the perspective of the Christian's rejection of war for the multiple reasons given above, and following in the tradition of Christian resistance to participation in the military, I feel that the duty of today's Christian is to resist participation in the Selective Service system. This means, I believe, that a Christian should refuse to register with said agency and refuse to carry any cards issued by it as the government requires him to do.

This refusal to participate is based squarely on both the theology and the past actions of the Mennonite Church. As I tried to outline above, we have, with varying audacity, voiced our opposition to war and refused to participate in it or in any body created for the express purpose of waging war. The Selective Service system, as any other agency that may be established for the purpose of military conscription, is part of the military. This being the situation, I cannot, in full conscience, and in keeping with my beliefs, cooperate in any way with it. Some two years ago, before I had become aware of its implications, I registered with the Selective Service system and received both a registration card and a classification card. Several weeks ago I returned them, hoping in this way to correct the error I had made in registering in the first place. I will never again accept into my possession either these cards or any other token of participation with the Selective Service system or any other body established for military conscription. To do so would be to deny the validity of my religion in guiding my life and my actions.

Respectfully yours,

Dennis F. Byler
Begin Again

By Willis L. Breckbill

A motto hung at the front of a seminary chapel. "Begin again! Today is the first day of the rest of your life." This motto I have made my own. I have also had the privilege of sharing it with others at the point of their need. The truth of the motto is gripping and real because God is real. The teenage boy who has spent his life in useless living can begin again. The unmarried teenage mother can begin again. The middle-age business man who has dishonestly juggled things for his advantage can begin again. The middle-age housewife who has lived it up while the husband was away can begin again. The older man whose life is mostly behind him can begin again. The older widow with an unhappy past can begin again.

The truth for this certainty lies in the fact of God's forgiveness. He promises that those who come to Him are forgiven so that their misdeeds are remembered against them no more. If you had a serious physical illness it would be sensible to have the doctor treat you to correct the problem. If you have a spiritual illness it makes sense to go to the Physician who can heal. God forgives those who ask. When you are forgiven by God in His love you discover a freedom from past misdeeds and their consequences. Love between God and man and man and God is a healing relationship that casts out all fear. God forgives differently than most men. We might say, "You are forgiven, get going." God says, "You are forgiven, come here." That "come here" means God wants continued fellowship with the one He forgives.

The beginning again is possible because God is alive. His present aliveness allows men to come right now. Jesus sent out the invitation, "Come to me, all who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Some say God is dead. But it may mean they are not related to God and do not know the life He gives. The life of God is witnessed by those who have faith.

Faith in God is the point of beginning again. God has shown us Himself in Jesus Christ. He has come that men may have life. Not a life of fear but a life of faith. Faith frees from the fears of the temporal.

You can begin again because of what Jesus Christ has done for all men. The Scripture reads, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only Son, that whoever believes in him should not perish but have eternal life. For God sent the Son into the world, not to condemn the world, but that the world might be saved through him." "Greater love has no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." You can count on the man who gives up his dearest possession for you, his own life. In Him was life and the life was the light of men.

You can begin again because God's Spirit is inviting you. He invites by convicting of wrong deeds that need righting. The invitation is unconditionally out. "Begin again! Today is the first day of the rest of your life."

Don't Trip Over the Cross

By David McCarthy

A jury recently awarded a New Hampshire woman $5,400 for injuries sustained when she tripped over a cross and hit her head. Mrs. Ellen Stevens suffered the injury while she and several friends were cleaning the Bow Mills Methodist Church after a meeting. Mrs. Stevens was carrying a table from one room to another when she tripped over a large wooden cross on the floor and struck her head, receiving a concussion.

Mrs. Stevens' accident is a reminder that the cross of Christ has been tripping up men and women ever since it was first raised on the storm-shrouded summit of Calvary.

Paul wrote, "We preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the [Gentiles] foolishness" (1 Cor. 1:23). The apostle knew that the cross was God's method for reaching doomed sinners, canceling their guilt, and sending them back to face the world with new life.

But Paul's Gentile contemporaries found that kind of preaching absurd. To talk about a cross as the source of new life and spiritual strength sounded like foolishness.

The Jews also rejected the cross of Christ. For them it was clear evidence that the troublesome Galilean teacher had met final defeat. A cross stood for death, yet Paul was talking about the cross of Christ as God's way to life and victory. It was too much for first-century man to believe.

Perhaps you, too, have stumbled over the cross. Have you been counting on the keeping of church regulations or various rituals to secure God's forgiveness? Are you depending on your good works to bring you safely through the last judgment?

Only when you kneel before that cross as a guilty sinner, believing that Christ took your place and died for your sin—only then will God forgive you and make you a member of His family, forever!

You can stumble over that cross and continue to live in spiritual darkness, or you can give your life to Christ and walk in the light of His cross.

It's your move!

The Vine

Weak branch, abide in Me. Be cleansed and pruned, and I will live in you and bear the lasting fruit of love: joy to do the Father's will.

Bill Munro, Washington news analyst for NBC, recently interviewed Senator Karl E. Mundt and his attorney. The South Dakota Senator is the leading exponent of stronger health warnings on cigarette packages and abolition of all TV advertising. Under Bill Munro’s questioning, Mundt said there was a big drop in cigarette sales in 1968. In 1969, the decrease had doubled! Almost 100 percent of the medical profession have quit, youth are getting the facts, fewer are starting the habit.

Senate and House bills, if passed, will discontinue cigarette ads on TV after 1971. Education regarding the health hazards should be continued, thanks the Senator. Future actions anticipated include elimination of newspaper, magazine, and billboard advertising, and would require a smoking section on planes, based on the right of nonsmokers to clean air, unpolluted by cigarette smoke.

In an open letter to the President, the American Council of Alcohol Problems expressed appreciation to the President for signing the bill banning cigarette commercials from radio and TV beginning Jan. 2, 1971, and also for the bill requiring health warnings on cigarettes.

"May we now respectfully call your attention to other products advertised and sold in this country which in the view of many medical authorities are more serious health hazards than cigarettes. We refer to alcoholic beverages. That these products are definite health hazards is implicit in the practice of the advertising industry not to advertise liquor on radio and television. We sincerely believe that neither should beer nor wine be promoted on the broadcast media.

"We further believe that it is just as vital that alcoholic beverages carry an adequate warning on the label of every bottle, can, or other container in which they are sold. Senator Strom Thurmond has introduced such a bill, S 2500, into the present Congress. It would be most helpful if you could indicate to the public your belief that the Thurmond bill has merit equal to the Moss bill (HHR 65-43)."

The death of six black residents of Augusta, Ga., caused by gunfire from police, is "not less outrageous" than the slaying of four students at Kent State University by National Guardsmen, top leaders of the National Council of Churches have charged.

In a telegram to President Nixon, Dr. Cynthia Wedel, NCC President, and Dr. R. H. Edwin Espy, general secretary, declared that "multiple bullet wounds in the back bespeak not an accident but an execution."

Autopsies were ordered on all six by the county commission, over the protest of Coroner Nathan F. Widener, who claimed six autopsies would cost too much.

After the outbreak, Georgia Governor Maddox ordered National Guardsmen into Augusta with orders to "shoot to kill." He called the riot a "Communist conspiracy."

The riot broke out following a march in which blacks had protested treatment of juvenile prisoners in the county jail. A day earlier, a 16-year-old black youth was beaten to death in the jail. The Justice Department is also investigating that incident.

America is suffering from "moral impoverishment" which can be easily compared to the frequently used biblical term, "hardness of the heart," the graduating class at Midland Lutheran College was told in Fremont, Neb.

"I refer not so much to an evil conscience," declared Dr. William Stringfellow, noted lay theologian and lawyer, in his commencement address.

This moral poverty, according to Dr. Stringfellow, is more evident among the prosperous, the middle-aged, whites, those in leadership positions and those who exercise authority because they all have more to lose if there is any change in the status quo.

"In my view," he added, "moral decadence becomes so pervasive in society that one can discern and identify maturity, conscience and, ironically, freedom, in human beings only among those who are in conflict with the established order."

A four-day world conference of Christians for Palestine ended in Beirut with a call to Christians the world over to support Palestinian Arab resistance to "Israeli nationalism."

In a "Call from Beirut," which replaced the usual conference resolutions, the evacuation by Israel of occupied territory was demanded as an indispensable step toward peace.

The world was also urged to learn more about Arab problems and support the Palestinian people in a struggle "which constitutes one of the most significant expressions of the struggle for human liberty."

In the concluding message of the conference which drew more than 425 theologians, scholars, and students, it was asserted that "first of all . . . the Palestinian people had to propose political solutions which will permit the co-existence of men of different ethnic groups, religious convictions and ideologies in a free and democratic Palestine in the midst of the Arab world."

The growing affluence of Americans and religion's involvement — or lack of involvement — in social action were cited as major reasons for an overall decline of religion in America.

However, a sociology professor pointed out that a decline in membership did not necessarily indicate a decline in religious influence. And an upward trend in church membership among the "authoritarian" and "fundamentalist" churches was noted.

Religious leaders surveyed by The Philadelphia Inquirer said that the decline in church membership and attendance was largely due to the growing affluence of Americans which enables them to afford diversions they never had before.

They also contended that the church is no longer relevant to people's lives, and pointed to the apparent lack of interest in the church among those under 30.

Roman Catholic churches in Minneapolis will make payments for city services in lieu of taxes as soon as the city itself, the school district and the state and federal government do, according to an editorial in the Catholic Bulletin.

Bernard Casserly, editor of the official organ of the Archdiocese of St. Paul-Minneapolis, was responding to a plea by the Minneapolis City Council that owners of tax-exempt property make voluntary contributions to pay for services as fire and police protection.

"If it is like most cities, the amount of property owned by churches in Minneapolis is dwarfed by that owned by the city itself, the school district, and the state and federal government," Mr. Casserly wrote.

"The amount of fire and police service received by church properties is only a small fraction of that used by the rest of the community . . .

"We churchgoing taxpayers are already financing our city government services. We are not unwilling to pay our share; we are already doing it through our tax payments.

"But we offer Minneapolis city councilmen this suggestion. If payments for services in lieu of taxes are to be made by all tax-exempt property owners, we will pay our share as soon as it is paid by the other tax-exempt agencies: the city itself, the school district, the state and federal government. We're sure our homes for the poor, parochial schools, hospitals, rectories, convents, and cemeteries won't mind."

The June 8-18 Voluntary Service orientation held at Mennonite Board of Missions saw 24 participants accepting one- or two-year assignments as follows:

First row: John Burkholtz, East Peoria, Ill., orderly for two years at Froh Community Home, Sturgis, Mich.; Glenda Sue Swartz, Dayton, Va., nurse aide for one year at Maple Lawn Homes, Eureka, Ill.; Peggy Moore, Elida, Ohio; nurse aide at Immanuel Hospital, Omaha, Neb., for one year; Shirley Plank, South Webster, Ohio; registered nurse for 26 months at Mennonite Hospital, Ailtono, P.R.; Tom Breneman, Elida, Ohio; teacher at Academia Menonita, San Juan, P.R.; for 26 months; John Longacre, Bally, Pa., two years as a sheltered workshop supervisor at St. Joseph County Council for the Retarded, South Bend, Ind.; and Glenn King, Malvern, Pa., maintenance worker for two years at Maple Lawn Homes, Eureka, Ill.

Second row: Glenford Detweiler and daughter Glenda, Iowa City, Iowa, two years as program director at the Pass Christian, Miss.; Flora and Ernest Conrad, Cleveland, Colo., program directors at Colorado Springs, Colo.; program directors at Claremont, N.H., VS unit for one year; and Mary Jane and Laverne Yutzy, Harrisonburg, Va., secretary and caseworker for two years at Frontier Boys Village, Colorado Springs.

Back row: Naomi Martin, Columbus, Ohio, one year as a licensed practical nurse in Detroit, Mich.; Philann Yoder, Bellefonte, Pa., secretary for one year at St. Anthony's Hospital, St. Petersburg, Fla.; William Cunningham, South Bend, Ind., boys' club leader for two years with the Buckeye group, Ariz., VS unit; Karl Steffy, Manheim, Pa., two years as a teacher in Puebla, Mexico (Franconia Board); and Leland Hoyman, South English, Iowa, maintenance worker at Maple Lawn Homes, Eureka, Ill., for two years.

On June 16 the group left Elkhart to spend the final three days of orientation at the St. Anne, III., VS unit. Their schedule included a work project; discussions of community, church, and race relations; and climaxed with a commissioning service at the evening of June 18 in charge of Mark Lehman, pastor of Rehoboth Mennonite Church. This innovative move is in line with VS Office policy to provide more practical experience outside the classroom during orientation school.

Currently, 320 persons from 18 years of age through senior adult are stationed in 53 different Voluntary Service locations in the United States, Canada, Mexico, and Puerto Rico under the auspices of Mennonite Board of Missions. The next VS orientation school at Elkhart is scheduled for July 13-23 with approximately 20 participants expected to attend.

Days of Prayer

July 1 Pray for the WMSA public session on Wednesday and for the other delegate and visitor sessions.

July 2 Pray for the Mission Board public session and for William Pannell and Lupe De Leon as they speak.

July 3 Pray for speakers Ray Keim, Horacio Quiromes, and Sammy Santos and for persons involved in "Flashes of Action" today and tomorrow.

July 4 Pray for speakers Delton Franz and Nelson Kauffman and for the 90-plus Strategy Group leaders in today's sessions.

July 5 Pray for the 46 Report Teams as they participate in the Sunday services today in Franconia Mennonite churches.

July 6 Pray for the Mission Board in its three business sessions today. Ask that God’s Spirit will give clear direction for the decisions that need to be made.

July 7 Pray for the Mission Board business meeting in its final session this morning. Pray that decisions and conclusions reached will be with a clear sense of the leading of the Holy Spirit.

Southeast Convention Held

Thirty-five men from 14 churches belonging to five conferences working in the Southeast, five men from related church groups, and four men from outside the Southeast met Apr. 17-19 at Lakewood Retreat, Brooksville, Fla., for the Third Annual Convention of the Southeast Mennonite Church.

A convention among Mennonites? If you wonder about that, the convention delegates struggled, too, to define a Mennonite convention and decide what its purpose is. It became clear what a convention is not! It is not a conference with a capital "C" in usual Mennonite fashion. The convention delegates endorsed a statement asking the five conferences to continue to operate in the Southeast, to make decisions on faith and practice, to guide the spiritual life of the congregations, and to ordain ministers. So, the Southeast Mennonite Convention is not a new Mennonite Conference.

Then, What is the Southeast Mennonite Convention and what does it do? It is an annual meeting to which are invited all ordained men of the Southeast Mennonite congregations and one layman for each 50 members or fraction thereof from each congregation. The delegates agreed that "the purpose of our annual convention is for fellowship and inspiration, dialogue on issues confronting the total Mennonite community, and for the development of the faith and practices of the Southeast Mennonite Church."
Church constituency here in the Southeast, and the approval and provision for those kinds of services needed as we together grow in Christ. The annual convention should aid us in unifying for mission."

To talk and work together between annual conventions, the delegates set up a "Committee on Interconference Cooperation." As officers of the new committee, the delegates elected Harold Shearer, Chairman; Elvin Martin, Secretary; and Uriah Mast, Treasurer. Five additional committees, one from each conference, were chosen by the delegates from the respective conferences: Orie Kaufman, Conservative; John Eberly, Indiana-Michigan; Martin Lehman, Lancaster; Paul Zehr, Virginia. The Committee on Interconference Cooperation will plan the Fourth Annual Convention.

Fellowship and inspiration characterized the sessions of the convention. J. C. Wenger led in studies centered around the theme: "Greater Surrender for Greater Effectiveness." Howard Zehr, Executive Secretary of the Mennonite General Conference, led in devotional studies. Simon Gingerich from the General Mission Board and Chester Wenger from the Eastern Mission Board gave added insight and counsel.

After a session with J. C. Wenger expounding the Word of God, Raymond Byler spoke for all when he exclaimed, "Now I know we need the Southeast Convention!" All agreed because they, too, were buoyed up by the joy of gospel fellowship.

Recording to Promote Compassion Fund

The wife of a black Mennonite pastor in Chicago, Ill., has cut a record that endeavors to increase congregational support for Mennonite ministries to minority communities. Entitled "Be a Christian," the 12" long-playing disc featuring Barbara (Mrs. Leamon) Sowell will be released during Mission '70 in May. The first week of July near Lansdale, Pa.

Mrs. Sowell, a housewife and mother from the Chicago suburb of Maywood, captivated crowds last year at Mission '69 in Kalona, Iowa, with her musical renditions of original words packing a spiritual punch set to the tunes of well-known television themes and commercials. Since then she has expanded her repertoire to include original lyrics and melodies in addition to popular television tunes of the day. Both types of music are included in her first album. Instrumental backing is provided by "The Rebirth" from Eastern Mennonite College, Harrisonburg, Va.

Original plans called for Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., of Harrisonburg to produce and distribute the record. More recently the entire project has become the responsibility of the Minority Ministries Council in Elkhart, Ind. All proceeds from album sales will be turned over to the Compassion Fund.

In effect, the album will not be sold at all, but will be given to each person contributing $5 or more to the Compassion Fund in addition to the $6 suggested figure. All regular offerings for the Compassion Fund should continue to be channeled through local congregations. The $5 or more donation for the album should be sent directly to the Minority Ministries Office, Box 370, Elkhart 46514.

Mrs. Sowell's "Be a Christian" recording will also be available at the Minority Ministries display at Christopher Dock High School (Grebel Hall G-6) during the 64th annual meeting of Mennonite Board of Missions.

Yordy to Serve as Acting President

Richard J. Yoder, conference minister for the Illinois Mennonite Church, will serve as acting president for the Goshen Biblical Seminary, 1970-71 academic year. His appointment was made at the May 18 meeting of the Goshen Biblical Seminary Board of Overseers. Yordy, chairman of the Board of Overseers, will commute regularly from his home in Champaign, Ill.

John Howard Yoder, president-elect of GBS, was already committed to a year of teaching leave in South America when he accepted the call to the president's position.

Yoder, with his family, will leave for Buenos Aires, Argentina, in July. He will be a professor at the Instituto Superior de Estudios Teologicos, a new graduate theological study center in Buenos Aires.

Mission Studies to Be Released

The 1970 Missionary Education course, The Church, the Reconciling Community, will be introduced and made available during the first week of July during Mission '70, the 64th annual meeting of the Mennonite Board of Missions. Written by Ray Keim and Atlee Beechy, the study is designed to help individual Christians and congregations to be ministers of reconciliation and compassionate servants. The book was published by Herald Press of Scottdale, Pa., under supervision of the Missionary Education Counsel and Reference Committee of Mennonite General Conference.

The 1970 children's study on the reconciliation theme is based upon three books already published: Apple Tree House by Anne M. Halladay for primary groups, Henry's Red Sea by Barbara Smucker for juniors, and Coals of Fire by Elizabeth Baum for middle school groups. Janet Kreider, staff writer for Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions, Salunga, Pa., has prepared a leader's guide containing six lessons for use with each age group.

Adult and children's missionary education materials will be on sale at the Mission '70 bookstand in the gymnasium at Christopher Dock High School, Lansdale, Pa.

Mission '70 is an annual missions convention for everyone sponsored by Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, Elkhart, Ind. The theme is "The Spirit of the Lord upon Me," and the biblical base is Luke 3 to 5.

Bookrack Evangelism on Mission '70 Agenda

Bookrack Evangelism, a rapidly growing project in many Mennonite district conferences, will be among the features of the Mission '70 program at Lansdale, Pa., the first week of July. A two-hour period beginning at 9:45 on Friday, July 3, has been reserved for a Bookrack Evangelism Seminar. It will be devoted primarily to discussion and idea exchange, according to Orrin Eichelberger who is organizing the meeting.

Eichelberger, district leader of Bookrack Evangelism for the Ohio and Eastern Conference, is hopeful that many new persons will learn about the project which operates under the title Life-Line Book Sales. He is excited about the expanding possibilities and, as evidence of its popularity, he cites a total of 106,058 books sold in 1969, an increase of 39,108 over 1968.

In a letter to district leaders explaining the seminar, Eichelberger comments, "Very little time will be taken up by speakers or other types of formality. Bookrack Evangelism has experienced growth and success, but there have also been some frustrations.
Almost the entire two hours will be spent in discussion . . . and I anticipate seeing some real changes as a result.”

Sawatsky on One-Year Furlough

The Peter Sawatsky family, missionaries to Brazil under Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, Ind., arrived in the United States on June 12 for a one-year furlough. The Sawatskys have served in Sao Paulo State since 1954.

Sawatsky pastored the Igreja Menonita de Moema in Moema, a suburb of Sao Paulo. The church has a membership of 59 and an average attendance of 100-150 persons. Joao Batiste Dobs, a national pastor, is now serving the congregation. The Moema Church also sponsors an outreach in the nearby village of Guarani. Siverina da Silva is the national leader there.

Sawatsky also taught part time at the Free Methodist Seminary in Sao Paulo, conducted evangelistic work, and directed the audiovisual program in the Brazil Mennonite churches. He also served as vice-president of the National Board (an association of national leaders and missionaries responsible for directing mission work within Brazil), and as chairman of its pastoral commission responsible for choosing, examining, and helping to locate ministerial candidates.

Mrs. Sawatsky taught Bible classes in a public school for three periods each week. She also served as a substitute teacher at the Pan American Christian Academy in Sao Paulo, where the Sawatskys’ four children — Steven (15), John (13), Paul (11), Deobra (9) — attended.

Mrs. Sawatsky was also active in women’s organizations. Clothing and babies’ layettes were collected and sent for use in the mission area of Araguaia in northern Brazil. Clothing was also made and distributed for local needs.

Classroom space to accommodate 100 adults is provided in the Moema Church for evening literacy classes. Most of the persons are factory workers and have never learned to read or write Portuguese, the national language. Fifty persons are in their first year of language study. A diploma is awarded after fourth-grade work is completed.

The Sawatskys will do deputation work after attending Mission ‘70 in Lansdale, Pa., traveling west to their homes in Portland, Ore., and Abbotsford, B.C. Sawatsky plans to take further seminary studies while on furlough.

First Woman Appointed Director

Anne Warkentin, Superb, Sask., was appointed as interim director of the Mennonite Central Committee’s Indonesia program, beginning July 1970. She is replacing Adolf Ens, who is leaving Indonesia for graduate studies.

Miss Warkentin, who first went to Indonesia with MCC in 1957, becomes the first woman to be appointed by MCC as a country director. Presently she is serving as a nurse in an administrative role at the Taji Christian Hospital, Java, and will continue in that capacity while assuming her new assignment.

As country director for MCC’s programs, she will relate to the Javanese and Chinese Mennonite synods, serving on the seminary and hospital boards. With her fluency in the Indonesian language, she receives many invitations for speaking in the national churches.

No major expansion or new thrusts of program are envisioned for the next year in Indonesia, except for development of existing programs.

Church Takes Root in Sao Carlos

“Through the months a primary school principal has participated intermittently in our group. We appreciated a family of four from Rio de Janeiro who moved to Sao Carlos and attended regularly until their work took them on to a nearby town. Now approaching our group is a young married couple, blessed in recent weeks with their firstborn. Last Sunday evening they participated in a family consecration service.

... We are thankful for the national guard policeman and his family that were baptized.”

In Feb. 1969 Arlin and Mary Lou Yoder and family went to Sao Carlos, a university city (pop. 80,000) in Sao Paulo State, Brazil. The city lies midway between Campinas and Ribeirao Preto. The Yoders serve under the auspices of Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart. They were assigned by the National Board (Asociacion Evanglica Mennonita), an association of national pastors and missionaries, to begin work in an area of Sao Carlos having no prior evangelical witness.

Initial contacts with parents of their children’s schoolmates, with small women’s groups, and others meeting in the Yoder home led to a baptism and church founding in Sept. 1969. In subsequent months attendance at services has been average, sometimes encouraging, at other times weak. The core group is small, yet the Yoders see a solid base developing for a positive evangelical testimony in their part of town.

Funds have been approved by the National Board and the Elkhart Board to purchase a site for construction of a church facility.

Tobas Hold Conference

Each spring the Toba Indians of Argentina who are part of the United Evangelical Church hold conferences in the Chaco and Formosa provinces. Michael Mast, missionary with Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, participated in the April conference in Formosa province. Missionaries serve as resource persons, guest speakers, or assist the Toba church with program planning.

At the recent conference two large groups asked to affiliate with the United Evangelical Church and were joyously received. According to Mast, the brotherhood evidenced new maturity and unity, whereas past conferences often were used to vent grievances. Aurelio Lopez, Toba leader, admonished the assembly to faithfulness and loyalty to God and later presented a challenging interpretation of the pastor’s role and duty.

Meals contributed to the spirit of the conference. A heifer was killed and served to all visitors along with sweet potatoes and grapefruits. Mast commended the group on their accomplishments — noting the success of the cotton harvest and pointing out areas where Christian stewardship could be strengthened. This is usually a touchy subject since such responsibility must be learned continuously.

The Chaco conference was scheduled to meet on May 1 in Saenz Pena.

Jordan Team Leaves Amman

With increased open conflict between the Arab guerrilla units and the Jordanian army, and rising anti-Americanism in Amman last week, the Mennonite Central Committee team decided to leave Jordan temporarily.

The team is waiting in Europe while MCC works at plans for their return to Jordan. Meanwhile MCC Jordanian employees are carrying on with some phases of the program.

In a cable received Wednesday, June 17, at the Akron headquarters, a Jordanian employee said that the sewing centers, kindergartens, and needlework programs at the refugee camps were operating as usual.

Richard F. Ross was installed as pastor of the Hartville Mennonite Church, Hartville, Ohio, Sunday morning, June 14. Willis L. Breckbill officiated. Richard had previously served the Salem congregation, Wooster, Ohio, as pastor.

A Minnesota MCC reunion for all former workers celebrating the 50th anniversary of the MCC will be held on July 5 in the City Park, Mt. Lake, Minn., beginning at 2:00 p.m. Gayle Preheim of the Akron staff, who has worked among the people of Vietnam under Vietnam Christian Service, will give an illustrated lecture on Vietnam. Those attending should bring a picnic supper and tableware for their families. A cold drink will be furnished.

The Annual Reunion of the Conscientious Objectors of World War I will be held on Aug. 9 at 10:00 a.m. at Black Rock Retreat, four miles south of Quarryville, Pa., via route 472. Sponsored by the conscientious objectors of Camp Meade, Md.

Gladys Widmer, Bayamont, Puerto Rico, writes: "Visible results of 12 persons making decisions for Christ in April evangelistic campaign with the team from New York included two couples (man and wife), two mothers, four youth, and two children. The continuing effort since then has included another couple and another mother. We are praying that a large group will be ready for baptism soon."

Calendar

Mission '70, Christopher Dock Mennonite School, Lansdale, Pa., July 1-7.
Alberta-Saskatchewan Annual Conference, Prairie Bible Institute, Three Hills, Alta., July 17-19.
Allegheny Mennonite Conference, Springs Mennonite Church, Springs, Pa., July 30—Aug. 2.
Iowa-Nebraska Annual Conference, Salem Mennonite Church, Hillsboro, Mo., Aug. 11, 12.
Churchwide Youth Convention, Lake Junaluska, N.C., Aug. 16-21.
Washington-Franklin Conference Sessions—North, Aug. 27.
Lancaster Conference Fall Sessions, Mennonite Church, Lancaster, Pa., Sept. 17.
Joint Meeting of Churchwide Boards and Mennonite General Conference, Yellow Creek Mennonite Church, Goshen, Ind., Oct. 20-22.
MCC Peace Section Assembly at Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 19-21.

Convention '70 is being held in the heart of ancient Cherokee Indian country. An educational highlight of the afternoon tours will be a glimpse of past and present Cherokee Indian life.

Cherokee guides will lead a tour of the present reservation and briefly explain Cherokee history, culture, and reservation life. The tour will also include the Oco hamutst Indian Village, a recreation of an 18th-century Cherokee community. In this "living village" Indian artisans practice pottery-making, basket-weaving, and canoe-making in the way their ancestors did before the coming of the white man.

The world-famous dramatic presentation of Cherokee history, "Unto These Hills," is a nightly production by the Cherokees. Although it can not be included in the convention tour, it is highly recommended for young people on their way home.

Convention '70 registration is open until July 20. Interested persons should contact their local MYF sponsors for registration information or write to convention headquarters at Mennonite Building, Scottdale, Pa. 15683.

Alvin Hostetler, Mission Board photographer and former missionary to India, was admitted to Goshen Hospital on June 17. He is suffering from an acute attack of kidney stones. His wife, Goldie, was admitted to St. Joe Hospital in South Bend for corrective foot surgery on June 19 from injuries sustained in an auto accident several years ago. Home address: R. 5, Box 46, Goshen, Ind. 46526.

Robert Otto reports from Brussels, Belgium: "The day following the Billy Graham campaign, Wilda had a contact with a lady while waiting for a tram. In the course of the conversation she asked if there were any evangelical churches in Brussels. We have had several good contacts with her, her sister, and her best friend. We have also learned that she was recently widowed and has some family problems, and we are grateful for this opportunity to show Christian concern and love."

Arlin Yoder, Sao Carlos, Brazil, says: "We have had a very happy and spontaneous start in our first year here in Sao Carlos. However, good solid Christian growth takes time. We certainly need your prayers."

Laurence Horst, Accra, Ghana, writes: "Two loads of us recently traveled to Santrozo Zorh to share in the special service when 26 were baptized and seven received on confession of faith. . . . Emmanuel Adaueni is now serving weekends as pastor-evangelist at two of our churches. He is proving a blessing to the churches he is serving. He is good at getting the pastor to go with him in visitation. This may be my key to getting the churches to help themselves. They depend very much upon the pastor."

Don L. Troyer, Goshen, Ind., is serving a special short-term assignment in Europe. He left for Europe in late April and will be working with Marlin Miller in the peace witness work in student work camps during the summer. These camps, sponsored by Mennonite Voluntary Service (Frankfurt, Germany), are held throughout Europe. Don will return home in time to resume his studies as a senior pre-med student at Goshen College.

I. D. Graber is making a good recovery from surgery on June 12 for a herniated disc.

A reunion of all persons who have served in Puerto Rico (VS, missionary, medical, radio personnel, etc.) is scheduled for Aug. 1, 1970, at Camp Mack near Syracuse, Ind. For additional information write John Lehman, Box 370, Elkhart, Ind. 46514.

Readers Say

Submissions to Readers Say column should comment on printed articles.

Your article entitled "The Incident" in the June 2 issue of the Gospel Herald must be one of the most sensile I have ever read in any magazine, secular or religious. My first reaction was one of utter incredulity. Then followed fits of convulsive laughter. Really, you must be scraping the bottom of the barrel to publish puerile garbage such as this.

May I suggest that the self-righteous little vulgarian who wrote this article and obviously does not see very many women in the course of his life read, or at least look at, a few issues of Playboy so that in the future he will not be so concerned with women's bare knees. I would say that he has no reason for concern until the ladies in his church come topless which I doubt will ever happen. (But then if it did who would look at knees?) Furthermore, that prissly little Mennonite maid who shot him an angry look when he enjoyed the panoramic view of her legs was probably quite flattered in spite of her reaction. Why else would she wear a short skirt?

At any rate the publication of this article seemed to me to indicate a gross lack of sophistication. Its naiveity is absolutely astonishing to say the very least. But it did provide a good laugh. I can assure you that I shall clip this article to show my children and grandchildren how utterly ludicrous the Mennonite Church now and again appears. — Robert Woohler, Kitchener, Ont. ...

The article entitled "The Incident" on page 495 in the June 2 issue of Gospel Herald is very timely and much needed today. I thank the author for writing it and Bro. Drescher for printing it. It concerns me deeply to see many of our dear Mennonite sisters, even some ministers' wives, following the dictates of the world and wearing immodestly short skirts. Even a prominent news commentator has a number of times ridiculed this indecent fashion over the radio. He gave statistics showing that the awful sex crimes, crimes against women, have greatly increased since women are wearing such short skirts. Surely, a Christian woman wants to have no part in causing the increase of such crimes.

We who profess godliness should make sure we are worshiping the true God, not the goddess of fashion. — Mrs. Harry A. Diener, Gulfport, Miss.

The Christian and Campus Ferment

By Dean Jost

America has traditionally been a rather unstable society: a grouping together of a number of different and not always compatible cultures. At times in the past, such as the Civil War, the divisions between these various cultures became very apparent. Today divisions are again becoming conspicuous—the most obvious being a division roughly between the old and the young which has produced two cultures which are very different, and often in opposition to each other. They have different sexual mores, different approaches to war and violence, and perhaps most important, different languages: words like education, freedom, and love have quite different meanings to them.

Until recently the two cultures have existed in a pure and irreconcilable form only on the fringes in people like Abbie Hoffman and Jerry Rubin on the one side and in groups like the Birch Society and the Daughters of the American Revolution (DAR) on the other. But I feel that people are becoming increasingly conscious that they are oriented toward separate cultures, that society is becoming more and more polarized. Between these two cultures there is increasing dissatisfaction, and growing distrust, fear, and hatred. There is a growing tendency toward refusal to treat opponents as human beings and toward seeing them as objects: as pigs, hippies, communists, fascists.

If this definition of the situation can be accepted as illuminating, a possible Christian approach can be defined as follows: The Christian church has always existed within a certain cultural framework. In the United States it has existed traditionally by and large within the framework now called the "establishment." Recently certain groups within the church have begun to feel more comfortable within the radical culture, though most of the church still feels comfortable within the establishment. The church must, of course, exist within a culture; but I believe the church must never feel comfortable within any culture. It should always play the role of an outside agitator, or at least of an inside agitator.

I think this is what Christ was talking about when He was talking about the leaven in the loaf, or the salt wherewith the world is savorcd. Christianity is the religion of the incarnation, of God's working in history. The church must always be conscious that it has a role to play within this world. But it must also be conscious—and I think the Mennonites have traditionally been conscious of this—that ultimately the kingdom is not of this world. It is in the world, but not of it. The church should never be too attached to this world, either in its allegiance to it, or in its efforts to reform it.

Dean Jost, a graduate of the University of California at Santa Cruz, is presently living in Goshen, Ind. This article originated as an address during a series of four chapel-convocation presentations at Goshen College on "Campus Ferment."

If the church sees its stance in the world in these terms, I see it as having two main responsibilities toward society. The first is the role of reconciler, which grows out of its responsibility to love all men. The church must talk to both cultures and must try to keep communications functioning between them as polarization becomes ever more serious. It first must call them to communicate with each other as creatures before God, as men who are the faulted image of God.

If reconciliation is not possible on this level, the church must try to get both sides to recognize at least their common human dignity and the common sincerity of their beliefs. Reconciliation is not getting opponents to concede to a temporary and hypocritical consensus—to get them to say "We basically agree." There are very real differences between the two cultures which are probably irreconcilable on a human level. As reconciler, the church must get both sides to understand themselves, to respect those over against them, to work toward loving understanding, and, ultimately, to go beyond these differences, not toward the acceptance of one position or the other, but toward something which transcends both.

The second necessary role is the role of the prophet. The church has traditionally neglected this role, especially in the recent past. The church must always try to discern God's will in a specific situation and then witness to this will. In this specific situation, I feel it must witness against both sides. It has to witness against the idolatry of law and order, the putting of man's law first. It has to witness against capitalism, the primary means by which man's evil is realized in American society today. It must witness against the alienation of man when he is quantified in terms of money or time. It has to witness against sexism, racism, and militarism.

But this does not mean that it can feel comfortable in the youth culture which also opposes these things. It must also witness against the evils of the youth culture: against drug culture, youth culture sexual mores, and egotistical and anarchic individualism. It must witness against the violence of both cultures.

This witness must be put in the most effective means possible, and must be both to individuals and institutions. The church should be doing a lot more in Washington and in state capitals. It has to realize that institutions are evil also, and not just individuals.

Finally, this witness should be primarily positive, and not just negative, as I have been presenting it so far. It has to be a witness of affirmation of what God has done and is doing in the world. It must witness toward justice (like the prophets of the Old Testament). It must affirm creaturely dignity: affirm man as the faulted image of God.
who recognizes himself as such and refuses to treat other human beings, other partakers of God’s image, as objects. It has to be a witness toward the holiness of wisdom and knowledge, which is perverted in the knowledge factories which pass for contemporary educational institutions. It must witness toward brotherhood, communalism, holiness, peace, joy, and above all, toward the kingdom of God, and a converted, God-centered life-style within it.

How a Christian Responds

By Virgil J. Brenneman

In December of 1969 Newsweek described the “new mood of the campus” as follows: “Students and policemen in tear gas masks are no longer battling in the streets . . . the National Guard has shed its bayonets . . . militancy and violence are giving way to passivity and personal introspection and the revolutionary impulse seems to have largely spent itself.” Expansion of war into Cambodia and the killing of four students at Kent State University shattered that supposed calm on more campuses than any previous series of events.

I agree with those who say that the ferment on campus is due to outside influences, but I do not believe that subversive conspirators are to blame. Instead all of the issues affecting campus ferment are external issues, with one exception involving the nature, quality, and relevance of higher education and the governing of the university.

Of the outside forces the war in Vietnam is the most disruptive. For nearly ten years the campus ferment has focused on a succession of issues, giving prominence to each one in turn: the civil rights movement, the free speech movement, war and the draft, higher education and the university, and now ecology. But the war has constantly overshadowed or displaced the other issues. Overnight the entry of ground troops into Cambodia rather than ecology became the big issue. Campus ferment is only a microcosm of a national crisis that borders on disaster. How does the Christian participate in seeking solutions to the problems and issues facing our society?

There is some ambivalence among Christians as to the boundaries of their participation in the ferment of our time. On the one hand they are uncomfortable with a passive response lest they give consent to the silent majority. However, they are equally uncomfortable with the nasty irreverence which accompanies the style of some radical activists. I personally prefer to be identified with warmongers rather than warmongers, however, on my own terms as a Christian.

Student criticism has demonstrated the power to initiate changes. It can be assumed that students were at least partly responsible for Johnson’s decision to retire from the presidency. They certainly have influenced foreign policy and the announced gradual withdrawal of troops from Vietnam, as well as changes in the draft law. Basic changes in higher education are being brought about by persistent pressures from students.

The commitments of campus radicals have shamed many Christians. They have challenged us to put our commitments where it costs. They have been willing to pay a price by putting their bodies on the line for their convictions. Such commitments are particularly enticing and challenging to young people who feel that the commitments of the average church community are either nonexistent or fossilized.

Most modern bearers of the name Christian make little difference in the world, contrary to their counterparts in the early church who “turned the world upside down.” Committed Christians should be the true revolutionaries. From this perspective the radical activist is not as revolutionary as he may first appear to be. More often than not, and in spite of his antiwar feelings, he mouths the same answers as do my military acquaintances — justifying the use of violence, or coercion or other dehumanizing tactics, all in the name of the righteousness of the cause.

Typical of some of the people I meet in my travels and with whom I have enjoyed extended conversations is the law student who was one of the core group that initiated the student confrontations at Columbia University, or the young woman who spends her summers in Cuba, or the dedicated leftist in Chicago. Ideologically these leftist young people are at opposite poles from my career-soldier brother but their basic solution to the problems is essentially the same.

Conversations with leftist types often follow a standard course. For thirty minutes to an hour or more we share our intense antipathy to the war in Vietnam, we fault racism or military spending, and exchange other judgmental words about the evils in our nation or society. At an appropriate time or convenient transition I introduce myself as belonging to a group of people who have for a long time said that the gospel (or Jesus) judges society and our nation for its racism, its warmongering, or its materialism. Generally, they agree, even Jewish persons, because it supports their position. But I further suggest that the same gospel also judges me and my hypocrisies and if they will allow it, theirs as well. With some I am no longer on common ground.

But when I tell them about the Jesus way of turning the other cheek and of overcoming evil through suffering love, I am accused of being an idealist, and out of touch with the real world. My brother, a career soldier, emphatically maintains that the communists will not respond to love, that

Have You Heard?

Recently the Commission for Christian Education (MCCE) sent a vinyl record to all pastors telling them about the new kindergarten material available for use this fall, beginning September 6, 1970. The pastors were encouraged to invite parents of kindergarten children, teachers, and Sunday school officers to listen to the record. A second record was sent to all Sunday school secretaries or persons responsible to order material for further explanation and sharing.

"Have you heard" the record? In an interesting way Paul M. Lederach describes the new material in an interview by Arnold W. Cressman. Then you can hear Cornelia Lehn, the writer, read two Bible stories from the new Bible story book for kindergarten children, God Keeps His Promise. These stories have been read to many children and adults with great fascination and interest. They have been used for devotional reading in both morning and evening congregational services.

What is this new kindergarten curriculum which seems to excite all who use and hear it? It is a series of lessons for use with children ages four and five, or the two years between nursery and graded lessons. It provides material for 52 lessons in Year I and 52 lessons in Year II.

The Bible story book, God Keeps His Promise, is the core of the curriculum. It is used both years for Bible teaching. Parents will also want to have this book in their home. Primary children having learned to read also enjoy the book.

Then there are two manuals for the teachers, one for Year I and one for Year II. These are called Bible Lessons for Kindergarten Children. There are two sets of weekly activity papers, one for each year. Year I is called "Learn" and Year II "Think." Other pieces include a special activity packet for each teacher called Teaching Helps; a parents' book to help them understand the child and the curriculum called Living with Kindergarten Children; and a music record to help parents, teachers, and children learn the songs suggested in the course.

This curriculum is unique in that the Bible is presented to the child factually without moralizing. It presents Bible characters as a true mixture of good and bad, much like we are. The Bible stories become real to the child and he learns to appreciate them so that they will form a storehouse of Bible knowledge to him. They also help the child form attitudes essential for Christian life. The curriculum ties the home and church together. Parents become a vital part of the teaching ministry. They are provided guidance in the nurture needs of the child.

General Conference Need Is Immediate

You should know about it. Because it is your work and responsibility you should know. Mennonite General Conference is in financial trouble. It has already borrowed $12,000. Unpaid bills at this writing total more than $11,000. Cash balance is at zero. Plans are to borrow an additional $15,000. The lean summer months are here. Action was taken by the Executive Committee already last December to “ask our committees and staff persons to cut their budgets and activities to a minimum including the postponement of meetings, travel etc., until we can mobilize the needed resources.” Still it is falling behind.

Your executive committee and other General Conference committees are trying to act responsibly. All who are acquainted with General Conference know that you have asked a tremendous amount of work to be done through General Conference on a meager denominational budget of $140,000 per year. Some single congregations approach this budget figure. Demands are increasing. Staff is cut to a bare minimum while projects await staff time to be carried forward. Regular payments such as staff salaries and rentals must be met.

Only as you help can the projects, assigned and begun, be carried forward; such studies and helps as peace education, war tax study, urban concerns, termination of life study, church state study, conscription and conscientious objection study and assistance, maintaining the archives of the Mennonite Church and historical research, a stewardship office and stewardship assistance to conferences and congregations, church welfare committee work in building brotherhood relationships, worship aids and biblical understanding of worship, ministerial committee work in recruitment of ministers, ministerial information center, and guidance on the role and the task of the ordained Mennonite minister.

In addition to these there are other continual cries from conferences for all kinds of services from General Conference. Mennonite General Conference is carrying on work through its churchwide youth ministry, providing resources and persons for church and Sunday school, Sunday evening, instructional materials, home and family concerns, and Christian service training materials. Counsel and reference committees are giving guidance to projects in at least eight major areas at present. The Commission for Christian Education under General Conference is assigned gigantic responsibilities.

These are only a few of the many services of Mennonite General Conference which many people are unaware of and which carry on a continuing ministry affecting, in some way, every Mennonite congregation.

In addition General Conference is seeking to tool itself up to do an even better job as it assists the entire denomination in its study of organization.

General Conference has refrained from crying “wolf” even when he is at the door. In order to keep lines clear and not hinder local and district programs it has depended to a large extent upon the conferences, local church leaders, and particularly the General Council members to make the work and needs of General Conference known. The only source of finance for General Conference comes from the local congregation through the district conference. Some congregations send in directly to General Conference.

In our personal lives, when we need another car we get it. When we need a new tire we buy it. When we want a cup of coffee we do not hesitate. The money seems available for all these. Why is it that the program of Mennonite General Conference cannot receive even one half cent per day per member to carry out the program assigned to it by the church? This is less than one cup of coffee per week.

Perhaps you didn’t know this is the situation. That’s why I said you should know about it. Because I believe you are concerned enough to help. The work of General Conference through its many committees and commissions is important.

This editorial is making a suggestion. How about all of us giving up a few cups of coffee or bottles of coke and giving an additional $1.00 per member to General Conference? If your congregation has met its budget to General Conference it may be you will want to help anyway. But particularly congregations which haven’t done their fair share, how about an offering of $1.00 per member?

A close record is kept of all contributions from conferences and congregations. Numerous congregations have not given one dollar to General Conference for years. This means that others have carried the entire burden. So this editorial is pleading for all congregations to share at least some in that from which all benefit. Why not take a special offering for General Conference?

If support is not forthcoming immediately, drastic steps will need to be taken in reducing program and budget. — D.
Part 3

Why Political Revolution?

By C. Norman Kraus

The second article in this series dealt almost entirely with the technological, cultural, and moral revolution which is changing the style of American life. This is as it should have been because today's political revolutions are closely related to new technical possibilities, the new awareness, and the hope that change will bring a genuinely new situation. This essay will examine the nature and necessity for political revolution.

As in previously cited cases the oversimplified association of all political revolution with conspiracy, rebellion, and destructive violence makes reasoned response and discussion of the present situation difficult. Those who identify with the political government or administration in power and have vested interests in the existing system tend to view political revolution as unjustified rebellion against "lawfully constituted authority." While they may admit that the system is imperfect and that injustice exists, they claim the moral right to defend their privileged position against the aggressive demands for radical change in the political and economic structures because revolution, as they see it, is anarchistic and destructive. Their plea is for gradual change by means which the political structures allow. But such an argument generally fails to deal adequately with the plight of those who suffer disadvantage, nor does it face realistically the selfishness and bureaucratic inertia of the system.

The political revolutionary wants immediate, basic structural changes in the political and socioeconomic institutions which govern our lives. Political revolution is brought about by the use of political power, i.e., the power inherent in a civil community or the power implied in political organization. Such change need not be instigated by physical violence in order to be "revolutionary," although, unfortunately, the demand for immediate change often has been enforced by military power or the threat of violence. Revolution may be brought about by the nonviolent use of power, however, even in such a case the changes are almost inevitably disruptive and cause tension arising from conflict of interest. Such conflict of interest often erupts into a violent reaction against the nonviolent use of power. And herein lies the dilemma for the nonresistant Christian. Can he justify or participate in action which inevitably causes conflict even when that action is in itself morally legitimate or even morally demanded?

The answer to this question is the watershed between the traditional nonresistance of groups like the Mennonites and the Christian nonviolence which is being advocated by writers like William R. Miller and James Douglas. Its answer, therefore, requires the most careful appraisal both of the phenomenon called revolution and the biblical law of agape love. In this article we will examine the nature of political revolutions and why they are inevitable and even necessary in a sinful social order. In the concluding article we will give attention to the meaning of agape.

Social and political revolutions are aimed at the "system," or "establishment," that is, the institutionalized structures of society. If, therefore, we are to consider whether revolutionary action is ever necessary and justified in order to bring about desired changes we must first understand something about the nature of public institutions which regulate society.

By institutions we mean publicly established practices, codes, or organizations which have the sanction of legal precedence, religious tradition, or social custom. Such institutions are developed in response to social needs and give stability to society by providing patterns of social order. They help to maintain continuity with the past and thus give meaning and a sense of security to our lives. For this reason they should not be cavalierly overthrown.

Public institutions of long standing, however, tend to be oriented toward the past. One of the major purposes of institutions is to preserve and transmit values. Therefore public institutions, whether political, religious, or economic tend to be conservative. The new, creative energy and programs of movements become institutionalized in order to capture and continue the vision. Thus vital movements of one era become the organized institutions of the next. For example, the contemporary labor "movement" is no longer a movement but an established economic institution attempting to preserve the power and privilege it has gained in the past decades and at the same time respond to the present needs of laborers.

Because institutions emerge as conservers and transmitters of achieved values they are resistant to change. For example, religious definitions and forms become institutionalized in theological and liturgical tradition which tends to become hallowed and fixed. Social patterns and rules of conduct which are found to be useful in one time and place become institutionalized in legal and moral codes which are then used as precedents for many generations even after they have little or no direct relevance to the new situations. Patterns of ownership and control of wealth which were socially determined in the first place become codified, sacralized, and perpetuated often leading to great inequities in ownership of wealth. This process of sacralization is clearly reflected in the current phrase "the sacred right of private property." In many cases public institutions are perpetuated long after they have become anachronistic and even oppressive.

Further, institutions have an inherently self-justifying and self-perpetuating ego-center of their own. This is particularly true of those institutions which have a visible organization that involves property ownership. Such institutions represent a collective ego which is greater and more complex than the simple accumulation of individual egos. They have a life of their own. And this self-perpetuating tendency is reinforced by social inertia and the public's penchant for equating the institution with the value it once enshrined. Thus even when institutions become highly dysfunctional, that is, they demonstrate increasingly repressive and destructive side effects for large segments of society, they continue their oppressive existence until some stronger force of protest confronts and transforms or destroys them.

When we observe also that all human institutions even at best are expressions of selfishness and human pride as well as positive values, we begin to understand how serious and complex is the problem of changing them. Political and economic institutions are especially vulnerable to the perverted self-justification of human pride and lust for advantage. They are, by and large, the creations of the rich and the powerful, and they are conceived in violence as Jacques Ellul has pointed out. This is not to say that they perform no justifying functions in society. They do. But they are demonic in character, that is, they exercise a kind of autonomous, superhuman (not supernatural) authority over mankind which at best is held in check by the enlightened self-interest of the group, and at worst becomes tyrannical and person-destroying. Speaking about this reality against which Christians must contend Paul calls them "principalities," "powers," "world rulers of this present darkness," and "spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places" (Eph. 6:12).

With this in mind we can now begin to understand the nature and significance of political revolution. In the first place we must make a clear distinction between political insurrection and rebellion on the one hand and genuine political revolution on the other. In many cases political insurrections and palace revolts do nothing but shift the locus of power from one faction to another. They do nothing that can properly be called revolutionary. We must learn to distinguish between palace revolts — the coup d'etat of a military junta, for example — and a genuine political revolution which attempts to reestablish equity and a just order through the transformation of political structures which have become dysfunctional and oppressive.

The Hebrew prophets recognized the necessity for social and political revolution. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Amos, and Micah all call for radical changes in the social and economic order so that God's righteousness might be established among men. Indeed, Jesus Himself preached this kind of revolution. His basic message had to do with the "rule of God" on earth and the formation of a new "people," that is, community of God. He came not merely to save individuals from damnation in the next world but to establish a pattern of "righteousness" in this world. He taught us to "seek first [God's] kingdom and his righteousness" (Mt. 6:33), rather than to seek for our own selfish security. When on trial before Pilate He confessed His own kingship, but pointed out the difference in His method and goal (Jn. 18:36). He had come to inaugurate God's rule.

In this respect Jesus stands in the tradition of the biblical prophets. He was aware of political and social injustice, and oppression, and He had come to establish a new order — the kingdom of God. He attacked the hypocrisy and selfish greed of the established authorities. He demonstrated against the religious establishment. But — and this is the profound difference — He refused the traditional way of political violence and established religious power. His whole ministry was a sermon on the text of Zechariah 4:6: "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, says the Lord.

In short Jesus too recognized the need for radical transformation in the social order and He was deeply aware of the consequences of such a revolution. Nor did He sidestep or avoid this issue. His unique contribution was His new strategy of agape love to bring about His revolution.

Promote a Pilgrim Style of Life

More and more of our members are developing a passion for camping. But there is little carry-over to the following of a simple life. If there is one thing that will destroy the church as a vital spiritual force in our Conference during the next decade or two, it is (what would you put here?) money.

Recently before taking a flight to Chicago, I saw a number of people lined up in front of the flight insurance counter. At first I thought that may be a sensible thing to do considering my wife and family at home. But, no, I decided that somewhere we have to exercise deliberate decisions to remind ourselves that we live by faith.

A lady called her bank and asked for information on her securities. The man who answered said, "Who are you calling, lady? The First National Bank or the First Baptist Church?" We are no longer very clear where to receive our primary counsel on our securities.

To continue to pile up excess baggage is a strange way to prepare for a pilgrimage. — Richard C. Detweiler in Conference address.

An Open Letter

The 1969-70 school year, which has just ended, was one of transition for the Goshen Biblical Seminary.

"In midsummer 1969, the Mennonite Board of Education appointed the Goshen Biblical Seminary Board of Overseers to be responsible for the operation of the Seminary beginning July 1970. Up to that time the Goshen College Board of Overseers was responsible for the operation of the Seminary as a part of Goshen College.

"Last fall Seminary faculty offices, classes, and a portion of the library moved to the campus of the Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries in Elkhart.

"During 1969 a specially funded study of "Theological Education in the Free Church Tradition" was completed. This resulted in a new model for seminary education, some elements of which were launched last fall.

"In March 1970, the Mennonite Board of Education elected John H. Yoder as president of the Seminary.

In planning for the separation of the Seminary and the College, the Mennonite Board of Education, the Goshen College Board of Overseers, and staff members of both college and seminary received wide counsel from many groups such as district leaders, seminary alumni, seminary and college faculty, and seminary and college students. The consensus was that, as a separate institution with its own Board of Overseers and a new campus location in Elkhart, the Seminary should be able to establish its own character as a servant of the church and develop fully its program to serve the church.

Recently there were a number of meetings of representatives of the Mennonite Board of Education, the Goshen College Board of Overseers and the Goshen Biblical Seminary Board of Overseers to arrange a mutually agreeable financial arrangement for the Seminary when it began its first year of operation July 1, independent of Goshen College.

Now that the Goshen Biblical Seminary is a separate institution serving the church, it must depend on congregations, alumni, and friends for gifts and prayers in the same way as Goshen College and all other church-related educational institutions. The Seminary's new program, new administration, new campus, and new vision for serving the church will require substantial resources. Giving goals on a per-member basis for higher education for 1970-72 have been set and approved by the Mennonite Board of Education. Continued support will be deeply appreciated and necessary if our educational institutions are to prepare our young persons for service in the church and witness in the world.

Sincerely yours,
Paul M. Lederach, President
Mennonite Board of Education

"As I See It"

There is something awfully deceptive about the name, The Mennonite Church. It looks like a proper slogan for a reality like the other denominations which have a national legislative body, a church court, a highly developed polity and an efficient hierarchy. The fact is, however, that what other national churches are, we aren't. One doesn't have to be very alert to know that Old Mennonites aren't under a national legislative body and that appeals can't be sent up to church courts. We have no uniform polity and what episcopal hierarchy there is certainly doesn't seem to be getting more efficient or more powerful.

The name, The Mennonite Church, means for us a loose voluntary association of autonomous and independent district conferences which in turn present a bewildering degree of integrity, cohesiveness, and legislative unity. It means a common origin, a common doctrine, and a fairly well-defined style of life. But even these factors are, for the most part, historical and sociological, not contemporary and dynamic. What would happen to Mennonite unity if we suddenly forgot everything prior to 1960?

So, The Mennonite Church is a nice and convenient slogan, but the reality behind the slogan is not very substantial anymore. This means that the slogan doesn't arouse much interest. Try it on an adolescent who is fed up with the church. Try it on a middle-aged tradesman who feels that the trend among Mennonites is to the dogs. Try it on a liberally trained professor who is concerned with social improvement.

To appeal for loyalty with the slogan, The Mennonite Church, is going to be more and more futile. People are not going to buy, they are not going to support, and they are not going to contribute simply because it is something the Mennonite Church sells, promotes, or underwrites.

If my analysis is correct, Mennonite institutions of all sorts will be forced to deliver the type of goods and services the constituency will buy or support. The appeal of loyalty to the denomination and its institutions will be eclipsed by such considerations as: Is it really Mennonite? Is it truly biblical? Is it Spirit-directed? Is it functionally serviceable? Is it worth the money?

Competition among Mennonites will doubtless continue. For one thing, from the frontier days Mennonites have been divided and breaches almost 300 years old are hard to close. For another, modern society has so pluralized Mennonitism that the "authentic" variety is turning up or being restored with increasing regularity among us. To some it is the work of schismatics while to others it is the labor of prophets. Regardless, one thing is dead sure: no pious recitation of the "magic" formula, The Mennonite Church, will change it! — Herman R. Reitz.

Every member of a Mennonite Mutual Aid health plan shares in these dimensions of brotherhood.
Don Kraybill, director of youth ministries for the Lancaster Conference, participated on the planning committee for the Youth Convention. He will also serve as convention moderator.

Jon — Jan — Junaluska — how do you say it? You forgot how your eighteen-year-old pronounced it. Sort of sounds Indian. Is it Cherokee? I always forget if it's North or South Carolina — North is right, framed by the Great Smoky Mountains.

Surrounding Lake Junaluska is a Methodist Assembly. It's a campground for summer activities. Retired Methodist church workers live on the grounds off the main roads. The conference facilities are utilized for conventions, retreats, conferences, and many other summer and year-round activities.

Mennonite Youth Convention 1970 meets at Junaluska, August 16 to 21. These churchwide conventions meet every four years. Maybe you remember Estes in 1966.

For 2,000 Mennonite youth, Junaluska is more than a lake. It's a dream — a dream about an exciting spiritual pilgrimage with other teens. It was a dream until you said $65 plus transportation — is it really worth it? Well, will there be chaperons — what will you do for a whole week — what about your job this summer? That interchange happened in many Mennonite homes.

The Steering Committee has hoped and prayed Junaluska would prepare youth for Christian mission in their home communities and around the world. They also hoped the convention would have a spirit of Christian celebration and festivity. The slogan is SHARE YOUR CHRIST-YOU. When lines of slogans are tied together, they have a number of meanings.

Hopefully Junaluska will be a time when youth learn to know Christ personally in a deeper way which will lead to obedient involvement in the lives of others around them. It should be a time of praise, singing, praying, and other forms of corporate worship. We hope that the youth will find meaning in the creative worship periods which will culminate in the creative worship celebration Friday morning before departure.

Many persons from many places will come to Junaluska — black, brown, white, rich, poor, African, American, Canadian, young, old — sharing together what God is doing in their lives. This cosmopolitan sharing should develop acceptance and respect for the way God is working in the lives of our brothers. Representatives from many areas of life will help to focus the critical issues which face the Christian in today's world. The most important thing at Junaluska will be relationships: with resource speakers, seminar leaders, talk-it-over group leaders, and each other in order to learn and share with each other insights in our own spiritual pilgrimage.

Don Jacobs, missionary anthropologist from Africa, will lead Bible studies each morning focusing on biblical characters. Each morning a different "witness" will share his pilgrimage after the Bible studies. Witnesses include a student, businessman, Indian, and others. Tom Skinner, black evangelist and author of Black and Free, will speak on Monday and Tuesday evenings in the mass assemblies. Wednesday and Thursday evenings David Augsburger, Mennonite Hour Speaker, will address the mass assemblies. Art Smoker, church-wide youth secretary, will be convention coordinator — he has all the details to remember.

Oh, yes, the chaperons. Two hundred adult youth sponsors will be coming to Junaluska. They will lead "talk-it-over" groups and serve as dormitory counselors in the evenings. The TIO groups will live together in the dorm throughout the week to facilitate close personal sharing. John Lederach, counselor and teacher at Hesston College, will direct the TIO group activities.

In early evening, participants will choose from a wide variety of seminars. Seminar leaders will give youth exposure to issues facing the Christian in the contemporary world. Seminars range from "What's the Dope on Dope?" and "Give Away Your Faith" to "Poverty" and "How to Make Bible Study Exciting."

Other extra extras include tours to the nearby Smokys in the afternoon, a wide variety of recreational activities, competition in quizzes, drama, photography, and speeches. After the mass evening sessions, a number of coffeehouses will provide opportunity for expression and creativity. Various musical groups with diverse styles of music will contribute in the evening programs.

These are a few peepholes into Junaluska. We hope Junaluska will be more than ninth-cloud isolationist dreaming. We hope Junaluska will mean true worship, obedient discipleship, world vision, and joyous celebration.

How can you share? Perhaps in a financial way. Perhaps you can make it possible for someone from your congregation or community to come by underwriting part of the registration fee. Most of all, we hope you pray. Pray for the youth as they come. Pray for the resource persons, the seminar leaders, the adult advisers, the secretaries, and other back-of-the-scene persons. Pray now and pray during Convention that God's Spirit might have His own way.
Peace Section’s Guidelines Reaffirmed

The staff and members of the MCC Peace Section recently met for a midyear assessment of their work. In addition to a thorough review of what Peace Section is doing and ought to do, the Section re-elected William Keeney, chairman; John A. Toews, vice-chairman; and Vernon Wiebe, recording secretary. A new member at large, Elaine S. Rich of North Newton, Kan., was elected to a three-year term and Douglas Hostetter was elected to a two-year term. John Howard Yoder, soon to leave for an assignment in Latin America, retired from the Section. Yoder’s Latin American assignment includes Peace Section interests.

Peace Section staff reported that the bulk of its activities in recent weeks involved Selective Service and draft-related cases. Frank H. Epp cited the increase of draft-age refugees in Canada, Walton Hackman reported developments in the case of Jerry Penner now pending before the Supreme Court of the U.S., and John A. Lapp offered an assessment of what to expect in the new Selective Service administration of Curtis W. Tarr.

Delton Franz and Frank Epp compared analyses of American involvement in the war in Indochina and grass roots opposition to this policy. Franz reported that “Cambodia has driven more Americans to their Congressmen than ever before in history.”

Four members of the Peace Section described their vision of “what the Peace Section should be doing.” These four, Douglas Hostetter, Harry Wenger, John A. Toews, and Elmer Neufeld sparked a morning-long discussion. There was sharp difference of opinion over how articulate and action-oriented the Peace Section should be. This continuing discussion concluded that the presently established “Guidelines” do provide a sound basis of operation and that peace as the will of God must be witnessed to as part of the total message of the church. Section members encouraged the staff to develop settings where the growing gaps in the brotherhood, especially between the youth-oriented counterculture and the compliant middle Americans could be discussed.

Among the actions by the Section were decisions to support financially the Jerry Penner appeal to the Supreme Court and to file an amicus curiae brief supporting Penner’s claim; to develop a “Peace Shelf” of books and pamphlets along with the Herald Press; to supervise a fund created to help young men who face legal battles over their draft status and to meet with Selective Service Administrator Curtis W. Tarr regarding draft and alternate service concerns.

The Section noted the excellent report of Leonard Epp on draft-age refugees in Canada and encouraged the brotherhood to accept his recommendations.

The next meeting of the Section will be in conjunction with the Second Annual Peace Section Assembly to be held in Minneapolis, November 19-21.

Omar Ebys Return to Africa

Omar Eby, presently serving as the Mennonite Central Committee’s secretary of information services, is returning to Africa with his wife, Anna Kathryn, and two daughters, Katrina and Maria.

The Ebys have accepted an assignment with the Africa Literature Centre, Kitwe, Zambia, where Omar will serve as a tutor of journalism for two or three years. Appointees of MCC, the Ebys are loaned to INTERMEDIA: A Christian Communication Ministry, a new committee which includes the former committee on World Literacy and Christian Literature (Lit-Lit).

Lit-Lit, or INTERMEDIA, is the main North American sponsor of the center at Kitwe, to which come budding religious journalists from all over English-speaking sub-Saharan Africa for six-week to two-month courses in writing, editing, etc.

The Ebys have served previously in Africa under the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions, Salunga, Pa., as teachers in Tanzania; before his marriage, Omar also taught in the Somali Democratic Republic. The Eastern Board is participating in the Ebys’ support.

Eby holds the MA degree in journalism from Syracuse University; both are graduates of Eastern Mennonite College.

The Ebys are members of the Landisville Mennonite Church, Landisville, Pa.

Ziegler to Head Services

Donald Ziegler, who recently returned from an MCC assignment as acting principal at the Beit Jala School on the West Bank, Israel, began his assignment at the Akron headquarters as MCC’s secretary of information services. July 1, 1970.

Ziegler, a 1965 alumnus of Eastern Mennonite College, served with the MCC Teachers Abroad Program in the Congo for two years, following a year of French language study in Brussels. The one-year Beit Jala assignment followed the TAP term in the Congo. Earlier, Ziegler did graduate studies at the University of Virginia.

Lifeline Books Finds New Outlet

Bookrack Evangelism, coordinated by Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., of Harrisonburg, Va., is a fast-growing church outreach with practically unlimited potential. Nineteen Mennonite conference districts are currently involved in this work, including Jamaica Conference. “Lifeline Bookracks” are located in 23 states and in Ontario, Canada. New locations are constantly being investigated and opened up.

One of the most enthusiastic Bookrack Evangelism workers is Simon Schrock of Fairfax, Va., a suburb of Washington, D.C. He has placed racks in Dulles and National, the capital city’s two international airports. His rack at National has sold more than 2,000 books.

In a recent letter to Kenneth Weaver, director of Mennonite Broadcasts, Schrock announced another new opening which will probably lead to increased literature sales. Here is a part of his letter:

"Last evening I placed a rack in a Peoples Drug Store, one of the largest chains in the area. It’s only one store at this point, but at least we are IN. It pays to talk bookracks.

"I attended an Institute in Basic Youth Conflicts this spring. During coffee I talked bookracks to anyone interested. ..."

Schrock continued. "A minister from McLean was there and listened to what I had to say. He passed the word on to a member and the member called me. We met, worked out details, and as manager of Peoples Drug Store he got the 'yes,' and by God's working we are in Peoples.'

A Bookrack Evangelism Seminar was held July 3 at Mission '70 in Lansdale, Pa., to encourage more persons to become involved in this project which seeks to make quality literature available through secular outlets.

Retreat for Missionaries

Laurelville Mennonite Church Center is again sponsoring a special retreat for missionaries and their friends. The dates are August 15-19. Paul N. Kraybill is the director of the program.

Missionaries on furlough from many fields are invited to spend one or several days as a guest of Laurelville. Persons who would like to share in giving missionaries a time of relaxation, fellowship, and a rich spiritual experience may contribute financially to this specific event. All friends of missionaries, or persons who would like to meet missionaries, are welcome to participate in the week's program at the regular rate. Informality and fellowship along with the opportunity to get to know missionaries and their fields will characterize the program. This is a good opportunity for families to have a vacation and relate deeply to missionaries at the same time. Write to Laurelville Mennonite Church Center, R. 5, Mt. Pleasant, Pa. 15666.

Gross Succeeds Gingerich

T. Leonard Gross began services on July 1 as executive secretary of the Historical and Research Committee of Mennonite General Conference and as archivist for the Mennonite Church. In this capacity he succeeds Melvin Gingerich, who recently retired.

Brother Gross received his PhD degree from the University of Basel in 1968. He wrote his dissertation on the Hutterite Anabaptist, Peter Walpot. He was born in Doylestown, Pennsylvania, and was married to Irene E. Geiser of Switzerland in 1957. He attended Goshen College and graduated in 1953. He took further work at Goshen Biblical Seminar and graduated there in 1959. He did part-time teaching at Bethany Christian High School. He gave two years of service through Mennonite Central Committee in northern Germany 1955-57. Just prior to his coming to Goshen, he served at Western Michigan University in Kalamazoo, Michigan.

In addition to his assignment with the Historical and Research Committee, he will be teaching one course at the Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries in Elkhart.

The Grosses have two daughters—Suzanne born in 1958, and Valeria born in 1960. The church is grateful for the gifts of Brother Gross, and for his willingness to place these gifts at the disposal of the church.

Time for Revolution Is Ripe

"If there is going to be a revolution in America, the time is now," declared anthropologist Donald R. Jacobs to 175 persons on June 18 at Eastern Mennonite College, Harrisonburg, Va.

In the fourth lecture in the ten-day seminar on "Peacemaking in a World of Revolution," Jacobs said that the time for revolution is ripe when there is a serious breakdown in the institutions of society. He asserted that institutions must "somehow reflect the popular mood, or revolution will result."

Jacobs described all cultures as being cyclical in nature, with a swing to rapid change and then back to a period of conservatism. He said that America is entering a period of conservatism following the wake of great social change in the past decade.

"Today's radicals will become tomorrow's conservatives," observed Jacobs, "because they must maintain the goals which they have achieved through the risks involved in taking a radical stand."

The veteran of 16 years' experience in East Africa as a missionary, Jacobs warned that Christians "should be on the proper side of revolution" in pointing out that sometimes revolutions are to the right of the liberal-conservative scale.

"If Christians get tied up with a movement," he said, "they've had it. Christians should always hang loose so that they can be on the fringe of what's happening. When they get into the middle, they fail to be salt and light."

Jacobs said that Christianity is inherently revolutionary, demanding a change in the life of every individual who embraces it. He echoed a theme of other seminar speakers—Christians possess the greatest potential for truly revolutionary changes in our society.

Bachman to Direct Phoenix Study

The Sunnyslope Mennonite Church of Phoenix, Ariz., announced the appointment of Leland Bachman, Hesston, Kan., as Director of a Phoenix Retirement Study. The appointment is effective Sept. 1, 1970.

The Sunnyslope congregation has long been aware of the need for retirement and nursing care facilities. Many Mennonites from various parts of the U.S. spend winters in the warm Phoenix climate. Although the Sunnyslope congregation is sponsoring the feasibility study, it is hoped that such a facility would be supported by other churches and would include provision for some low-income couples. The initial study is expected to be completed in three months, and will research need, type, land requirements, and funding.

Persons interested in such a facility in Phoenix and who would like to be kept informed of the progress should send name and address to Phoenix Retirement Study, 9844 N. 7th Place, Phoenix, Ariz. 85020.

Convention 70

Convention 70 will be an opportunity for the growth of Christian faith through the stimulation of speakers, talk-it-over groups, seminars, music, and at times quiet reflection. Young people should come expecting to meet God in others, and to share their "Christ-you" with others.

In addition to providing the setting for the strengthening of faith, Junaluska offers a wide variety of recreation: basketball, softball, volleyball, swimming, canoeing, shuffleboard, ping-pong, and hiking.

Junaluska and Convention 70. Recreation for youth, August 16-21. Convention 70 registration is open until July 20. Contact your local MYF sponsors for registration information or write to Convention headquarters at Mennonite Building, Scottsdale, Pa. 15683.

Erma Clymer left Honduras for furlough on June 10. Her address in the States is 1918 Willow Street Pike, Lancaster, Pa. 17602.

Daniel and Blanche Sensenig arrived in the States June 10 on furlough from Ethiopia. Their address is Walnut Street, R. 1, New Holland, Pa. 17557.

A former pastor in New York City has been named dean of men at Eastern Mennonite College. John L. Freed of 1121 Shendoa Street in Harrisonburg will assume his new position Sept. 1.

David K. Benner, Telford, Pa., was licensed as pastor at the Finland Mennonite Church, June 14. The present pastor, Claude M. Shisler, after serving this congregation over thirty-two years had requested the congregation to find a successor. Benner is one of the sons of the Finland congregation. The service was in charge of Bishop Winfield M. Ruth, who preached the sermon, assisted by Claude M. Shisler.

Ellis D. Kreider was ordained deacon at the Mechanic Grove Mennonite Church for the congregation on June 13. His address is: R. 1, Quarryville, Pa. 17566. Phone: 717 736-2262.

Amos O. Sweigart, 55, pastor at the College Hill Church in Tampa, Fla., was killed in a two-car crash in Tampa, June 20. A funeral was held at the College Hill Church, June 26 and at the Groffdale Mennonite Church, New Holland, Pa., June 29. His wife was injured in the crash and is making a good recovery.

Come to Laurelville Aug. 31 to Sept. 5 to explore the possibilities and advantages of old age. You don't have to be old to come, just a few indications that you have run up some mileage. Write to Laurelville Mennonite Church Center for more information.

Virginia Mission Board missionaries returning home for furlough this summer include Willard and Melba Heatwol, July 1; Doreen Kauffman, July 1; Wilma Lee Showalter, July 13; Hazel Kneczy, July 13; Gerald and Sara Lehman, about July 14; and Audrey Shank, Sept. 1. Mervin and Melva Shirk will be concluding their missionary service in Jamaica on Aug. 17 to return as pastor of the Newtown congregation, Sarasota, Fla.

Stanley and Mary Jane Shirk arrived in Jamaica, June 11, to begin a four-year term as missionaries under the Virginia Mennonite Mission Board. The Shirks will pastor the Bethel Mennonite Church at Mandeville as their initial assignment by the Jamaica Mennonite Church, Ltd.

Building the congregation was the theme for the annual Franconia Conference Ministers' Retreat. Thirty-six ordained and licensed men and their wives met at Spruce Lake Retreat June 19-21 under the inspiring and helpful ministry of John Martin, Neffsville, Pa., and discussed ways to build congregational commitment, unity, leadership, vision, and outreach.

Harley Good was ordained to the ministry for the Mt. Hermon congregation, Bergton, Va., June 14. He has served as licensed pastor there for the past several years. J. Ward Shank and Linden M. Wenger were in charge. Glendon Brosser preached the sermon.

Readers Say

Submissions to Readers Say column should comment on printed articles.

After reading "The Perils of Propaganda" in the June 9 issue, I handed it to my high school grade thinking it would interest him — and encourage the habit of reading our church paper.

Later, both of my older teenagers asked me (separately) if I had read "Parable of the Cowards." Now I have read it, as well as your perceptive editorial on church attendance. It occurs to me that the reaction and interest of my youth to the parable is of itself a commentary verifying your editorial.

"Who Needs Absolute" and "Caring for the Wounded" I feel as though I've had a real workout, and need to stop awhile. You have provoked me — hopefully thoughtfully and good work. — Dorcas S. Miller, Greenwood, Del.

I appreciate the Bookshelf section, especially when the main ideas are written up to give the reader the benefit of the book. This helps the reader keep up with some of the important books that are written.

I believe I appreciate most the Items and Comments section of the Gospel Herald which help one keep up with current events.

The responses on "The Primary Need of the Church" are helpful and good. We need to apply these suggestions. I would like to see articles from missionaries from around the world so that we could pray better for them. This might also stimulate more interest and giving. For instance, How is the work going in Palestine? How is the war affecting the work there? An informative and interesting article from or by our missionaries around the world could be given every week and it would take a long time to cover them all. As current events happen and there is special interest in that part of the world it would also be good to hear from our missionaries there. — Wayne Kratzer, Kidron, Ohio

Contrary to a letter in the June 16 issue of the Gospel Herald, I was encouraged to see the editorial by John E. Lapp against the Cambodian invasion.

When I read this editorial, and a previous article describing Myron Augsburger's letter to President Nixon, the thought occurred to me that it is absurd for Moslem states to carry its share of the witness against the current mood of militarism in our nation. Too long we've allowed our draft-age youth to bear the major burden of fighting against war, while many "mature" Mennonites secretly and openly condone our nation's actions.

We really have a good thing going for us. We have our church youth to do our peace witnessing and youth in the primary to do our killing. We denounce those who march for peace, those who flee to Canada, those who refuse to pay war taxes, but those who refuse to register for the draft are condemned from the right of the disgusting silent majority.

Sometimes I wonder, is the generation of Mennonites who taught us that war is wrong, no longer against war? Are we against war in general, but not this particular war? Or is war only wrong for Mennonites? Isn't it time to declare boldly that killing is wrong for everyone? It seems to me that if the love of Christ does not constrain us to speak up against the horror of this war, we have lost the right to ever speak out against anything. — Abrahm K. Gehman, Bally, Pa.

Today, amidst the flood of articles and editorials submitted by numerous journalists, we greatly desire those which strive to present an objective approach to the problems of our times — especially in our church publications. Instead, so often it seems, we receive the same partial opinions as found in many secular publications. Specific reference is made to the editorial page of the newspaper I work for. It is primarily to the editorial "I Am Distressed," by Bro. John E. Lapp.

This is not the first time, of late, that a subtle censorship of the word "peace" has been evident. Nazi Germany has been made. In any case, it seems neither appropriate nor fair. Without approving the Cambodian invasion it is apparent that the commissions are indeed quite different.

The comments concerning student violence appear to mildly criticize those students involved then go on to criticize the armed forces. Let us remember that soldiers would not have been on campus, tier right not been for the callous, irresponsible, undisciplined actions of a portion of the students. There is much behind this situation which seems to go virtually unreported. As a resident of the general receives a rather bad image. For example, probably very few persons are aware of the fact that Jerry Rubin visited the Kent State Campus just one week before the riot. Please see page 96 of the May 18, 1970, issue of U.S. News and World Report for some of the remarks he made during his visit which were made known during Senate discussion on the problem. Several newspapers carried a small article indicating that one of the students was wounded by a round from a nonmilitary weapon. Who really fired the first shot? Reports indicate that the students turned in the gun to avoid trouble. The campus is not a safe place, and does not allow students to go there during the day with the police, and troops, and other destructive weapons. In addition, we are told that troops were subjected to ridicule in the form of the most vile, filthy language. This information was not included in the general, but to show part of the other side of this issue.

I spoke recently with the father of one of our students from Washington, D.C., during the recent student visits. These men were given strict orders not to lay a hand on anyone. Isn't it rather strange that these trained "aggressors" and "agitators" and "anti-capitalist demonstrators," yet managed to show an amazing degree of restraint and good judgment? It would seem that these men and the rest of the soldiers at Kent State offered examples of discipline as opposed to the wanted, demanding, and thoughtless actions of some who march in the name of peace. Perhaps, Bro. Lapp, you applied the term "little boys" to the wrong group.

As I consider the life of our Lord, and the Bible as the whole Bible, I find no direction regarding the paramount importance of discipline in all of human activity. Jesus on various occasions let us examples of discipline in everyday living. Time and again the New Testa- ments and the Old Testaments show us the lives and consistently warn of the judgment to come on those who live otherwise. In addition, they do not deny the right of governments to exercise force to maintain discipline. I therefore find biblical basis for supporting the preservation of law and order.

Our day is much the same as those gone by in that we are always looking for some way to blame the other fellow for our problems. There would be no need for soldiers on campus if — parents exercised their responsibilities, university authorities did the same, all students practiced self-discipline (a large percentage of students do), and there were no agitators bent on destruction and strife.

I do not put much trust in military might nor in our courts, the police and the FBI. But, our government has to work at it if it wishes to maintain discipline. I am afraid that most of the groups I have described above would rather be, but rather in the Lord Jesus Christ who will bring about in the affairs of men those things for our ultimate good and the glory of His kingdom.

We indeed want to see an end to the bitter, terrible war in Southeast Asia — let us continue to pray and to strive in constructive and objective ways to bring that to pass. — Joseph Oswald, Hopedale, Ill.

I would like to respond to "The Incident" (Gospel Herald, June 2, 1970) by suggesting that the incident time and time get caught noticing an attractive pair of legs that they give a smile of approval, rather than an embarrassing frown. Or, they could go home and read chapter nine of Keith Miller's book, Second Front. If they still feel guilty they could reread the Gospels and rediscover the Jesus of Love and Compassion. Perhaps then Christian men could again walk in the streets and care for the souls of men rather than scorn the bodies of women.

Serious, what really we need to counteract seriously education in the schools, is sex education of adults in the church. Emanuel Martin, Mt. Pleasant, Pa.

He was a member of the Pleasant View Mennonite Church. Funeral services were held at the Blackburn Funeral Home, Pleasantville, Pa., Apr. 13, with Charles R. Shetler officiating; interment in the Schellsburg Cemetery.
Discerning the Spirit in Belgium

By David Shank

What is the work of the Spirit of God? What is the work of the evil one? This question must be raised not only about our work in Belgium as Mennonite missionaries, but also about the work of those around us in completely different contexts. Is our work truly that of the Spirit upon us? Is He not upon others as well, or is their work not of the Spirit?

In 1969 in Belgium two major denominations gave up their specific identities (Methodist Church and the Belgium Evangelical Protestant Church) and formed the Belgium Protestant Church. Those who worked hard to arrive at this result claim it as a work of the Spirit. Is it? The Belgium Christian Missionary Church after more than a hundred years of existence changed its name to the Reformed Church of Belgium. Is it of the Spirit? Those who acted in the official synod certainly feel that it was.

Within the Roman Catholic Church the effects of biblical renewal continue to be great, expressed in an increasing use of the Bible in religious and catechetical preparation of children and youth. Is this of the Spirit, and if so, how does one relate to it? A Brussels Center for Non-Violent Action was created during this year. Is it of the Spirit, and if so, how do we relate to it? A Euro-Crusade featuring Billy Graham, with television extension from Dortmund to Brussels (and many other cities of Europe), was organized this year. Was this of the Spirit of God? If so, how do we relate that to the Center for Non-Violent Action if that is also the Spirit’s work?

A French Mennonite elder and an American Mennonite missionary held simultaneous fall retreats for three Brussels Reformed churches in 1969. Is this the work of the Spirit or simply a sign of the times?

God’s Spirit or Man’s Connings?

An increasing esprit de corps in the French Brussels-Brabanconne congregation causes the Robert Ottos, the missionary pastoral couple there, to rejoice. Is this the work of the Spirit or just an increasing adaptation of Americans to Belgian life?

The creation of a small congregation in Flavion through the efforts of the Lambottes, a Belgian couple partially supported for publishing work, may also be a subject of rejoicing. But is it the work of the Spirit, or — as writes a neighboring pastor — is it the work of the devil?

The Rixensart congregation raised $600 for contributing to world need while increasing its regular gifts and offerings by almost $300. Is this the work of the Spirit? Or is it good publicity and a following of the spirit of society which is generally more sensitive to world needs?

The ordination of an assistant pastor in the Spanish congregation of Brussels-Filature is a subject of rejoicing too. But is this the work of the Spirit which leads men and women into the vineyard or the following of an ecclesiastical pattern which says that every congregation should have a full-time pastor?

What wonderful enthusiasm was found in the conference that gathered Protestant workers from Antwerp, Liege, and Brussels to plan more carefully a nationwide structure for the care of foreign migrant laborers and their families. That such a work can grow out of the vision of a Mennonite worker through the support of our board in cooperation with the Federation of Churches is another subject for rejoicing. But is this the work of the Spirit? Or is it an intensely warm-hearted, human but efficient social effort, helpful but without a message?

The fact that people from the Rixensart congregation can gather to study the Bible with Catholics, including priests, is very good. But is it of the Spirit, or is it just the ecumenical spirit of the day?

Is it a work of the Spirit to see the Spanish congregation of Brussels-Union fully carry their financial load? Or is it simply a situation imposed upon them by their rich American “brethren”? If so, is it possible that the Spirit is working through this situation?

Several new and interesting people are attending meetings in Brussels-Brabanconne. Is it the work of the Spirit or simply a search for an esoteric club of sympathetic people?

The spiritual uneasiness of French Mennonite youth in higher studies is growing. Is this the work of the Spirit? And those that try to help them — are they of the Spirit? How does one discern?

The Protestant Volunteer for Cooperation (providing alternate service for conscientious objectors), David Shank, chairman, sent five Protestant volunteers to four countries in 1969 for a total of 21 young people sent out in five years. Is this sending of the Spirit or only a spirit of adventure and opportunism? And the more than 30 Pax and TAP youth that come through Brussels via MCC on their way to Africa — all reached in some way through the Ottos’ ministry — is this the work and moving of the Spirit or just American youth excited about European culture and the pros-

David Shank is missionary overseer for Mennonite congregations in Belgium and is pastor of the Rixensart congregation in suburban Brussels. Shank’s article begins a series in Gospel Herald on missionary observations of the Holy Spirit at work in overseas locations in keeping with the Mission ’70 theme, “The Spirit of the Lord upon Me.”
pects of advancing their professional career?
Is the Charles Gabel family’s departure for Chad from the Brussels-Brabanconne congregation under the sponsorship of the French Mennonite Mission Committee the work of the Spirit or is it just the fulfillment of an old family ambition to work in black Africa?
Lighthouse Publications, partially subsidized by our Board, this year after much hard work published a volume of research on the Anabaptists of Montbeliard, Alsace, and Belfort. Most unusual was a gift from the French Mennonites of almost $2,000 for the support of this publication. Is this the work of the Spirit? Or is this simply a seeking of religious-cultural continuity? Or is this an effort to make secure and build a denomination in a day when denominations have less and less meaning?

God or Man: Who’s in Charge?
Three baptisms in the Brussels-Brabanconne congregation; eight baptisms in the Brussels-Union congregation; seven additions including five baptisms in the Rixensart congregation; two additions in the Flavion congregation — is this a sign of the work of the Spirit or a sign of “effective church work”? Can the latter be also of the Spirit? How can we be sure?
A missionary’s uneasiness in his role as fully supported church worker may be a sign of health. Is it the work of the Spirit, or is it inability to adapt to a new climate and culture? Is this of the Spirit, or does this mean that he should look in other directions for fulfillment of his mission — assuming the Spirit of the Lord is upon him?
Contacts between Spanish brethren in Brussels and others in Luxembourg through Samuel Rolon’s visits have been encouraging. Is this of the Spirit? Or is it simply Mennonite-influenced Spanish folks seeking contacts with other Mennonite-influenced Spanish folks? Does this have any relationship to the Spanish couple training in Spain (from the Brussels-Filature congregation) or the two young men from the same congregation studying in Montevideo? Should Mennonites work in Spain? Would that be of the Spirit? What do the Spanish churches think about that — and is what they think of the Spirit?

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me," writes the prophet. And this is fulfilled, says Jesus, in His day in Himself. He tells His disciples to "Tarry until the Spirit is come upon you." The disciples go forth, baptized in the same Spirit saying, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me." We work in this assurance. But to write of the work of the Spirit and report it accurately required a continual discernment of the Spirit. In the context of a limited perspective, who is capable of this task? We would like to write, "This is of the Spirit!" But the Spirit blows where He wills and as He wills and not as we will it or even see it.

Women, Equality, and the Church

By Dorothy Swartzentruber

Something new has dawned on the horizon of church thought: the realization that women do not have equal standing with men in the work of the kingdom.

"Church work has always been a man’s monopoly. They sit on the church councils, build the buildings, counsel the minister, decide the policy, set the budget, and keep the church program moving. Women, at least in the past, never got inside the inner circle of control." So states an editorial in the April 22, 1969, Canadian Mennonite. The thirteen Ontario Mennonite congregations who responded to a survey substantiate this fact with added comment that "that’s the way it ought to stay!"

Segregation is built right into our church structure. An appearance of a dual church — one for men and one for women — is frequently given when men meet to counsel, plan and project programs while the women do the same thing for a separate program in a separate location. By continuing to tolerate the segregation of the work of the church by sexes, the two-church myth is perpetuated.

Many Mennonite women have become professional people. The church is the loser if it does not capitalize on the contributions such women can make to its total program. While the "ghetto philosophy" keeps some women safely and snugly tied to a quilt in a Mennonite church basement, those women whose experience and training has geared them to a sense of responsibility for broader community and world needs will find ways to serve in nonchurch programs if they are not used in a church context. Many thinking women want to get involved in the mainstream of the church’s program. Whether the church is prepared to appoint some of these women to its committees and boards remains to be seen.

The degree of acceptance which women will find in such positions will depend largely on the women themselves. However, it is also true that women who have for centuries been relegated to the Sunday school, the choir, the church kitchen, and the sewing circle will need to be "nurtured" into positions of church responsibility even if qualified to accept such positions.

On the other hand, women who serve on committees and boards should be sensitive to attitudes which cannot be changed overnight. Aggressive women or those with personal aspirations are not appealing. Women who wish to "take over" or "run the church" are few and, I might add, those most qualified are also the least likely to desire such positions. Nor should women be appointed simply because they are women; this is demeaning. Election to any position must be on the basis of qualification, not sex.

The body is made up of many parts, each part contributing to the whole. When the resources of Mennonite women are fully utilized in the work of the church, richness and wholeness will be added to the body.
Financing Today's Mission

As a boy I recall my father talking about paying the annual family church tax. It was $1.50 per member and was used to pay the janitor, fuel, and church repairs. Then we had a Sunday school "penny" offering to pay for our supplies. That was the extent of giving in those days. Some church people are inclined to continue that system today. Possibly it was adequate for the program then. But we are living in "new days."

Today our church is active in mission. We are sending hundreds of workers to many countries to share the gospel and to aid people in their physical, social, and economic life. We are also sending workers to urban areas, economically and socially depressed communities. We are also seeking to provide means for many of these people in need to help themselves. This is an ongoing mission program.

Our church is also in mission in preparing people for service. We are sponsoring church schools (grade, high, and college) so that our youth may be taught and trained for service as Christians in the world. Many engage actively in church-sponsored services. Others serve as teachers, homemakers, and leaders in business and educational vocations.

Then our church is active in mission in developing a mature and trained brotherhood for service. We have a publishing house to provide printed materials for use in local and personal education. Our district and general conferences provide leadership and resources to help the local congregation to be the church in mission. Among these services are: the Commission for Christian Education, Youth Ministries, Peace and Social Concerns Committee, the Historical and Research Committee, the Ministerial Committee, Mutual Aid, the Church Welfare Committee, the Worship Committee, and many more. Why do these exist? To serve the needs of the local congregations. To provide printed and personal resources. To develop action programs.

All of these services have come into existence from time to time as the church felt a need for each. The church also accepted the responsibility for the support and financing of them. However, instead of asking members to support each service individually, they have been put together into a budget program. Thus, Mennonite General Conference has an overall budget, so does each district conference, the various Mission Boards, and our church schools. The support of all these services are listed as "askings" in the 1970 Mennonite Yearbook on pages 11 and 12.

If every congregation and member strives to share their tithes regularly, all these services will enable you and the church to be in mission in the world today.

— J. J. Hostetler
Would Revival Bring Peace?

Sometimes the implication is that if real spiritual renewal came, everything would be fine—riots would run out of steam, campuses would be calm, and all of us would live in peace and quiet.

While real spiritual renewal has always brought new life it has never made the world all sweetness and light. In fact it seems throughout history when a true work of God took place, the hosts of hell, the principalities and powers, the rulers of the darkness of this world suddenly are revealed. Real revival is a disruptive force in society and more often than not it has carried in its wake terrible persecution. Some who thought themselves “in the faith” have turned aside from the consequences of commitment at such times.

We must confess that society in America has been so safe the past half century or so that it is difficult to understand the Scripture, “all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.” Those are strong words! Are we ready to read the word “all” in this Scripture?

Many of the prayers for peace can easily be prayers for our own safety and for the protection of our own prosperity. It’s good to ask sometimes why we want peace and what kind of peace do we want? Those who are poor, oppressed, and suffering injustices do not pray for peace. Such pray for change. Those who have plenty pray for peace so that all will be preserved.

Of course it is proper to pray for all in authority out of a desire for peace so that the gospel may go forth freely. The message of the church is muzzled under hostile rule. Yet the Christian, who says his first loyalty is always to Christ as Lord (and that is really what renewal is), is headed for persecution. The sword of which Jesus spoke and which divides between the professor and the possessor is drawn.

Christ points out this loyalty will divide even the closest companions. This loyalty will bring the severest persecution. This loyalty will drive a wedge between a nation and its Christian citizens, between husband and wife, parent and child, and just like the cries against Christ that He was a traitor, a destroyer of past practices, and one who cast aside all which was considered safe, these same words, in one form or another, will again be screamed against Christians who put the claims of Christ first.

So renewal is not a return to places of peace and safety. Real spiritual renewal in America today could well mean intense persecution, ostracism, and suffering for those who declare unequivocally that Christ is Lord and only Savior. But even though the result may be different than we think or like, it may be that our land may yet be saved.

It is true that God is the only one who can change things. But let us never assume that in His bringing change He will be a respecter of persons, blessing our sins while punishing other persons. Nor dare we imagine that His work of renewal means that there will not be a drastic change in our lives. Peace within yes, but also persecution from without. — D.

I’m with You in Spirit

Donald G. Miller, in his excellent book The Nature and Mission of the Church, says, ”Many times people say to their minister: ‘I was with you in spirit last Sunday but not present in body.’ It is kind of them, to say the least, to give the church the benefit of the presence of their disembodied spirits! Suppose everybody in the congregation should decide to be present in spirit but not in body. What a delightful time the minister would have preaching to disembodied spirits! No one would go to sleep. No one would arrive late. No one would interrupt the sermon with a coughing spell. No one would think the service lasted too long.

“Furthermore, this would solve many of the church’s problems. Disembodied spirits would need no heat in winter, no air cooling in summer, no cushioned pews, no redecorated sanctuary, no educational building, no sexton, no organ, no minister of music, choir, or hymnals. All they would need would be a minister to visit them occasionally when their spirit happened to be at home in their bodies rather than in church.”

Miller goes on to spell out what this would mean also in the world. No testimony for Christ would be possible. No Christian presence would be in the community and all who are in need spiritually, physically, socially would only have the ”empty fellowship of spirits floating around somewhere in the gallery, whose bodies were at home, or on the golf course, or scampering off to the beach for an outing.”

Of course Miller’s main point is that the church must have form. Spirit must express itself in visible form to be of value. The work of the church is done in the world through bodies. Persons must come to know Christ. Christ is to be magnified (brought near) in our bodies which means everywhere because we go nowhere except our bodies are along. Think about it next time when you’re inclined to say, “I’m with you in spirit if not in body.” — D.
A Christian Perspective on Revolution

By C. Norman Kraus

In the series thus far no attempt has been made to argue a position or advocate a theological response, although, of course implicit positions are always exposed in analysis. In this concluding essay let me make a few more explicit suggestions concerning a Christian perspective on the revolutionary changes which engulf us and the revolutionaries that seem bent on offending us.

The first, and hopefully most obvious, implication of the previous analysis is that the Christian’s first responsibility is to understand – to avoid the gut-level reflex actions of fear which make men hostile and defensive. Understanding is the first ingredient of agape love, especially love for the enemy. Revolutionary changes threaten our security. Demands, especially if they imply accusations, irritate and anger us so our instincts tell us that the revolutionary is an enemy. Christ calls us to love the enemy.

But beyond this, it would seem that Christians of all people should understand the psychology and dynamic of revolution! New Testament Christianity is itself revolutionary in dynamic and style. It is future oriented, not past oriented as it prays, “Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as in heaven.” It addresses itself to the have-nots — “those who know . . . they are poor” (Mt. 5:3, NEB; Luke 6:20). It is the good news of hope and a new day for the “poor.” Its method is conversion or radical change in motivation and life-style. Such a conversion calls for absolute obedience to the Lord who stands above all human institutions and laws — the ethic of radical obedience. It calls for nonconformity to the spirit and form of secular society based upon self-interest. Indeed, the New Testament message to repent and turn about face (convert) is a revolutionary call with social as well as individual implications. To be converted to Christ commits one to “seek first God’s rule and the vindication of His justice” in the society of men (Mt. 6:33).

The negative and often caustic criticism leveled against revolutionaries by the right wing, professed Christians is based upon some highly questionable assumptions about nature of New Testament Christianity. A large majority of conservative American Christians assume that the American way of democracy and free competitive enterprise are identical to biblical Christianity, and therefore they can not even conceive the possibility of a nonconformed church. They can not imagine that the church or individual Christians might be called upon to confront and challenge the established legal, economic, and social systems. Rather, they view the church as the moral and spiritual defender of “our way of life under God.” Having begun with such presuppositions they further assume that majority rule and the political manipulation of gradual change within the accepted governmental system itself are the Christian way to effect social change. Thus all attempts, even nonviolent attempts to change the system itself through noncooperation because of conscience are viewed as morally unjustified.

Because the institutional church has become the defender of the state and the existing social order Christian conversion has lost its relevance for social and political change. The purpose of conversion in contemporary conservative Christianity is to fit the individual into a traditional religious establishment which views itself as the moral and spiritual defender of the social and political order. Thus conversion becomes a means of adjusting the individual to society rather than to make him nonconformed to it, and the true end of conversion which is to create a new society through new men is subverted and nullified. This subversion represents a major tragedy in post-Civil War conservative Protestantism and the revival movement in particular, and we can only hope and pray that it will soon change.

Agape, love, as it has been revealed in Christ calls for a revolution in a sinful society. It puts the needs of the poor ahead of the “rights” of the rich. It values persons above property. It refuses to be trapped into inaction by legal technicalities. The very heart of agape is incarnation which is simply another way of saying identification and personal involvement with need. There is no question but that Jesus’ sympathies lay with the poor. This does not mean that He rejected rich individuals any more than it means that He approved all that poor people did. But He did espouse their cause and speak on their behalf against the greed and oppression of the wealthy classes whose own standard of living and security necessarily burdened and enslaved them. With Him the need and suffering of the poor took precedence over the sanctity of law — even religious law — and over the legal “rights” of the rich.

Agape shifts the basis for action from self-interest to genuine neighbor-interest. That is what it means to identify with the needs of others, to make their cause one’s own. The present basis for political and economic decisions is “enlightened self-interest.” Our whole system operates at this level even at best, and much of the time it operates far below this ideal. Agape requires us to transcend this level and work for the true justice of love — the “righteousness[that]exceeds” (Mt. 5:20). Certainly the implications of this are nothing short of revolutionary and speak to a Christian perspective on conditions in today’s world.

Eschatology, i.e. the view of God’s plan for history, also impinges upon one’s view of revolution. Fundamentalist Christianity has held to a very pessimistic view of the movement of history. According to the Scofield system of dispensationalism, which has predominated in Fundamentalism, the moral and spiritual condition of the organized church as well as the world society will degenerate at an accelerating pace until the close of the age. Furthermore, according to this doctrine we can be certain that the present is the very end of the age. Therefore, the revolutionary changes which have been described above are viewed as the result of Satanic forces in a last desperate attempt to overthrow the true church and defeat Jesus Christ. All change is by virtue of this fact equated with moral decay and regression. From this it follows that the only path for Christians is to cling to the “old time religion” and fight against the overwhelming forces of godless revolution. When this doctrinal position is combined with the view that American democracy is the true biblical way, any movement that disturbs the status quo is generally identified with atheistic communism or the like.

The opposite view naively equates change with progress. Such a view may be either the counsel of secular despair — anything would be better — or an overly optimistic view of man’s perfectability and natural goodness. But surely one is not forced to choose only between these two extremes.

The biblical view assures us that God, the Father of Jesus Christ, is the sovereign Lord of history and works out His purposes in the affairs of nations. He has in the past worked in and through political and social revolutions both to bring about judgment upon proud and unjust nations and to purge His church. Unless one assumes that the 1970s are of certainty the closing days of the age — an assumption which the Bible does not give us the right to make — there is no reason why we should not place the present revolution in the perspective of past revolutions.

From this perspective the Christ who is Alpha and Omega, who stands at the beginning and the end, is our criterion for evaluating the fluctuating movements and radical programs of change. It is He who in the midst of the turmoil and confusion gives peace and stability without predisposing us against change itself.

For myself I find that I come back again and again to the closing paragraph of Herbert Butterfield’s Christianity and History to regain my perspective:

In these days also when people are so much prisoners of systems — especially the prisoners of those general ideas which mark the spirit of the age — it is not always realized that belief in God gives us greater elasticity of mind, rescuing us from too great subservience to intermediate principles, whether these are related to nationality or ideology or science. . . . Similarly Christianity is not tied to regimes — not compelled to regard the existing order as the very end of life and the embodiment of all our values. . . . I have nothing to say at the finish except that if one wants a permanent rock in life and goes deep enough for it, it is difficult for historical events to shake it. There are times when we can never meet the future with sufficient elasticity of mind, especially if we are locked in the contemporary systems of thought. We can do worse than remember a principle which both gives us a firm Rock and leaves us the maximum elasticity for our minds: the principle: Hold to Christ, and for the rest be totally uncommitted.

Christian Gratitude

Gratitude and happiness walk hand in hand. Most of us are not thankful enough: to God as our Creator — to Christ as our Redeemer, Lord, and High Priest and Advocate: for His Word to guide us into paths of truth and righteousness; for religious freedom of worship, for godly ancestors, etc.

Praise meetings are as important as prayer meetings. Praise is an important part of prayer. More is said in the Bible about praise than prayer. Prayer and praise are like the two wings of a bird; both must work together. Gratitude is the memory of the heart. It is the overflow of a full heart; the natural expression of a full heart. The heart must be full before it can overflow. Gratitude is not a natural characteristic of the human heart. Human nature is perverted and sinful (Jer. 17:9).

However, it should be the normal attitude of the Christian. It is the mother and perfection of many virtues. It is a fruit of great cultivation; it is a difficult grace to achieve. True appreciation washes away from the soul the dust of everyday life. By appreciation we make excellence in others our own property.

A few years ago a prominent magazine sent out a questionnaire to its subscribers. One of the questions asked was this one: If you could have anything that you asked for Christmas, what would be your first choice? The person that received the prize was an old lady living in poverty. Her request was for a greater ability to appreciate what she already possessed. — Christian E. Charles.
Mennonite Giving Is 5.4 Percent

By J. J. Hostetler, Stewardship Secretary

Giving in the Mennonite Church has steadily increased. During 1969 Mennonites gave an average of $151.78 per member. This represents 5.4% of income, or slightly more than half the tithe. The average increase in giving in 1966-68 was 7.2% per year, while giving in 1969 increased only 4.3%. This represents a slight slowdown. See Table I for comparative statistics.

The projected tithe is based on average income of people in the areas and states where Mennonites live. It includes the sum of wages, earnings, farm produce, profits above expenses, rent above expenses, dividends, interest, etc., and is divided per capita. Information is derived from U.S. reports on taxes and Sales Management research.

In order that local people and district conferences may check their own progress a report prepared by District Conference Stewardship secretaries and compiled in the Stewardship Office is shared. See Table II. Activities over two years are included for comparison. You will note that 15 conferences made gains while 5 declined. The + and — signs indicate increase or decrease from the 1968 report. The conference rank is determined by per member giving in 1969.

In the above table you will note that 56.15% of Mennonite giving is used for local congregational services and building costs (capital costs). This leaves 43.85% for General Missions services away from home. The trend the past few years has been for the local congregation to absorb more of the funds each year. This is a matter for local congregations to review and evaluate. Is this the time to place our resources into buildings or invest in people for mission?

In the distribution of funds away from home, 24.78% of the Mennonite dollar goes into direct mission, 13.90% for the General Mission Board, and 10.88% for the District Boards. Table III-A is set up to help you grasp the total picture by grouping.

These reports and tables are not all completely accurate since there are always some problems in reporting by local treasurers as well as districts. Not all records are kept on the same uniform basis. However since reports for each year are very similar, one is certain that they are relatively accurate and that trends indicated are valid. For further clarification...
we have projected the totals to a 100% figure which gives us a more accurate and true picture. We refer you to Table IV.

The percentages and per member giving are the same in either the projected or actual reported amounts. We recognize that some funds are given to other than Mennonite causes in addition to those reported in Table III, item 10. Also through direct gifts which are not recorded by local treasurers. There could be a much more accurate report if everyone gave their church contributions through either their local treasurer or district conference treasurer. They are each set up to forward your contribution as designated and still can report the total as Mennonite giving.

Various Mennonite agencies, such as Mission Boards, our church schools, camps, and welfare services, cooperate in reporting special or direct funds in as much as they are identifiable. If all giving went through local or district channels it would help a great deal. Of course, simply recording and reporting funds is not the total stewardship aspect of giving. The scriptural admonitions of God in the Old Testament, Jesus in the gospels, and the apostles in the Epistles speak to the attitude in giving. It is our response to the blessings granted to us, to the joy of giving and sharing, and to faithfulness of our stewardship opportunities. The Scriptures call for proportionate and sacrificial giving in a regular way with joy. Blessings are assured. Your church leaders are trying to be responsible and sensitive to your giving concerns. They solicit an interest in your prayers.

Local pastors have been provided with additional resource material on stewardship and giving reports. Anyone interested in further information, factual or otherwise, may obtain help from the pastor, or from your Stewardship Office.

incident in Church

By Lorie C. Gooding

Sometime during the service — it may have been during prayer, or the reading of the Word, I am not sure when — there came a moment (it could not have been more than a moment) when my mind was opened and my heart was lifted and the veil was moved aside slightly, sufficiently so that I saw or sensed or was somehow in the presence of the wonderful, terrible, ultimate Mystery beyond this place.

"As I See It"

One of my concerns for the church is to experience God's will for the present hour.

It will not be found in a literal reproduction of New Testament interpretation and application. Blind, traditional, propagation has little force for good in this generation. Nor will it be discovered by a defensive or revolutionary approach to current issues. A dogmatic proclamation of easy answers and safe ideas will not bring it to light.

The Scriptures, tradition, reaction, and proclamation are all part of the search for truth. However, congregations will need to find the significance of the scriptural record as centered in the Ten Commandments and the teachings of Jesus. Much unnecessary frustration, conflict, and division could be avoided if we could see the value of Scripture in relation to its primary focus — the life and teachings of Jesus. To worship the Book (the Bible) is to miss the true worship of God revealed in Christ to man. He is the same God seeking to make Himself known in twentieth-century experience.

Accordingly our churches need to discover how to find the "Spirit of Christ" in a dynamic way. To experience the presence and power of the resurrected Christ in our midst is essential if we expect to effectively grapple with the questions of the 70s. The principles of Jesus as found in Scripture are as valid as ever. The same Holy Spirit is as anxious to direct us as in the first-century church. He has promised to be with us in so doing.

It follows, therefore, that ways and means must be learned to discern what is the way of truth. There is much room for growth in discerning and decision-making corporately. How is the will of God to be applied to current programs, problems, and practices? A life of faith is never static. It moves into new frontiers of life with courage and expectancy. The living God will show Himself real to a sincere and honest seeker. But we ever need the mutual benefit of searching as a community of faith in determining God's will and its expression for life in a given context.

If we continue to blindly and dogmatically insist on a literal, legal, academic, and traditional approach we will find ourselves without the support of the younger adults. Nor will the church have a strong influence for good. On the other hand to follow the reactionary and revolutionary spirit will leave us with a weak witness, a decaying character, and little dynamic in our mission.

I believe God can lead us if we are open to the Scriptures, the Spirit, and the reality of our situation. — Newton L. Gingrich, Tavistock, Ont.

The Role of Seniors

By Moses Slabaugh

You know what the statisticians are doing? Blaming the old people for the population explosion! That’s right. The statistics, they claim, show the pill has reduced the birthrate, but medical science has added years of life so it’s old people who are crowding up the place.

Seniors, no doubt, have done their share of exploding and polluting, but ask any of the offspring if they wish their parents had used the pill. There are some twenty million seniors around with the rest of the polluting U.S. population.

Perhaps the generations could work together a little closer in their common cause. Science has brought into being a new world, and life goes on with so many changes it perplexes the seniors at times.

One role the seniors have is to represent the past. Who would be so egotistical to say we do not need the accumulated wisdom of past ages? We are supposed to learn from history, but then there are always those who flunk the examination. Seniors can “tell it as it is,” as youth demands today, but seniors can also “tell it as it was.” This is a unique quality seniors have. Youth cares about the present, but seniors must also live with the past as well as the present.

This generation gap must be defined as an experience gap. What a man learns by experience is not easily ignored. So seniors are not about to let youth drag them into this new ball game. Neither are seniors inclined to listen to loudmouthed arguments especially when those arguing have their empty brains rattled by drugs.

Another role seniors have is to demonstrate the art of being. We are so production-oriented and seniors get the feeling they are unwanted, unneeded, and in the way. The U.S. used to have surplus food and if a senior could eat three meals a day he was considered useful because he was helping to consume the surplus. But the surplus is gone and seniors must have other reasons for being here.

The Creator is more interested in our being than our doing. God doesn’t rate His children by their financial security either. Just to be a person, redeemed and reinstated in the family of God is more than enough reason for being part of the universal family.

Another role seniors assume is the custodian of wisdom. Mother Nature has given youth the good looks, but Father Time gives wisdom. Now don’t get it wrong. Old age is not a time when folks “have it made.” (Always be aware of the person who has it made.) “It’s what you learn after you know it all that counts.” Seniors are in there making decisions, learning, and living life just like everybody else should be doing, only they have been doing them much longer. In fact, they make some of their most important decisions in old age. One decision is what to do with what they have accumulated, lived with, and worked so hard to get. It is never easy to give up your home, books, tools, and even your friends. (Seniors lose more friends by death than other people do.) So seniors face the ultimate test of stewardship. “Then whose shall these things be?” One authority thinks seniors are one of the nation’s greatest resources.

Another role seniors have is to retire and relax. Retirement is a time to do all the things they have always wanted to do, but do it unhurried and relaxed. That storm called sex is over for them, well, maybe not quite, at least, seniors are not in the eye of that hurricane. In business and church affairs they don’t have to lead. They are in there though, prodding the fellow up front. That’s more fun anyway. It’s called “privileged criticism.” They also have given up the fight to look young. It’s wonderful to be free and be yourself and not lie about your age. Some middle-aged folks are as cautious as a nudist crossing a barbwire fence when it comes to facing the facts of aging.

Perhaps the major role seniors have is example. The world stands in awe of that final one-time experience, death. When Father Time points to that event, it calls for faith and courage. To face the final summation of life, “when day is done” is every man’s lot. Seniors who anticipate that step with calm and peace are playing their role well. Old age is so final. Youth has another inning, but for seniors it’s the final score and the end of the ball game. To them the real and final graduation is at hand. To step from this temporal scene into the presence of our Maker is an experience to anticipate with joy. Amen!

Wit and Wisdom

Some parents are still wondering if the principal was speaking from experience or merely had a slip of the tongue. At the first PTA meeting he introduced the faculty to them, saying, “These are the teachers your children will educate this year.” — Mississippi Educational Advance.

A preacher was surprised when a lady asked him one Sunday morning to pray for her gall bladder. He told her apologetically that he wasn’t in the habit of being quite that specific in his prayers.

“Oh, but you are,” she replied. “Last week you prayed for all the loose livers.”

622 Gospel Herald, July 21, 1970
Mission ‘70: Only the Beginning

The annual meeting of Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, meeting in public and business sessions July 1-7 at Christopher Dock Mennonite High School near Lansdale, Pa. on the theme, “The Spirit of the Lord upon Me,” could have ended short of expectations. However, for many participants Mission ‘70 was really just the beginning. The Spirit moved upon people in the public sessions, the business sessions, and in the Franconia Conference congregations as they shared and listened to concerns represented by 42 Mission ‘70 Report Teams visiting the churches on Sunday, July 5.

Ivan Kauffman, acting secretary of Information Services, MBMC, saw a lessening of the tensions between minority concerns and the nonminority, evident in the early proceedings, in the spirit and events of the last days of Mission ‘70. Kauffman said, “Various viewpoints were clearly expressed and loudly spoken, but there was a genuine acceptance of each other and a strong awareness of the Spirit’s leading.”

The commissioning service on Saturday evening, July 4, unexpectedly provided all present the potential of being commissioned. The prayer was led by Nelson Litwiller, missionary to Latin America for 42 years. The commissioned, including thirteen newly appointed overseas personnel, those who felt the Spirit’s leading to go to a particular country, missionaries on furlough, home missionaries, Volunteer Service workers, pastors, lay workers, Mission Board personnel—and in the audience farmers, teachers, homemakers—after joining hands for the commissioning prayer took up positions at the exits of the large Brunk Revivals tent. Three thousand people were then invited to break bread with each other as they proceeded from the closing public meeting of Mission ‘70.

Mission ‘70 had been a deliberate attempt to involve each participant in the decision-making process. The Board met on Thursday morning and afternoon, July 2, to consider priority issues needing decisions. These were identified and explained during the July 2-4 public sessions and then discussed and considered in prayer in the 70 small Strategy Group meetings. The ideas and suggestions growing out of the Strategy Groups, as well as the Report Team reports and testimonies, were picked up by an Issues and Concerns Committee which presented these to the Board members as the major business items in the final decision-making meetings on July 6 and 7.

Two thousand four hundred and eighty people (adults, youth, and children) registered for the three days of public sessions. On Friday and Saturday morning, John Lederach, Hesston, Kan., led an exposition of Luke 3 to 5, the Bible study passage for Mission ‘70. All convention participants were then divided into Strategy Groups for more intensive study and discussion. Strategy group leaders had been selected from among the membership of Franconia Conference.

Keynote speakers for Thursday evening were Lupe de Leon, Corpus Christi, Tex., and William Pannell, Detroit, Mich. Samuel Santos, Bronx, New York City, and Horacio Quinones, Los Angeles, Calif., were Friday night’s featured speakers.

Four hundred and fifty children participated in mission education activities for ages 3 1/2 through grade 8. Activities included arts and crafts, music, missionary speakers, recreation, Bible stories, and films. Special field trips to Lilliput Farm (nursery and kindergarten), Trexler Game Farm (grades 1-3), and Valley Forge Park and Philadelphia (grades 4-8) were daylong events scheduled Thursday through Saturday.

Special youth features included a mixer and a fellowship meal. A three-hour happening followed the mass session on Friday evening featuring two music groups—the “Belles and Beaux” from Hesston College and “The Rebirth” from Eastern Mennonite College. Youth participated actively in public sessions and the Strategy Groups. A number traveled to Washington to counter-witness in the nation’s Fourth of July rally in witness to their concern that Christianity was being too closely identified with American nationalism. As one participant, Phil Stauffer, a student at Millersburg (Pa.) State College, stated, “We are here to protest the religious aspect of this. We feel that God is not limited to America. He is international. It’s like they think Jesus arrived on the Fourth of July.”

Actions taken by the Executive Committee of the Mission Board included:

Approved a $2,415,599 program budget for the fiscal year 1970-71, of which $357,899 is anticipated from sources other than contributions.

Approved an urgent request from the American Bible Society in New York City for funds to provide Bibles for Nigeria in the aftermath of civil war in that country. Many received for this project from Mennonite congregations will be handled as above-budget contributions and should be sent through regular conference channels.

Scheduled July 1-6 as the dates for Mission ‘71, which will be held in Illinois.

Approved a program recommended by H. Ernest Bennett, executive secretary, that calls for Board divisional secretaries to spend more time in research, planning, and developing of their respective programs. This will involve adequate planning for future use of personnel and budget, establishing administrative priorities, and becoming increasingly sensitive to changing world conditions and their effect on mission strategy.

Approved a program being developed by the Trinity Mennonite Church in Phoenix, Ariz., that includes a halfway house for the mentally retarded. With the Board’s Health and Welfare Committee accepting sponsorship for this program, the congregation will qualify for study grants and receive Mission Board guidance in their program development. The sponsorship will not require Board funds.

Finding New Handles for Learning

The Christian Education Commissions of both the General Conference Mennonite Church and the (Old) Mennonite Church met at Laurelville Mennonite Church Center June 8-12 for a seminar to discern the direction and stance for Christian education in the local congregation in the seventies. Several papers and talks were presented to help the group see the world situation, the paths traveled during the sixties, what is happening in various other church groups, issues that should inform us in determining strategy, and some visions for the believers' church. A panel led discussions on the implications for Christian education, after which four groups were formed to determine strategy. A Findings Committee briefly set forth directives to help leaders, curriculum planners, writers, and educational personnel in their work. — J. J. Hostetler

Forty-five Mennonites went to western Pennsylvania in June to talk up the shape of Christian education for the next five years. Judging by what happened, those years will be mightily unpredictable.

"We planned a program in the sixties," said Harold Buller, chairman of the Commission on Education for the General Conference Mennonite Church, "and we find ourselves with 1970 churchmen on our hands and we don't know how to handle it.

He was not talking about what was happening outside in the churches of the two groups sponsoring the consultation (his and the Mennonite General Conference), but about the ways things exploded at the meetings at the Laurelville Church Center. As each day of the five-day conference unfolded, the program seemed to crumble away with prepared papers and planned projects put to severe tests.

Small subgroups assigned to study a major paper didn't. "Our group didn't discuss the paper," reported Vernon Neufeld. "The paper is what it says it is—a vision. It is an ivory tower presentation and doesn't deal with our present congregations. It would be an academic exercise to relate this paper to Christian education."

A series of creative Bible lectures was quietly shelved soon after one of three high school students present bravely commented on the way they were forcefully delivered. It made her feel uneasy. No one contradicted her.

"The way that the two groups of Mennonites felt about each other spilled out into the open. "I've sensed so often that we have put the first foot forward," said Ben Cutrell of Mennonite Publishing House. "We've played big daddy. We've called a halt to that."

Buller described the General Conference attitude as he saw it. "We always said, 'This is the situation and we will work with it.'"

"Perhaps this didn't happen on the Old Mennonite side," said Arnold Cressman, "that we forgave and went on. Perhaps that's part of our arrogance. We dominated too much and didn't realize it."

As the planned program began to fall away, the people in the group started to find the stuff of Christian education in what was happening among themselves. If this was their experience, wasn't it true for others in the church?

The group had come to the June 8 to 12 consultation feeling that identity and reconciliation were the important things for the church to work on in the coming years. At least, that is one summary of what many said in the first get-acquainted period.

Reconciliation and living together in peace has to be real in the life of the church. "If the world is to know Christ," said Cutrell, "it is through the church."

Reconciliation will mean living out the gospel. It will mean communication between the generations and between people with differing opinions. It will mean that people will be able to work together.

Identity means knowing who we are and what the church is and what the gospel means. This has been the long study of the church through the ages. And the study isn't over yet.

The answers to these questions may well come as Mennonites get out and experience the world. "We can't develop a Mennonite identity by looking at ourselves," said J. Lawrence Burholder. "We have to get it from the world. We could be given this from the world if we would ask for it."

But whether Mennonites are really getting out into the world was challenged daily by one person at the consultation who spoke for the black people of America.

"I've just been shocking and jiving"—that is, dancing around the issues.

"God identifies with the oppressed people," he said. "We must know what it means to be oppressed," he said.

He added, "You can't show me where you have been unless you show me some blood. I wonder whether the dominant white church knows the will of God."

But Albert Zehr saw some signs of understanding on the horizon which could have meaning for Mennonites. "The draft resisters have a very strong sense of election, exodus, covenant, and peoplehood," he said. "They feel called out to stand up against great abuse and suffering." Zehr, who has had contact with resisters to the American military system who have gone to Canada, added, "It is very moving to be with one army deserter who meets another deserter who left for the same reason he did."

Thus the seminar saw Christian education take shape in the experiences of persons. And they gave their vote to adult education as the priority for the coming years.

This was one of two emphases chosen by a similar consultation that was held in Goshen, Ind., in 1965.

"We didn't get it, but we didn't miss it," said John Powell, "We've just been shocking and jiving"—that is, dancing around the issues.

"God identifies with the oppressed people," he said. "We must know what it means to be oppressed," he said.

Paul Swarr, Ramat Gan, Israel, June 22 reports: "Some of the West Bank team had the privilege of sharing in a 40-voice Jeruusalem Choir which presented Brahms' 'Requiem' in Ramadan and East Jerusalem last month. Helen King, Hedy Sawatsky, Rachel Friesen, and John Kaufman took part. Brahms' 'Requiem' has such a note of hope and quiet expectancy of the goodness of God, which seemed so appropriate to be sung by Christian voices in the midst of the turmoil and turbulence of the Middle East."

Mennonites Urged to Enter Southern Africa

"Beloved, Beware Lest Ye Also . . .” Nelson E. Kauffman

Cover by Jan Gleysteen. Falls of the Rhine, Schaffhausen, Switzerland. In the nearby village of Schleitheim one of the earliest Mennonite confessions of faith was written.
"In a ten-year period, I foresee 200 Mennonites at work in southern Africa," Don Jacobs, back from a 19-day tour of southern African states, told a joint session of the Council of Mission Board Secretaries (COMBS) and the Mennonite Central Committee (MCC) at a Chicago meeting, May 20, 21. The report and recommendations were accepted for study by COMBS-MCC.

"This report (of the southern Africa study-tour) recommends involvement," Jacobs said. "We finished the investigation, analysis, and report with the clear conviction that we must begin to participate in life south of the Zambesi River. May God give courage and wisdom, men and money, infinite patience and compassion as we roll up our sleeves and take up the challenge for Jesus Christ and His kingdom."

Jacobs was speaking for himself and James Bertsche of the Congo Inland Mission who had been asked by COMBS, MCC, and the African Mennonite and Brethren in Christ Fellowship to survey and analyze the present mission and church situation in southern Africa. Specifically, they were asked "to project potential strategy and program opportunities for consideration by Mennonite agencies." The Jacobs-Bertsche report submitted to the joint meeting of COMBS and MCC did just that — suggested a strategy for Mennonite involvement in southern Africa.

Bishop P. Kumalo of the Rhodesia Brethren in Christ Church was to have been the third member of the investigatory team. Administrative commitments and visa difficulties prevented his accompanying Jacobs and Bertsche.

The team visited South Africa, Botswana, Rhodesia, and Lesotho and Swaziland, two black independent mini-nations landlocked inside of white South Africa.

The Mennonite Central Committee and the Brethren in Christ Church have worked in southern Africa. The Brethren in Christ have been in Rhodesia since 1898, presently with about 50 missionaries at a half-dozen stations, working at hospitals, schools, Bible institutes, and bookstores in addition to evangelism. MCC has 18 TAP teachers and two Paxmen in Botswana.

For the other south African countries visited, Jacobs and Bertsche call for a Mennonite presence which might include agriculturists, general Paxmen, TAP teachers, a modest junior year abroad, and a Menno Travel Service facility offering specialized tours. In addition, it was noted that job opportunities in industry and commerce are abundant in South Africa. "A few Mennonites who have a call to live and work in South Africa should be encouraged to do so," the report reads.

Touching on the philosophy of a Mennonite involvement in southern Africa, the report notes the evils of apartheid, the political scheme of separate development of the races, but also observes that the authentic goal for Mennonites "is the growth and nurture of the kingdom of heaven within the situation" and not political revolution.

"It is, therefore, not enough to be in southern Africa simply as an expression of American or European Mennonite interest in a crucial area of the world," the report states. "We are and ever will be interested in the development of fellowships of believers who will together seek God's way from within a situation.

"We may be tempted to 'do good' in southern Africa for the next 20 years but the 'do gooding' would simply be an extension of affluent white concern. We must do good, of course, but only in conjunction with an enlightened program for the encouragement of the fellowship of disciples.

"Said in another way," the report continues, "we must think in terms of total church involvement which in Mennonite parlance means the Word and the deed producing believing communities.

"This will not be easy in southern Africa where there is already mission activity in the traditional sense of the word. We should be reluctant to be another one of these. However, we would be denying our very nature if we as a believing community would be satisfied to apply a 'band aid' and run. If we are going to get involved we must take the plunge and be all things to all men so that the kingdom may be extended."

How to take that "plunge" into southern Africa, especially in Swaziland, Lesotho, and the Republic of South Africa now becomes the work of the MCC and numerous mission boards.

The Jacobs-Bertsche team saw clearly that the problems of southern Africa are of such a nature that anyone living there will get caught in the tensions sooner or later. While they expressed appreciation for those people who feel that it is a compromise to the Christian conscience to as much as visit the Republic of South Africa, for example, Jacobs and Bertsche felt strongly in recommending programs, saying that the only way to get local and international opinion aroused is to be where the action is.

"Choose any acute human problem threatening international peace and you can find it in southern Africa," they wrote. "Our Lord must look upon this system with great dismay, especially as its protectors plead the name of Christ and His church to defend itself. He must be distressed by the violence to human dignity being experienced in every sector of the society. For the blacks have allowed themselves to accept the system and while working in it try to forget it. And the whites have declared that their vehicle has neither reverse nor rearview mirror; they've set a course which they are unable to alter.

"This is the size of the problem. Anything the Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches do in southern Africa must partake of Jesus' attitudes and methodology, for truly the faith is no less than 'the way,'" the study report observed. — MCC Release.

Mass Media in Illiterate Society

By Stanley Weaver

Several experiences among the Navaho people have convinced me that radio is a very necessary and effective tool for reaching persons who may be unable to read about God's love.

A young Navaho Indian couple began attending church at Blue Gap Mission regularly. They discussed the Christian life with the Navaho pastor who lived in proximity to their home.

Suddenly they quit coming to church. An offbeat radio preacher whom they have never met had gained their ears and allegiance. They now completely accept his distortion of Bible truth while discounting the consistent Christian living and Bible teaching they had been exposed to through the local Navaho pastor.

A similar, but more rewarding, example happened as a result of our Navaho Gospel Hour program. Another Navaho family living near several evangelical missions around Window Rock, Arizona, had many material possessions but were nevertheless desperately unhappy.

Then they heard the gospel via their radio and wrote to the radio pastor for help. As a result they have become a Christian family actively involved in a nearby mission church.

Several families in the Blue Gap Church point to the Navaho Gospel Hour as having created their first real desire to be Christians. If they relied on only the printed page they would never have learned of Christ and His love.

There are some Navahos who prefer the anonymity of the radio preacher's voice over the local Christian minister. In this way they can leisurely explore their interest in the message without having the immediate pressure for a personal decision.

Radio certainly isn't the most or the only effective means of presenting the gospel message. But for those who do not read, it is a very important beginning point. Radio can also span the vast distances and enter the remote areas and homes of Navaholand. It can do so instantly and repeatedly, increasing the impact of the message of freedom in Christ.

Stanley Weaver is superintendent of Black Mountain and Blue Gap Missions, Chinle, Arizona, and director of Navaho Gospel Hour.

Wit and Wisdom

In the book, Children's Letters to God, one little boy wrote God to ask, "When is the best time I can talk to You? I know You are always listening, but when will You be listening hard in Troy, New York? Sincerely, Allan."
"As I See It"

As I have been observing some current attitudes within the Mennonite Church toward biblical nonresistance, I have become increasingly concerned about what seems to me to be a retreat from facing the practical implications of this conviction. While we give lip service to nonresistance as a doctrine I am disturbed by those who oppose the application of this doctrine to the immediate situation that has been confronting us, the war in Vietnam.

The logic seems to be that we should not speak out publicly in opposition to the war in Vietnam because it is not our war. It seems to me, if our conviction that all wars are wrong is to have any meaning, it must be applied to this specific war.

Others argue that while they believe in nonresistance, they do not think we should make public statements or take a public stand. "Our government has been good to us and we are getting along well with our community. Let's not disturb things!" Will we succumb to the temptation to again become the "quiet people of this land"? Is the biblical teaching concerning love and nonresistance something on which we have a corner and therefore should keep quietly to ourselves, or do we have a divine responsibility to proclaim it? Do we believe Christ's teaching on this matter is central to the heart of the gospel, or is it a peripheral and optional instruction for Mennonites only? What responsibility do we have to witness to those Christians who militantly bless and praise the whole bloody conflict raging in Vietnam as a valiant Christian duty? What responsibility do we have to speak to those who represent us in decision-making positions in government? I cannot see the consistency between the attitude which enthusiastically approves of a strong U.S. military machine fighting communism in Southeast Asia "to protect our Christian-American way of life" (and though not usually said out loud, is mightily grateful the neighbors' sons are fighting and dying there), but "just don't ask me or my sons to go to war and fight because we believe the Bible teaches us we should not kill."

I am afraid we have absorbed more of the materialistic and militaristic spirit of our society than we want to admit. I think at times we are also found to be more involved in negative reaction than in positive witness. That is, in a concern to bend over backwards to avoid being identified with the radical war-protester "sinners," we have in the final analysis decided it is better to hide our light under a bushel, rather than let it shine at the very time and place of darkness where it is most needed.

If we do not want to be identified with the radicals, the alternative should not be silence. It should be creatively finding ways and settings in which we can share our witness for peace in a dynamic and positive way and from a biblical orientation. Jesus was criticized because He associated with such sinners. Perhaps we may also need to risk such criticism in order to share a positive witness not only with other Christians and our society at large, but with the protesters as well. — David W. Mann

"His truth endureth to all generations" (Ps. 100:5).

In each generation many have tried to destroy trust in the Scriptures. They have labored long to find flaws and to prove certain passages untrue. But God's truth just endures. As the breaking of streetlights does not shut out the sun so the speeches of men do not destroy eternal truth. While the search for flaws on the part of some continues and is handed on to one generation after another, the reality of truth is realized by generation after generation of those who love truth.

Yes, God's truth has stood the scrutiny of centuries. It shall stand and endure to all the generations yet unborn. And for those, who put confidence in God's Word they shall never be ashamed. Said R. A. Torrey, "The Bible is the only book that always says all that it means to say and never says anything more than it means to say. The more rigidly one examines the Bible and the more closely he studies it, the more will he be filled with admiration for the amazing way in which it expresses the truth."

O God, is it fair
For some to have nice homes
And for others to suffer in slums?
For some to live in safety
And others in constant fear?
For some to be bloated with food
And others from lack of it?
For some to shoot
And others to be shot down?

The Spirit of the Lord upon Me

I watched a row of young people during one session of Mission '70. What I saw was deep emotional and intellectual involvement. Sometimes leaning forward so not to miss a word of the testimonies reminiscent of the old-fashioned revival meetings and then clapping and cheering in agreement, these young people identified with much that happened at Christopher Dock High School, Lansdale, Pa., July 1-7.

Mission Board meeting moved with the precision of skilled planning and coordination. It will be remembered by some as filled with far-out features in music and speeches. Others will remember Mission '70 as the church finally getting "with it." Some left shocked and said so. Many were encouraged and impressed. Some were turned off and some were turned on. Each brought his own anticipation and experience and reacted accordingly. No one could say he left unmoved or unstimulated.

All in all, when different responses like these are present it seems more like an apostolic church experience than some of the said church meetings we've sometimes attended. At least it seems proper that when a meeting of Christ's evangel is held it ought to be so meaningful and earthshaking that people begin to get excited and stirred up so that questions are asked and we are forced to face where we stand on the issues and answers.

Freshness in reporting characterized the sessions. Reports could hardly be called dry or boring. They were short and to the point. Involvement by most in attendance was apparent by the clapping and the amens. And both are unusual with Mennonites. Although in most of our meetings we make no indication where we stand in relation to what is said or done, whether we approve or disapprove, this meeting had its voices of approval and disapproval at rather regular though unplanned intervals.

Different also this year was the amount of speeches, discussion, and time focused on such things as personal relationships and self-image. Too often we get bogged down with programs and plans and budgets. The importance of persons and personal relationships is overlooked or bypassed.

But it is right here where our witness is so often hindered or blurred. Poor interpersonal relationships, inner hurt feelings and attitudes, and a wrong self-image cause all kinds of problems. Just as the message of love does not stand a chance of getting through to the world if we are unloving, so we will not treat others as persons worthy of God's love and grace if we think of ourselves as worms.

If we think of ourselves as children of God we will treat others as God's children. If we appreciate God's work of salvation in making us new persons, we begin to appreciate others for whom Christ died.

All this says again what we have known, at least intellectually. Sanctified personal relationships and proper self-image are important in doing mission work.

Mission '70 had also some excellent speeches. Increasingly, however, in our discussions of the crisis issues of our day it appears we are better able to analyze the problems such as racism, poverty, and the ghetto than provide answers. Perhaps this is because we are human. So persons attending heard very little new about the plight of the poor, the situation of the Spanish-speaking, and the condition of the miserable minorities in our society. Each speaker rightly bared his soul about such. What was missing in all but a few exceptions was a plan, a suggestion, a solution to the problems—something with which the hearer could go away saying, "This I can do."

Of course, answers are hard to come by. And easy answers are worthless. That's why it's easier to repeat again and again the predicament rather than to really think through what ought to be done. This then is simply an observation that perhaps in all of our preaching at least 75 percent of the time should be spent on providing some suggestive solutions. Else we remain a frustrated few which add to the problem by building up hostility or we are turned into mere activists who become no more than actors. If a problem is presented too often without some solution we either become emotionally hardened or practically helpless.

But the Spirit was upon us. And all, from draft resisters to resisters of draft resisters, from those under thirty to those who suddenly became aware they were over thirty, from those who planned the meeting to those who met as planned, sensed that the Spirit was upon them to bless and perhaps to bug. In a more common way of saying it, He was present to convince and convict. — D.
Fear in the Land of “Khotso”

By James Bertsche

Emblazoned proudly on a colorful coat of arms hanging on a frontier archway admitting the traveler to the little African country of Lesotho is the phrase: “Kena ka khotso,” i.e. “Enter in peace.” But for this little landlocked, mountainous, and newly independent southern Africa country there is no peace; there is now only bewilderment and fear.

Lesotho, a country of rugged beauty, is the product of an interesting chapter of the tumultuous flow of southern Africa history of the past 150 years. Sitting on a high hill overlooking the little capital town of Maseru is a monument bearing the bronze likeness of King Moshoeshoe I (pronounced Mosh-way-shay) who is honored as the founder of the present Sotho nation. During the murderous military expansion of the famed Zulu tribesmen under their Chief Chaka in the early 1800s, Chief Moshoeshoe elected to lead his people northward into the broken terrain of the Maluti Mountains where he chose a towering, flat-topped butte as his fortress around which to form his kingdom.

His fame spread and soon other chiefs came requesting to become part of his kingdom. A man of wisdom, the king realized that the future of his people lay not in military conquest but in peaceful cohabitation with those around them. Desiring to inculcate in his people a true love for peace, he sent word requesting missionaries and in 1833 the first three men of the Paris Evangelical Society arrived at his fortress mountain and eventually established a post 20 miles away at Morija, a station which exists to this day.

But on the heels of the missionaries came other less welcome Europeans. Wishing to escape the influence and control of the British in the Cape area, increasing numbers of Dutch settlers were joining the historic northward trek across the veld of South Central Africa and soon Moshoeshoe’s kingdom was surrounded by these Dutch folk who with gun, plow, and Bible were intent upon establishing a new nation of their own according to their own lights. Friction between the two groups was inevitable since they both sought to control and use the same lowlands, the Dutch for farming and the Sotho for the grazing of their livestock. After a period of armed clashes, King Moshoeshoe requested British protection. In 1868 a proclamation was issued stating that henceforth Basutoland was to be regarded as a protectorate of the British Crown. It was shortly after this accomplishment that the aged king died and was buried on the mountaintop.

During the same general period, the first Catholic missionaries arrived, adding their activity to that of the French Protestants. Such was the response of the Sotho people that today about 90 percent of the population identifies itself either with the Protestant or the Catholic faith.

England’s original design seems to have been to eventually relinquish Lesotho for incorporation into the Union of South Africa. But as the extreme racist policies of this country became increasingly clear, Britain determined to help the Sotho people to achieve their political independence. Thus it was that a constitutional conference was held in London in 1964. Provisions were made to recognize King Moshoeshoe II, a descendant of the founding king, as head of state and to establish a parliament. In the general elections of April 1965, a conservative Basutoland National Party won a majority over a liberal, leftist Congress Party and Lesotho embarked on its first years of political independence. It was not long, however, until the staggering problems confronting this little country became all too clear. To enumerate some of them:

1. An arid, rocky part of southeast Africa, with 85 percent of its areas too mountainous to cultivate, it is obliged to import supplemental food supplies each year in order to feed its people.

2. Because of the rugged terrain, good roads are limited to the lowlands. Rough trails into the mountains are negotiable only by jeep type vehicles. Indeed, some isolated communities are reachable only by mule train.

3. The Sotho people, whose culture bears a startling resemblance to that of the Navaho Indians of southwest United States, are limited primarily to animal products as export items, e.g. hides, colorful designed mohair rugs, and blankets. This is supplemented by diamond mining on a modest scale.

4. To balance their annual budget, Lesotho has depended heavily upon annual financial aid from Great Britain and upon the wages of Sotho men who go to work in the South African mines.

5. Lesotho, with an area of some 11,000 square miles and a population of about one million people, is completely encircled by South Africa which controls traffic across its borders and also serves as the primary market for its products and as the principal source of its needed supplies.

6. While there are proposals for the development of its mining industry and for the construction of a large dam, these have not progressed beyond the discussion stage.

In brief, Lesotho is a pocket of people within South Africa with pitifully few resources with which to attempt to build a viable nation. Nevertheless, the initial years of independence were proud years and under their national motto of “khotso,” they faced the future with determined optimism.

But in early 1970, elections again came due and the fragile sense of well-being and purpose in Lesotho was shattered. When, on election day, it became evident that the opposition Congress Party was about to win a slim majority vote, Prime Minister Leabua Jonathan, leader of the incumbent Basutoland National Party annulled the election and seized power giving as his reason the communist leanings of the opposition group. After a short period of deceptive calm, the opposition began to rally support. Protests became more and more vehement and finally culminated in bloody clashes in the mountains between meagerly armed rebel groups and patrols of the mobile police force under the control of Prime Minister Jonathan. Recently King Mosheshoe II has been exiled to Holland, opposition leaders jailed, and their papers banned. Despite an outward appearance of pastoral calm, the country is in the grip of tension, animosity, and fear.

Currently the Prime Minister is initiating talks with the detained opposition leaders in an effort to resolve their crisis. In the meantime, the South Africa government keeps a wary eye on this troubled little country for which “khotso” seems suddenly to have become but an elusive dream.

“Beloved, Beware Lest Ye Also ...”

By Nelson E. Kauffman

As I emerged from the subway recently at 59th St. in New York, I saw written on plywood protecting a construction project, “Kill a Commie for Christ,” and a bit farther down, “Support President Nixon.” This struck me, and I pondered its meaning as I walked on. Does Christ lead men to kill communists to protect American affluence-poverty, racism-liberty, Christian-nationalism?

A few blocks farther on I saw a large crowd on the steps of the large Art Institute. Above the door was hanging a large banner, “Nineteenth Century America.” Below it and on the steps of the building blocking the entrance was sitting a large crowd of artists. Many others were standing around the seated group. Police were on guard as an Institute official was standing in the midst of the seated group having dialogue. The artists were protesting the war and racism.

TV cameras and microphones were catching the action.

Down the street at another art museum, I found the doors open, “No Admission Charge Today,” and tables of war protesting materials manned by artists who were also collecting signatures. Inside there was almost constant showing of a film on the atomic horror of Hiroshima. I saw the pictures of destruction, the horribly burned bodies, scenes one would like to forget. How can a civilized, so-called Christian country, continue to create and stockpile such weapons? The public so easily forgets that it was America, not Russia, that dropped the two bombs, when the war was nearly over, just to see what the effect would be, destroying the hundreds of thousands of people, young and old, ushering in the age of unspeakable horror. Not only that, she continues to perfect and produce enough of these monsters of destruction to destroy the whole world several times over.

Are the long-haired artists, who look like our pictures of Jesus, the only ones willing to sacrifice themselves, to make society stop and consider what this nation is really doing? Will we reject this crowd, and identify and be brothers with the “Christians” who “Kill Commies for Christ”? Or do we just wash our hands of the issues and preach against sin in general, which everybody is against, and the righteousness of noninvolvement?

The next morning in my devotion I read from Jeremiah Chapter seven, “Don’t be fooled by those who lie to you and say that since the temple of the Lord is here, God will never let Jerusalem be destroyed. You may remain under these conditions only; if you stop your wicked thoughts and deeds, and are fair to others: and stop exploiting orphans, widows, and foreigners, and stop your murdering and stop your worshipping idols as you do now to your own hurt. Then, and then only, will I let you stay in this land that I gave to your fathers to keep forever... Do you really think that you can steal, murder, commit adultery, lie, and worship Baal...and then come here and stand before me in my Temple and chant ‘God will save us,’ only to go right back to all those evil things again?”

To what extent are we today responsible for the sins of our nation, or to warn it about its sins? Where is the voice of the prophets of God in our time? Are the artists the only ones who are heard? Can God depend upon us, or have we sold out to the system?

Last year when the Montreal police were on strike, “Thousands of good churchgoing Montrealers (the city is literally full of churches both Catholic and Protestant) had looted and wrecked many of the largest stores and shops downtown. The same psychological phenomena is reflected in the record that most whites who have shot and killed unarmed Negroes are ‘good churchgoing Christians.’ This debasement of Christian teaching and the continued support of the war in many pulpits has robbed the young of their spiritual heritage” (Between the Lines, May 15, 1970).

A young couple were contemplating marriage and as is appropriate under such circumstances, they were discussing problems which might arise in their union. The young man hesitantly said, “Dear, I’m not sure we should be married after all. I am anemic.”

To which the girl replied, “Darling, that’s all right. You go to your church and I’ll go to mine.”

Musings of an MCC Doctor’s Wife

By Jean Klaasen

The rain is coming down steadily and heavily. Promise of more to come continues to rumble. The leaves on the outspread arms of the mango tree, whose soft green shields the back veranda, break the descent of raindrops to the waiting earth.

I feel as if I am on an island. The rain cuts me off from intruders for a little while and I almost feel as if I belong on this island house! As if this house with its rough cement floors, open drains, and other faults is home.

It has taken time. Almost two and a half years we have lived in India. Neither the hamlet of Corn, Oklahoma, the city life of Kansas City, nor the foreign Canal Zone quite prepared me for living here. I hate washing diapers by hand; I hate the constant grime under my fingernails; I hate the stale stench and worse taste of the daily rice ration; and I hate being cheated by the food vendors at the market or the hawkers who come to the house.

But those aren’t major concerns anymore. Slowly positive projects are beginning to develop. The MCC needlework project opened the door of the community for me. The sewing ladies and I exchange cups of tea and insights into each other’s way of life. And in my broken Bengali, I’ve even sent some to the clinic for family planning. I’ve been able to tell a lady that just saying she doesn’t “need” another baby won’t assure her of not having one, and she has taken preventative measures.

Some of my sewing girls are young and have had to quit school at an early age because a parent died. Now they want to learn English. I am glad to share my three-year-old’s colorful books with them and I am learning as much Bengali as they are English.

The fact that I am not a nurse hasn’t made me useless to my husband in the clinic, but I stumbled onto a way in which I might be able to contribute directly to the hospital project. I started to do the bookkeeping and filing the correspondence and medical literature. (My previous bookkeeping experience terminated a few months after our marriage when my husband discovered that our checkbook balance was an almost zero rather than a plus one hundred.) But having to check the cook’s accounts has made me a more accurate mathematician.

Not only is this place feeling like home because of my involvement in areas of need, but also because of the things that say “you’re one of us.” A little girl called me, “Didi-moni” (older, respected sister) and not “mem sahib.” Two regular weekly visitors say “thank you for the fellowship” after dinner and a game of Yahtzee are finished. I can tell the Bengali nurse that I don’t like going to tea in the car like she wants to — though I give in.

Those are the things that made me feel warm inside when the sun was behind the clouds. Now the sun is out, the path will soon be dried off, and the house and I will no longer be an island, but part of the community.

The Insulation Meeting

By David McCarthy

Last year I attended a meeting where newly elected officers were to be installed. The retiring president soberly announced, “We will now have the insulation of officers.” Perhaps she was right. Even church officers need insulation at least as much as they need installation.

Officers need to be insulated against laziness. “We are all volunteers in a volunteer group, so let’s not expect too much of the members. Don’t push too fast or set standards too high.” Listen to those excuses and before long you have yielded to the temptation to occupy an office without fulfilling the duties.

Leaders also need insulation against criticism. An officer soon finds that he is doing more than some members want him to, and less than others expect of him. Every fresh idea invites jealous comments from those who wish they had thought of the idea first, or rumbles from comfortable souls who seek to maintain the status quo. As a sage remarked long ago, “The only way to avoid criticism is to say nothing, do nothing, and be nothing!”

And officers must have strong insulation against discouragement. Whenever laziness and criticism fail to accomplish the devil’s purposes, he turns to discouragement. It is hard to plan carefully and then try to steer a new idea into the life of a congregation. The project often gets derailed and the dream disintegrates. How is your insulation against discouragement?

The most effective insulating material is a close walk with God. Look to Him as you lay your plans, and lean on Him as you execute them. Remember:

“Every work for Jesus will be blest,
But He asks from everyone his best;
Our talents may be few, these may be small,
But unto Him belongs our best — our all!”

A Living Love
By Willis L. Breckbill

Man is born to live with others. God saw that it was not good for Adam to be alone so He gave him Eve. Adam and Eve had a problem with each other when their relationship to God was broken through disobedience. Fruitful relationships are linked by love. Love is expressed by what we are to other people.

The Scripture says that God is love. His being is love. The greatest expression of love is God's love for man, not man's love for God. Man is unlovely because of his sin, yet God loved him and acted for his good.

The story Jesus told which best depicts the love of God is the story of a son who asked for his inheritance and left home. He spent recklessly the money for which his father worked very hard. He ruined the reputation of the family by immoral living and disrespectful behavior in society. When he came to himself he decided to return home, asking only that he might be his father's servant. The father was overjoyed at his return. He kissed him, put a ring on his finger, and a robe over his shoulder and killed the best animal in the herd for a feast. The father declared that once his son was lost but now is found, was dead but now alive. The father in that story is God. That same father has an open heart to you.

In response to God's love for us He asks us to love. The first and greatest commandment is to love God with all your strength, all your mind, all your heart. You are to love God with your complete being. The life change of a person who learns this secret is unbelievable. A young man became a preacher, thinking that this would assure him of God's love. During his early years of ministry he was trying to earn God's love. One day he realized the truth that God loved him, not because of his preaching but simply because God loves. In return he loved God and found a new life, a new freedom. The congregation had a new and loving minister.

A deep devotion and love to God imparts love for fellowmen. You cannot say you love God and hate your fellowman. Religious people are not always loving people. Jesus told the story of a man who was on a trip and was beaten and robbed and left for dead. Two religious leaders passed him and left him there. A man from a different religion came by and stopped. He bound up his wounds, took him to a hotel, and paid his bill. Jesus implied that this is the kind of neighbor we are to be.

Love is a deterrent to fear. John, Jesus' beloved apostle, wrote, "Perfect love casts out fear." If you fear someone, run a little experiment. When you meet or think of that person, say in your thoughts, "God loves you, I want to love you." Do this repeatedly and see what happens in your life. If you have a great feeling of dislike toward a group of people, realize that God loves them and allow that love to flow through you toward them.

Love is giving of self. "Greater love has no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." Jesus did just that. He gave His life as a ransom for sin. Hatred and fear can be corrected by love. Let God's love in. Then let it flow out to others.

Freeing the Captive Spirit
By Wilbur Hostetler

"Have you heard from Willie since his release from prison?" wrote Mrs. Barbara Sevits, veteran correspondent with inmates of various penal institutions. "His mother writes to me occasionally. Poor woman! Willie had written that he will keep in touch when he leaves the institution. I guess when the men come out they aren’t lonely anymore."

Not all releases break off communications. John and Mary Detwiler were pleasantly surprised to receive a telephone call from Bill, who is now working on a state college campus in Missouri. He was happy to inform them that he had recently been married, and he called his bride to the phone to verify the fact. Receiving correspondence while still behind bars gave Bill new incentive to make choices leading to a successful readjustment to society.

Correspondence arrangements with outsiders are becoming increasingly difficult in some institutions. A few states have no restrictions, while others seldom grant approval unless the proposed correspondents have known each other in the past.

Sending greeting cards on special occasions is an alternate venture. Christmas, Easter, and birthdays are excellent opportunities. Greeting cards are permissible even where correspondence is not approved, provided no personal message is included.

Many inmates have expressed appreciation for greetings received from members of the First Mennonite Church in Topeka, Ind. The experience has proven mutually beneficial. In order to help men coming from prison, the church rented a vacant house, many hours were donated to renovate and redecorate it, and now it functions as a halfway house for parolees.

Weekly or monthly visits to prisons by ministers means much to inmates. Other churchmen occasionally accompanying regular visitors have received new insights concerning prisoners and the potential for rehabilitation with the help of God's people.

Opportunities exist for attending public functions held in prisons. Graduation exercises, stamp and fish club exhibits, and open house programs of Alcoholics Anonymous are occasions to which outsiders can receive invitations. Opportunities frequently arise for befriending troubled persons in local jails. Relationships developed there can usually be continued in the state institution to which the inmate is sentenced.

Many initial prison contacts do not develop into relationships. But every situation has potential for meeting some needs. The church's mission includes coming to the aid of God's children in captivity for whom Christ died.

Wilbur Hostetler, director of Home Bible Studies correspondence courses at Mennonite Board of Missions, is active in prison ministries.

Dr. Martin Luther King, Sr., father of the slain civil rights leader, said in an Upper Room chapel service in Nashville that America may be doomed unless it overcomes attitudes of hate and violence. “We’ve been fooling with this white supremacy and here comes black supremacy,” said Dr. King, pastor of the Ebenezer Baptist Church in Atlanta. “They’re both wrong. . . . There is no such thing as a superior race. . . . Man is going to be judged by his soul.”

He criticized what he called “sacred preachers” for their lack of support in racial matters. “We’ve got to go back home in local churches and inform them of what is happening and what is wrong,” he said. “I’m afraid the Christian church is going to be the last to open its doors.”

“There’s so much apathy and George Wallace doctrine and racial hate being preached,” the Baptist pastor observed. “Out of that environment a man is born who can pull a trigger or put dynamite under a church. It’s organized hate and evil and I’m worried about it.”

In response to a question following the Upper Room service, Dr. King emphasized that “violence, burning, and looting never solves anything. Killing is wrong. I don’t care who is doing the killing or what color he is. Killing is wrong.”

Eternal winter on earth due to pollution is an ultimate possibility, according to Dr. Earl W. Barrett of the U.S. Environmental Science Services Administration (ESSA). Speaking in Melbourne, Australia, Dr. Barrett said that 50 million tons of dust particles in the atmosphere—or only 10 to 20 times the present amount—would decrease the amount of sunlight reaching the earth’s surface to such an extent that the average temperature on earth would fall to 40 degrees F. Such a temperature would make it impossible for most plants to survive.

In a document countering persistent reports that the world is entering a “post-Christian era” and that biblical religion is going out of style, the Christian and Missionary Alliance (CMA) cited continued growth in Toronto, Ont.

Latest figures on overseas churches, covering 1968, reflected a record number of baptisms, 15,474. “This is the highest number in the history of our work and exceeds by over 4,000 the previous record high in 1964,” said the Rev. Louis L. King, CMA foreign secretary.

In North and Central America, figures disclosed for the year 1969 showed a gain of 42 churches and a membership increase of 4,610. The figures include the addition to the CMA of a group of churches in Guatemala and the Dominican Republic.

Worldwide CMA figures show a total of 215,039 members, an increase of 83,196 for the past decade. During that time the number of organized churches increased from 1,466 to 2,598 and the total of self-supporting churches and groups jumped from 2,121 to 4,414.

The “conscience of America” is today coming from its young people, Father Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C., president of the University of Notre Dame, said in New York in an appeal to adults to hear what the under-25 generation is saying about the need for peace and human dignity.

Father Hesburgh, who is also chairman of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, spoke at a second annual Man of Conscience Award Dinner, sponsored by the Appeal of Conscience Foundation.

In the past 60 years the number of children in the national Church of Scotland (Presbyterian) has dropped by almost half—from 490,000 in 1911 to 250,000 this year.

The denomination’s General Assembly was told by Dr. W. H. Rogan: “In other words, we have lost half our future in 60 years.”

“We don’t need sociological research and university teams to find out why there’s an escalation of juvenile crime and violence and all the rest,” he said. “These are unanswerable evidence and speak louder than any clever argument. We must drive this home to parents.”

Rep. Fred Schwengel, of the 1st District in Iowa believes in cutting the cloth to fit the garment. Keenly aware that more than 50 percent of the nation’s highway fatalities and a greater percentage of highway accidents are alcohol-involved, he believes that liquor revenue should be spent on highway safety programs.

Rep. Schwengel wants to match the size of the liquor payment for safety to the percentage of highway accidents which are alcohol related. He therefore introduced a bill into Congress (H.R. 16932) on April 13, 1970, which would authorize appropriation of 40 percent of the Federal Excise taxes on alcohol to be allocated for highway safety programs.

Should the Schwengel bill pass in its present form it would mean that something like $7 billion dollars per year would be made available for highway safety programs. Surely a generous portion of this should go to educate the driving public that alcohol is the big killer, and that the driver who drinks should face the stiffest possible penalties for endangering his own life and the lives of other people.

Congressman Schwengel’s bill has been referred to the House Committee on Public Works. Concerned citizens who see value in this new approach to the drinking driver problem would do well to write to Rep. Schwengel commending it. Letters should be addressed to: The Honorable Fred Schwengel, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C. 20515.

Medical researchers report new evidence that alcoholism is biochemically similar to narcotics addiction. Researchers at the Veterans Administration Hospital in Houston found that a metabolic product of alcohol joins with a brain chemical to form a new compound which resembles morphine. Long exposure to large quantities of alcohol sets off a chain of chemical reactions that leads to physical addiction similar to that caused by drugs, state the experts.

Pressure is on Congress to “do something about marijuana and LSD — but don’t touch alcohol,” since about $14 billions a year are spent on alcoholic beverages. That drug addiction is to a great extent a reaction to the excessive use of alcohol and commercial drugs in the average home is deliberately ignored.

Young blacks in Jackson, Miss., were urged by the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy not to resort to violence, even in the face of provocation by whites.

“Do not retaliate with violence. Let them kill us — let our innocent blood cry out on their hands,” the head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference pleaded.

Mr. Abernathy’s appearance at a rally attended by 1,500 cheering blacks was his first appearance in Mississippi as head of the SCLC.

He came to give his support to a proposed boycott called by black students and businessmen. The ban was called in the wake of the slaying of two young blacks by police on the campus of Jackson State College last month.
The Mennonite Story is Shown

The Mennonite Story, a 22-minute sound color film, is now being shown on an hourly schedule at the Mennonite Information Center, Lancaster, Pa. It is also available on a rental basis from EMBMC Information Services, Salunga, Pa., and from MBMC Audiovisuals, Elkhart, Ind.

The Mennonite Story was prepared as a discussion resource to help answer many of the questions tourists ask about Amish and Mennonite life. Of the three million tourists who are flooding into the Lancaster area during the current year, more than 30,000 will call at Mennonite Information Center, Lincoln Highway East.

A documentary film, The Mennonite Story includes a few historical flashbacks, while Paul Landis sketches the origins, persecutions, and migrations of the Anabaptists. The viewer is introduced to some flesh-and-blood Mennonites. A series of happy Christians, each in his own setting, witness that Christ has given purpose and satisfaction to life. There are homemakers, farmers, and teachers: some are churchmen and businessmen; there are youth and senior citizens. The Choraliers, a local Mennonite musical group, provide the musical features and background for the film.

A young father, a farmer, witnesses that God changes one's life; that selfishness is overcome in those who respond to God's plan. A mother of teenagers declares that woman's role is to complete man, not compete with him.

A teacher and church leader recognizes that the next generation differs from the old in forms of worship, but not in basic concerns. A church statesman of long experience rejoices that youth are in the church, serving in fifty countries around the world.

In a wrap-up Paul Landis says, “The Christ we follow doesn’t change, but we must constantly discover what it means in our time to follow Jesus and His Word amidst materialism, secularism, and militarism. The way of redemptive love, the fellowship of committed believers in Christ, and involvement in Christian mission to the world must continue to be the guiding principles of our style of life.”

Each witness had opportunity to record only a part of what he has to say. But rapid presentation will stimulate questions and open opportunities for discussion.

Already it has been observed that the film is having a secondary ministry of helping Mennonite people to a better self-image. One teenager responded, “It made me proud to be a Mennonite.”

The Mennonite Story was produced by Bert Martin Associates, Burbank, Calif., and was financed by a group of Lancaster, Pa., businessmen. In a private preview of the film on June 30, those who participated in preparing the film dedicated it to a ministry of Christian witness.

Kreiders on Summer Furlough

Roy and Florence Kreider and family, missionaries to Israel under the auspices of Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, arrived in the U.S. on June 14 for a brief furlough. The Kreiders have served in Ramat Hasharon since 1953. Kreider serves as coordinator of the Mennonite Mission in Israel which largely carries on small-group fellowships and Bible studies. He has guided tours throughout the country and has carried out numerous study projects for the churches of the United Christian Council of Israel.

The Kreiders attended the Overseas Missionary Orientation held at Elkhart June 18-26, 1970, on the theme: God at Work in the World. They also attended the Mission Board’s annual meeting in Lansdale, Pa., dealing with the theme: The Spirit of the Lord upon Me. These they found excellent opportunities to become updated after five years’ absence; however, “the developments were almost too rapid to comprehend.”

Kreider found very positive transitions in the life of the church. The creation of the Minority Ministries Council provided heartening evidence that the church is responsive and is struggling with the desperate needs at home. In Israel friends would often ask: Do you feel you ought to be over here? What—if the churches are so concerned about the needs at home—what is your church doing?

Commenting on the Bible study at the orientation led by Millard Lind, Kreider noted that “putting into theological perspective problems we are facing as a church provided a sharper focus of the nature of the Christian’s response to the problems in the Middle East.” The Bible studies dealt with the Old Testament concept of love and grace. There exists the continuing temptation to identify the office of king as absolute—as did the Old Testament tribes—thereby setting up an idol rather than recognizing the means for God’s grace to be at work in the world.

Nursing Program Receives Accreditation

The Nursing Program at Hesston College has just received accreditation from the National League for Nursing, Department of Associate Degree Programs.

Accreditation followed a nursing faculty self-study report which was submitted to the Department of Associate Degree Programs and the report to the same organization by a visiting team which came to the Hesston campus last February. Members of the visiting team were Joan Kaiser of New York and Mrs. Sue Petrovich of St. Louis.

Criteria used for the accreditation process include faculty organization, facilities, philosophy, and objectives and the degree to which the objectives are met in actual practice.

Accreditation for Hesston College’s Nursing Program means that it is recognized as a program of quality similar to regional accreditation for colleges. It is the highest kind of accreditation a nursing program can achieve.

Ray Showalter, chairman of the Division of Nursing, has been director of the program at Hesston College since its beginning in 1966.

Ways to peace in the Middle East are difficult. “If the problem were as simple as some editors and writers are making it, then the problem would have been solved long ago,” said Kreider; yet he sees “those prepared to work at it” as providing real hope. He was encouraged and commented, “The church in North America is far more sensitive and responsive to the critical situation than I was aware.”

On their previous furlough Kreider had sensed a feeling of deep confusion in the church as to what it means to be Christian in this revolutionary setting. “We have come out of that confusion,” Kreider said. “Wholesale leadership is being exerted. From reports I hear the church is taking serious hold; it is feeling that there is a way.”

Kreider stated that a large part of our constituency feels biblical justification for Israel to be where it is. Therefore, they feel that the Arabs are just in the way. “This is an oversimplification if not inaccurate biblical interpretation. There are elements of right on the Jewish side, however, that are often ignored,” he said. Mrs. Kreider noted the adverse psychological effects of continuing raids, reprisals, and retaliation on the children of both sides who must spend their nights in shelters.

On their furlough the Kreiders will be visiting their sponsoring churches in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Ontario. Mrs. Kreider, the former Florence Cressman, is originally from Breslau, Ont. The Kreiders have three children: David (17), Jonathan (15), and Rosemary (12). The family will return to Israel on Sept. 1, 1970.
Twenty-Five Missionaries to Enter Service

A number of missionaries participated in EMBMC's overseas orientation July 6-11. Fifteen were newly appointed and 32 were returning or furloughed missionaries. Within the next few months most of them will travel to their places of service in Southeast Asia, East Africa, Central America, and Europe.

During the orientation, Richard Detweiller of Souder-ton, Pa., and Eugene Herr of Goshen, Ind., led the group in biblical reflections.

New Films Added to Library

Whispering Mountain, 30 min., Ken Anderson Films. Whispering Mountain is a 30-minute color motion picture of a boy named "Ole" who lived in one of those colorful towns which sprawl along the foothills of the Alps. For several summers Ole spent his vacation with his rugged, and sometimes rough, Uncle Wilhelm up in the mountains. He spent much of his time out with the cattle. He loved the mountains.

But as he peered from the train window on his way up into the mountain, Ole thought of what his mother had said shortly before: "I've become a Christian, Ole," she said, "and I am praying you will become one, too." When Ole saw Whispering Mountain he thought of the adventures the summer held and he tried to forget...

God Owns My Business, 50 min., Ken Anderson film. Rental $30. Subsidized rental $20. This is the true story of Stanley Tams who turns over 100 percent of his business to God. How many businessmen dare consider a similar commitment?

Hiroshima-Nagasaki, August 1945 is a 16-minute sound film about nuclear death, destruction, and survival. The film is a condensation from two hours and 40 minutes of on-the-spot filming by Japanese photographers during the days immediately after the first atomic bombs were dropped.

The Japanese footage was seized by U.S. Occupation Forces in 1945 and had been classified as "secret" until 1968 when it was released to the government of Japan on its demand. Columbia University's Center for Mass Communication acquired copies of the film last year and released the edited version. Even though the edited version is done sensitively the film is not recommended for persons below high school age.

Dr. S. E. Luria, MIT's Sedgwick Professor of Biology: "It is a very upsetting, very remarkable document, especially the tremendous human dignity one sees. I wish every American could see it, and particularly, every Congressman."

Powells on Furlough

David and Karen Powell, missionaries to Puerto Rico under Mennonite Board of Missions, and their two children, Marcia (5) and James (3), arrived in the U.S. on June 1 for a brief furlough. Dave served as pastor of the Betania Church for the past 2 1/2 years, and taught part time at the Instituto Biblico Mennonita in Aibonito. The Bethany Church was the first Mennonite congregation in Puerto Rico established in 1946.

The Bible Institute offers courses leading to diplomas in Christian education and biblical theology. Emphasis is placed on preparing congregational leaders. Extension courses are also offered in various churches to help laymen prepare for the work of the church. Evening extension courses in pastoral training are also conducted in area churches. The Institute headquarters in Aibonito includes an office, study room, two classrooms, and library. The decentralized teaching plan allows individuals to work in their home areas, thus minimizing the problems of finance and transportation.

Most of the 17 congregations (697 membership) lie within a 20-mile radius on the 35 by 100 mile island. Total enrollment of the Institute is 85 students, including several women. Admission requirement to the pastoral training course is high school graduation.

Powell feels that the missionary is less and less needed as the pastor of a church. The role of the missionary in the Puerto Rico Conference, he says, lies in the technical areas where he can offer specialized help such as in counseling and leadership training.

While on furlough Powell will be studying at Wheaton College in preparation for use of new curriculum — semiprogrammed in-
Sewing Center Graduates Seventeen

Seventeen Palestinian Arab girls received certificates on June 15, 1970, indicating that they had completed the nine-month course of instruction at the Mennonite Central Committee Sewing Center in the village of Surif near Hebron, West Bank.

In the brief ceremony, sewing teacher Miss Amal Badr and MCC director for West Bank Ivan Friesen presented the certificates and commended the students’ work. This event marked the second year of operation of the sewing center and the second class of girls to graduate.

Girls admitted to the class must be 15-20 years old, and must be able to read and write. The course of instruction begins with hand stitches and mending of clothing, and continues with sewing of children’s garments. As their skills increase, the girls make more difficult adult garments. This includes designing their own patterns.

The village sewing course concentrates on hand and machine sewing, but weekly nutrition, cooking, and personal hygiene classes are also included. The course is not intended to prepare the girls for employment as seamstresses, but rather to enable them to make and care for their own families’ clothing and general health. It is hoped that the total impact of the course will be to raise the standard of living in the village as the girls marry and raise their children, applying the lessons learned at the MCC center. — Rachel Friesen.

Home Bible Studies: Sound Investment

“A dollar may not be worth a dollar everywhere, but it easily doubles its value when invested in Home Bible Studies.” Kenneth Weaver, executive director of Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., where most of the Mennonite Board of Missions’ correspondence Bible study is handled, estimates that it costs $8.30 to furnish a student with a free 12-lesson course.

Knowing that it may sound expensive to some people, Mr. Weaver points out that there is no less-expensive way to make 12 contacts with an individual. Besides being a valuable experience in Bible study, each lesson is an invitation to ask questions or to ask for a counselor’s help with personal problems. Mr. Weaver believes it is likely that more good will be accomplished through this extended communication than in a single face-to-face meeting which would probably cost more.

At present there are more than 1,000 students enrolled in Home Bible Studies from Mennonite Broadcasts. During 1969 there were 26,556 lessons graded, or about 105 per day. “New” students in 1969 numbered 2,725. Paul Roth, the director of Home Bible Studies at Mennonite Broadcasts, is convinced that this project is one of the most effective ways to present Jesus Christ as the answer to the problems of 20th-century men and women.

As a part of its “Celebration of Becoming” the Pittsburgh Mennonite Church recently observed a day of commitment. Both the membership and the headquarters property on 7210 Meade Street were dedicated, followed by a picnic in a local park. Guests included Ross Metzlers (Allegheny Conference) and Art Smokers (former Associate Pastor). Speakers were Robert R. Lavelle, bridge to the black community, and Urbane Peachey, assistant pastor. This emerging urban congregation of forty adults and twenty children is committed to a mission of bridge-building. As God provides the materials, bridges are being built: between persons in the fellowship, to rural Mennonite communities, to secular urban friends, to internationals, and to the black community. Ministries include VS, MDS, but mostly personal relationships. Affiliation is with Allegheny Conference. Jim Burkholder is pastor on the leadership team.

FIELD NOTES

Earl M. Sensenig was chosen by lot and ordained minister for the Martindale congregation, July 11. Luke L. Horst preached the sermon and J. Paul Graybill was in charge of the ordination. His address is: R. 2, Ephrata, Pa. 17522. Phone: 717 859-2103.

Dean Slagel was installed as pastor of the North Goshen Mennonite Church, Goshen, Ind., July 12. T. H. Brenneman was in charge of the service and J. C. Wenger preached the installation sermon.

Alvin R. Beachy was installed as pastor of the North Leo (Ind.) Mennonite Church, July 5. Paul M. Miller was in charge of the service.

Mennonite Central Committee’s Summer Service program was again initiated in June with 74 college-age participants. These young people are assigned to 12 different project locations, several of which are new programs this year.

MCC programs in Jordan continue to operate following the evacuation from Jordan of all MCC's North American personnel by the 13th of June. MCC director for Jordan, Virgil Claassen, left affairs in the hands of Nasri Zanani, a member of the MCC staff in Amman. Zanani reports that "the sewing centers, kindergartens, needlework, and offices are able to carry on in spite of the absence of expatriate colleagues."

The Southern Regional Education Board has informed Eastern Mennonite College that it is one of 20 colleges in the South and the only one in Virginia to receive an extension grant from the National Science Foundation to fund a computer sciences project.

The NSF grant of $50,500 will provide a continuation of an experiment on ways of supplying computer facilities to small colleges for instructional uses through December of 1971.

Clayton C. Shenk of R. 5, Harrisonburg, will succeed Daniel H. Bender as director of student aid at Eastern Mennonite College. He will make EMC's applications for aid from various resources, and then oversee the distribution of aid to students as grants, loans, and work programs.

New members by baptism: eight at North Leo, Leo, Ind.; four at Barrville, Reedsville, Pa.

Special meetings: J. C. Wenger, Goshen, Ind., at Walnut Creek, Ohio, Aug. 5-9.

Change of address: Herman E. Ropp from Wellman, Iowa, to 1530 N. College Ave., Harrisonburg, Va., 22801. Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Richard, Heiwadori 9 chome, Kita 88-3, Shiroishi-cho, Sapporo, Hokkaido, Japan. Roy Bucher from Metamora, Ill., to 590 N. Broad St., Doylestown, Pa. 18901.

The Latin America Youth Team reports on a service held on July 5 in the Glenn Musselman home in Bundia, Sao Paulo State, Brazil. Sixty persons attended, most of whom were students who do not usually attend church. The response was warm with two hours of informal interaction following the program. Latins find it difficult to understand why some Protestants are racially prejudiced. The team requests prayer for effective communication in the national languages.

Cablegram received July 13 from Glendon Heatwoles: SAFE ARRIVAL ASUNCION. The Jake Flisher family arrived on July 15 for a one-year furlough in the United States.

Word has been received that Mrs. Lydia Ellen Schertz Mitchell, missionary to India 1905-1918 with the Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, passed away July 9 in California where she had made her home for many years. Her niece who had cared for her is Mrs. Burl Hampton, Box 324, Ceres, Calif. 95307.

Mr. and Mrs. Otis Hoehstetter, Brasilia, Brazil, July 8, write: "Sunday evening we had a communion service at Manoel's home. Forty-seven were packed into the living room and two bedrooms of their home. Twelve adults were present. We are encouraged with the interest among the people in Gama. We have no church aims other than to follow the Holy Spirit's leading. We all know that we may never have a church building, but we hope that this way we will be able to spread the church into more sectors of our life."

Marie Moyer, Jhansi, India, June 3, reports: "Many predict that the final chapter in the history of foreign missions to India may be written in the 70s. Spirit-filled leaders to make wise decisions, trained people in key positions, ample finances to establish and strengthen—these represent top priorities for the churches in India NOW. In Jhansi one top priority is being realized as during the past month Evangelical Fellowship of India was able to purchase for CE-EFI the large property formerly rented. Payment will continue during the next three years. Now CE-EFI has a center from which to serve the Indian churches for decades to come. All of us rejoice at the miracle that made this purchase a possibility and we have faith that installments will be paid each time to complete this payment."

Laurence Horst, Accra, Ghana, July 9, writes: "Our conference sessions July 1-5 are now history. We had a good conference, with a great amount of dialogue and excellent participation. . . . For closing we had a prayer session. The response was tremendous. I wish you could have heard the brethren and the sisters pray! It was in Twi and in Ga but the Lord knows all languages. Sunday morning we had dedication for seven infants and children. Then the sermon. Then we received a church leader. . . . We had a commissioning service for him by reading about the sending of Barnabas and Saul and then I called upon conference leaders to come for the prayer of dedication for service. Following this we received a 20 cedi offering and dismissed the children. This was followed by communion. The number were many so we called them into a semicircle in the front of the church with only half of the congregation coming at a time."

The regenerated
do not go to war,
nor engage in strife.
They are the children of peace who have beaten their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks, and know of no war.
... Since we are to be conformed to the image of Christ,
how can we then fight our enemies with the sword? ... Spears and swords of iron we leave to those who, alas, consider human blood and swine's blood of well-nigh equal value. ...
A Way to Serve

By Roy Yoder

The prime draft age in the United States is 19 and 20. The largest number of persons in VS and other alternative services in the Mennonite Church can be grouped within this age bracket. When Uncle Sam calls—or the Holy Spirit speaks—or whatever forces call a young person to pull up roots and move to another place for several years, the question remains: Where should he go? How does he decide what form his service will take? How committed is he to the church? How prepared is he for this new experience? What kind of person will he be upon his return after two years—if he does return?

Voluntary Service and Civilian Peace Service provide two options for domestic assignments for young adults. VS was born in 1944 when the first volunteers served for a summer in the Bethel community of Chicago. In 1948 the first long-term VS unit began. The draft and alternate service I-W classification was initiated by the United States government in 1951. Today many men who receive I-W credit are serving in church programs, although many others are not. Civilian Peace Service, the "I-W" classification, and Voluntary Service are often confused. Hopefully this discussion will help clarify questions most often raised regarding these programs.

Voluntary Service

Voluntary Service is a program administered by the Mennonite Church. Persons who enter VS commit themselves to a manner of service for an agreed length of time and are assigned according to their interests, skills, and available positions. These assignments are sponsored by the Mennonite Board of Missions in Elkhart in the case of the (Old) Mennonite Church. (Additional agencies are MCC, Eastern Board [Lancaster], General Conference Mennonite, etc., operating similar programs.)

The projects where VS-ers serve are carefully selected by the Voluntary Service staff along with conference officials who plan strategy in the given areas. A number of the projects are initiated at the invitation of a church or a conference desiring to have the witness of their congregation strengthened. Many units are set up to specifically support the local congregation in its witness and service program. One example is Wichita, Kansas, where the VS-ers tackle community service projects as representatives of the Tenth Street Mennonite Church. In all cases the VS-ers are assigned to work toward goals of the project or church, and the VS director along with local leadership is available for counsel, evaluation, etc.

VS is not only a program where one serves, but where in-service learning takes place. Some specific training sessions are made available for VS-ers who are in areas where this is especially needed. This year several sessions of urban orientation were set up for those working in the cities in an attempt to better equip VS-ers for their tasks. One person said: “During this past week a great many things happened to me. I experienced many types of emotions—I felt confusion, gladness, sorrow, and most important, I felt love. I felt a greater love for my black brother than I ever thought possible. After spending a week with my white brothers, I feel a greater love for them also.”

Voluntary Service projects qualify for alternate service. On March 15, 1970, the total number of VS-ers in the Relief and Service program was 333. Of these, 158 men were receiving “I-W credit” for alternate service.

Civilian Peace Service

The term “Civilian Peace Service” is used in the Mennonite Church to designate those Mennonite men who are serving alternate service in an earning I-W position. Civilian Peace Service is essentially a government-sponsored program where the person works out his assignment with the employing institution. This program is administered and sponsored by selective service and the institutions approved by selective service. This point is often misunderstood, and I feel a much healthier attitude toward CPS would result if this were kept clearly in mind. The CPS program is not designed and administered by the Mennonite Church, but was brought into being by selective service in 1951.

The term “I-W” is a selective service classification the same as I-O (available for alternative service) is a classification. The conscientious objector receives his I-O classification when his stand is officially recognized by selective service. When the registrant begins alternate service he is assigned the classification “I-W” as a conscientious objector in service. Thus, persons who are serving in CPS or in VS may both be classified I-W even though they are involved in two different approaches in service.

The Relief and Service Office is involved with a ministry to fellows in Civilian Peace Service. It prepares a listing of recommended opportunities around the country where sponsors or congregations are located and where hopefully the young men can have a good experience. A number of sponsors in specific locations attempt to be available for counsel and help to the fellows as needed. This is one way to maintain some contact with many young persons who move across the country for service assignments.

Some CPS men serve conscientiously and by their lives and service present a clear witness to Christ. In most cases the work performance of the CPS-ers is above average and the employing institutions prefer these men on their staff. Unfortunately a number of fellows do not plan their service with the help of their pastor or service counselor, but deal directly with selective service and the place of employment. As a result, it is difficult to know where they are serving or to keep a record of their activities. Often there is little or no contact with the church during their time of service.

Quite often we receive complaints at Elkhart about fellows who are conducting themselves in unacceptable and unchristian ways, and we are asked what to do about it. It is usually the social conduct and Christian testimony that is called into question. I believe many young people 19 years of age lack sufficient Christian understanding and personal faith in God to withstand the pressures of society all alone. This issue should be taken very seriously by home congregations.

There are examples of CPS-ers who have been active in supporting their church—such as Evanston, Chicago, and others—but there should be more examples. Young persons also come to the VS program often ill-equipped for the task ahead of them, but since they have committed themselves to Christian service and are related to the church in some way, a base exists for discussion and evaluation when problems arise. One of the basic differences between CPS and VS is the VS-ers’ commitments and relationship which allows for interaction and planning together.

New Directions?

There is a broader question: the CPS men are only one part of a much larger group of young adults who move to the city for service, schooling, jobs, etc. What is our response to them? Some CPS-ers have said the church places them on the bottom of the totem pole. Is this how other young adults are viewed as well? How can we be helpful and supportive during this crucial time of life for many youth?

Many persons have urged the Relief and Service Office to drop its ministry to CPS men altogether, and others have said we should increase and broaden this ministry. Perhaps another service possibility needs to be created in addition to VS to include a larger number of persons wishing to serve Christ through church-related opportunities. This is presently being discussed.

I would highly recommend that young people serve in Volunteer Service. The experience is invaluable. "Home churches" will need to seriously consider equipping their members to face pressures wherever they serve. They should especially urge persons of all ages to take their commitment to Christ and to the church seriously at home or when moving to a new location.

Discovering a Forum for Student Dialogue

By John Rempel

"It is very important that what Arena says be said, even if it irks the Mennonite establishment. We can kill Arena and then delude ourselves that these thoughts are also dead. Better that we know and they know." This reaction from a student who predicted the fate of Arena crystallizes the tension so often present between student and church. This problem continues to face us even though Arena itself has ceased publication. Will the Mennonite churches listen to and welcome into their life the anger and imagination of their student generation?

The as yet insoluble problem facing Arena was a strange one. It was most strongly criticized for doing too much of what I thought it did too little of—providing an open forum for issues considered urgent by the readers themselves, who in this case were Mennonite university students. In our three-year experiment with Arena we realized how diverse the concerns of our students were and how the common strands of emotion and theology had been stretched to create a diversity among Mennonites not unlike that of society as a whole.

At our annual Student Services Committee meetings voices called for firm guidance directly from the church or from evangelical campus organizations. Other voices insisted that the traditional concepts of divinity, authority, and morality around which most of Arena’s discussion centered no longer held meaning for them. Both sides told us that Arena bypassed their kind of people. But the churches, on the contrary, were worried that too many sides of the record were being played.

Arena failed to take seriously the entire spectrum of Mennonite students. Yet concurrently it failed to convince the churches of the necessity of doing precisely this. Certainly the most fruitful consequence of Arena’s demise is that it has forced us to look for another way of communicating with a generation which feels forced to rebuild from ashes because its inheritance has crumbled.

I am persuaded with Paul that nothing can separate us from the love of God in Jesus Christ our Lord. That is the most important affirmation anyone, students included, can ever make. The answer isn’t to evangelize away the beauty and brutality of the Mennonite subculture, to give in to every one of their fads, or to demand silent obedience. A new forum to replace Arena will be one step in the direction of prodding students and letting them prod us and each other to reshape from the confusion a Christian lifestyle that can offer hope to the brave—and frightened—new world in which they already live.

John Rempel, Sarasota, Fla., served as editor of Arena during the paper’s three years of publication.

A Double Dip for 45¢

Efficiency is a great thing. I hear that a bee can make better than 10,000 miles on a gallon of honey. That makes my hungry hippo look silly. It thinks fifteen miles to the gallon is an honorable objective.

The bee is an amazing thing. I haven’t figured out how it does it — and without generating a bit of smog! Yet have you ever stopped to think how amazingly efficient your Sunday school class is? It runs on something like 3¢ per person per week. Imagine that! For a whole class of ten adults plus a teacher the thing runs along, mostly smoothly, for 40¢ a week. Who can beat that? Howard Johnson can’t. A few days ago it cost me 45¢ for one double dip cone for my little boy. Your Sunday school class of ten plus a teacher goes for an hour on less than two dippings of marshmallow fudge.

That’s efficiency!

The pupils in your youth class do just as well. For the price of one $4.98 hard rock record a sixteen-year-old could buy his youth lessons for better than three years. That’s at the cut rate 3¢ a week your own Mennonite Publishing House has been charging for the stuff.

Maybe that’s all its worth? Half of one postage stamp! As soon as the Postal Department gets what it says it needs you cut the stamp in thirds! Is it worth more? Without a taint of bias I reply with a vigorous “yes.” I should know because I write some of it myself and my friends write. Surely there are no vested interests in having friends who can write.

But when you wear down a half dozen versions of the New Testament, use up pads of paper, and throw away several dried-up ball-point pens you just mustn’t think about the teenager with hair like John the Baptist’s, who gets the whole quarterly for 39¢ yet hardly spends more time on the three-cent lesson than he does on L’il Abner. But not thinking about the person for whom you are writing is hard. It is like the fellow selling medicine guaranteed to cure baldness. It would always work, he said, with one minor exception. You must never, ever, think of a pink elephant.

It was hard for people to remember the exception without thinking of a pink elephant.

Really now we are not making a case for raising the price of your materials. We are simply saying that it is possible even for a small denomination like ours to come up with quality products for congregations at reasonable prices! It is possible because of the fine cooperation that has existed and continues to exist between your Publishing House and your Mennonite General Conference committee — the Mennonite Commission for Christian Education.

“Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world” (Jn. 1:29).

They could not mistake or miss the meaning of John the Baptist’s words. Every day before their eyes a spotless lamb was sacrificed in the temple as a substitution for sin. This spotless lamb was a prophetic symbol of the coming Christ who, as the Scripture foretold, was to suffer and be offered as a sacrifice to obtain eternal redemption.

So John, seeing Jesus coming, points his finger to Him and pleads with the people to turn to the Savior — the Lamb of God.

Responses to John’s statement differed. Some looked on with indifference. What he said meant little to unbelieving hearts. Some were filled with hate. What he said meant blasphemy to rebellious hearts. Some responded with faith. What he said brought healing to contrite and believing hearts. And these responses are the same today.

How great is that peace which, in repentance and receiving, finds the freedom from sin and guilt which Christ brings. How great is that joy which, in love and loyalty, enters the Lamb’s war. For it is the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world who now leads those who come in their lostness and find forgiveness and who in their new freedom surrender fully to Him. It is the Lamb slain, the Savior from sin, who is in resurrection the Lamb leading all who follow in final triumph.

Spare Us

Holy Spirit:
Spare us from Our folly.

Spur us on
In Thy wise way
Which wills that we Should walk with Thee
As Thou hast chosen —
Thy way be ours.

Missed Both Ways

A stress on activism, even in lines of peace and justice, can do the same thing which a stress on outward forms did a generation or two ago — blind us to the true essence of the gospel.

Most of us remember the days when the emphasis was that one had to appear a certain way in order to be Christian. While there is a real and proper emphasis of non-conformity in the Scripture, the form sometimes took pre-eminence over the gospel so that the good news was not heard or understood. Attire, not Christ, received most attention, even as it also does in the life of one who does not know Christ, a worldling.

Now a different danger dogs our steps and the devil may accomplish his same purpose in another direction. Although peace and justice are essentials of the Christian faith and concern, a mere activism in these is not enough. We may be all wrapped up in such concerns and never really have an understanding of the gospel or share Christ with others.

A non-Christian person can be caught up in noble causes. Such causes speak of what we do or what we ought not do. But the gospel begins with what God has done. And it seems that where we are weakest is in declaring what God has done in Christ.

So in all our words and work we must keep the good news in Christ central. The devil will drive us to do many things as long as we are at the center instead of Christ. He will get us to work hard and long in all kinds of excellent projects so long as we get the credit instead of Christ. He will even encourage us to do many things to make living conditions better and more humane so long as we do not become concerned about leading persons to Christ.

Satan will let us say great things about the sin of war as long as we do not tell people how to end the strife in their own hearts through salvation in Christ. He will let us speak great speeches on peace so long as we leave out the fact that no one can know real peace until Christ is crowned the Prince of Peace in a personal commitment. Whether these good things which we do are of Christ or not depends on whether Christ or something else is central.

So whether in the pietistic formalism of a former generation or the activistic ferment of a present generation we will miss the essence of the gospel if we allow what we do to become more predominant than what Christ has done; if we allow our actions and words to stop short of leading people to the living Savior and Lord. — D.

Promoting Stars and Jesus

Somewhere along the line we have developed a strange approach in our attempt to present Jesus to the world and even to the church. In order to make Jesus appealing it seems necessary to present some beauty queen or movie star, some outstanding singer or politician, or some famous baseball or football star to illustrate how attractive Jesus must be. The implication is that if such persons believe in Christ then certainly ordinary persons like the rest of us should. If such follow Christ then certainly He must be worthwhile. So we try to sell Jesus like we try to sell soap, shaving cream, and cigarettes. Beautiful and famous people make use of Him. Why shouldn’t you and I?

Since when does Jesus need such to make Him attractive? Since when does He place Himself in a popularity contest?

Our problem is elsewhere. We are still idol worshipers.

We fall into such a trap when we fail to understand our job of lifting up Christ. We fail because our eyes are more on men than Christ. We fail because we do not really understand the power of His death and resurrection and the majesty of His person. We fail because we do not love His Word enough or follow as His true disciples.

No person can make Jesus Christ greater than what He is. It is the Holy Spirit’s work to glorify Him and present Him as He really is. And when we walk in the Spirit Christ grows increasingly great and wonderful. The more we walk the death and resurrection life the more we know His power and the better we understand His person. And it is only as Christ is presented that the Holy Spirit can bless and save.

Jesus is still saying, “And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.” — D.
Planning a Church Budget

By J. J. Hostetler, Stewardship Secretary

Each year every congregation must deal with reorganization and its financial program. People come and go, children grow up to be adults, family life changes, conditions in the community change. New teachers and workers need to be recruited to replace those moving away, retiring, or whose life pattern has changed. Finances also change each year. Economics are never stable. Buildings deteriorate, need repairs, and perhaps reconditioning. Prices of materials change, inflation affects costs. Nothing stays the same.

The church budget must be considered annually due to all these changes. How should it be approached? Frequently a committee reviews the finances and presents a minimum budget to the congregation for adoption. In a brotherhood church is this the proper approach? Should a congregation only adopt a minimum budget, or is there place for an advance, or even a venture budget? Are we as Christians giving our full potential at 5.47 percent? Should we not be challenged to raise that to 10 percent? What does the Bible teach along these lines? Might some of our problems in minimum giving be due to lack of proper money management? Perhaps many of us have never given much thought nor study to these questions.

What are the basic essentials to a congregation's budget and finance program? First, every congregation ought to have some written out goals expressing their purpose as a family of God. Certainly your congregation expects to achieve some spiritual and evangelistic progress during the next year or more. Perhaps some of you have such goals in mind, but has the congregation considered, approved, and adopted them, so that every member understands what you are working for?

Second, certain steps seem to be essential for budget building and financing. Some order is always necessary to go from where you are to where you want to be. Without planning very little is accomplished. This program is not new. It has been used by many congregations. Let us list these steps.

One. A committee, regular or special, should review past financial activities and prepare a preliminary budget. At least list all the items that will need to be considered, plus possible items that might be included. It should also include receipts of past performance. This will serve as a base or starting point.

Two. Now each department of the church should review their respective activities and determine the minimum amount they need for operation. They should also indicate what they feel could be used effectively if they had more resources. These include the care of building and facilities, operation of the church services, the areas of Christian education (SS, SBS, Sunday evening, children's classes and clubs, youth, adults, etc.), music, fellowship, mutual aid, benevolences, missions, schools, conference work, etc. The churchwide “askings” are listed in the Mennonite Yearbook.

Three. Next the budget committee should compile all these items into three possible budgets: (a) actual or minimum, just what is needed to get by with; (b) advance, what each department or benevolence could do if they had more money, such as 10 percent additional; and (c) venture, what would be done if the congregation approached the whole program with faith giving. “Faith giving” is to agree with God the amount you feel He wants you to give and then trust Him to provide it to you for giving. He may ask you to sacrifice some things to reach this goal, but His blessings are assured.

Four. Now the budget committee is ready to present the three proposed budgets to the congregation. They should be fully explained, time given for questions, and thoroughly discussed. Perhaps the congregation may divide into small discussion groups, or take a week for consideration. They should not be hurried. The congregation may suggest changes or additions. Then they should give general approval, not final.

Five. The congregation needs to be prepared to finally and fully adopt the budget and to make their commitment to it. Too many congregations fail on this important step. Let us briefly outline the steps in “congregational preparation”:

a. Talks, sermons, tracts, and pamphlets concerning Bible teachings on stewardship should be shared. Many members lack information on these lines.

b. Challenges and stimulation of faith through talks, sermons, tracts, and pamphlets are needed to motivate members in commitment and giving.

c. Families need help in money management and planned giving. For this they should have some workbooks and group discussions, either at the church or in the home.

d. The congregation also needs to be prepared for making commitments. These are agreements with God and expressed by intentions in giving. Printed helps are available for this. Many congregations send visiting teams to homes of members to present the program and discuss the issues prior to the commitment. The commitment should be received in a Sunday morning service.

e. Some follow-up is necessary. Some members are not at home during these days, others were unable to participate for various reasons. Through mail, telephone, or personal contact.
all members should be included.

Six. The final step is when the budget committee compiles the commitments and records of giving by any who have failed or chosen not to make a commitment. Now they report to the congregation. In view of all the factors the church is now ready to adopt and approve the final budget.

From this point on proper records need to be kept and the congregation encouraged in their continued response. The church deserves to know what progress they are making from month to month. Regular reporting is helpful and encouraging. Some members may desire to change their commitment because of new circumstances or blessings. Some may find it necessary to reduce theirs. Others who had made no commitment may want to participate in a regular giving plan.

To follow through on the above procedure requires at least four to eight weeks of work. Most congregations should begin by August 1 if they want to be prepared by October 1 for their new year. Others will need to begin by November 1 to be ready by January 1. Most congregations also need guidance and informational material to carry through such a program. Your General Conference Stewardship Office is prepared to supply these materials and aids. For an increased response to God’s love and grace this program will bring you rich rewards.

Editor’s note: You may want to clip and file this for reference in your budget planning.

Missions Today

A Product of the Establishment

By Jim Bishop

After shaking hands with the bearded acquaintance I encountered while visiting my alma mater recently, he suddenly fired point-blank: “I hear you’re working for the establishment, Bishop!” The statement rankled me like I had just taken a dose of ipecac. His tone of voice was not meant to be congratulatory. The establishment in this case happened to support the status quo, the church agency.

Time did not allow for argumentation. Had I challenged the statement, I wonder now what good would have been accomplished. I’ve concluded that those people who fuss and fume the most concerning what “Elkhart” or “Akron” or “Scottsdale,” et al, are doing are the same ones who possess the least knowledge of the inner workings of these organizations.

Perhaps the difficulty today surrounds those of the Mennonite constituency who cannot accept church agency personnel who often step into the public limelight. Another contingent, then, claims that certain areas of work these men and women engage in do not merit Christian involvement. The integrity and Christian experience of certain church officials is often challenged. And much of the criticism is leveled because of lack of information, malicious gossip, and geographic distance between all parties involved. “Where the Faction Is” might well become the official slogan of the Mennonite Church.

I entered the church coliseum in June 1967 of my own volition. Holding a position in the publicity department at Mennonite Board of Missions and editing a church periodical (Agape) has resulted in my being nailed to the old rugged drawing board on numerous occasions. My original commitment to the Board was to last two years, yet three years later I continue in this capacity. Here’s why.

At Mennonite Board of Missions I did not have to sell my soul to the executive secretary upon arrival. I wasn’t even asked to call him or any other administrative official “Mr.” Addressing workers on a first-name basis with congeniality and openness is the norm here. Yet a definite respect and mutual admiration is very evident among fellow workers and is often publicly expressed.

I was not required to put on a tie or take one off. I did not undergo several weeks of bureaucratic brainwashing to emerge a mechanical servant. There are well-defined lines of administration, but little semblance of a hierarchy. There are no tyrannical masters, for each person endeavors to be a servant of Christ. God is allowing great things to happen through more than 2,000 MBMC-related personnel at home and abroad. I know; I write about some of them every week.

Granted, all is not perfect. I often question the continuous stream of committee meetings, frequent administrative trips, and the hesitancy to rapidly accept new forms of mission outreach and changes in communication. Yet valid reasons for the Board’s philosophy of operation often slowly come into focus that my shortsightedness and inexperience are prone to overlook.

The reader may rest assured that no one commissioned me to write this particular column. He may be further assured that I wouldn’t stick around at all if I didn’t believe in the mission program being carried out in the name of Christ and the Mennonite Church. At all, 2000+ Mission Board workers must be doing something right!

A Modern Creed

“I believe in my income and standard of living, maker of pleasure on earth; and in things-1-own and want-to-get, which are conceived by desire for possessions, born of a regular paycheck, suffered under monthly payments, glorified, cherished, and admired. They descend in value, but on a future day I’ll acquire more, ascending my status ‘til I sit in quite comfortable retirement, from whence I shall come to enjoy all without end. I believe in my home, automobile, vacation with pay, insurance for life, the satisfaction of my wants and a bank account ever increasing.” — B. Gunnerson in The Pulpit.
"As I See It"

Readers are urged to submit material on any issue for this column. Maximum of 400 words.

One of the popular concepts of our world today, long overdue among many people, is the idea of the sacredness of personhood. Everywhere we hear the cry, "We will no longer put up with being second-class citizens. We want to be real persons."

No one can blame anyone for wanting to be a genuine, first-class person in his own right. But I keep hearing another cry which I feel is self-defeating, the need to drop all identification tags from one's person. I hear a student say, "This year I don't want to be considered a student. I want to be thought of as a person." I hear a feminist say, "Forget I am a woman. I want to be a person." I hear a Mennonite shout, "Away with the Mennonite bit. I am a Christian." I hear a black friend, who considers black beautiful, nevertheless asking to be thought of without the tag.

I have been brought up short by my own children, who reacted when I mentioned that my friend was a member of a particular race or was crippled. They would not have reacted if I had described an elderly friend as an older person, or someone from the Netherlands as an international student. But mentioning certain tags seems to hint of prejudice.

Personhood is very good, but each of us is a certain kind of person, with a certain heritage, a certain personality, a certain nationality, a certain set of life circumstances. I am a woman-person, a mother-person, a Mennonite-person, a married-person, a handicapped-person, and, woe unto me, I am a white, middle-class, Anglo-Saxon American (please, it isn't my fault — I was born that way).

I think each of us, as persons, should stop selling ourselves short and begin appreciating what we are and wearing our tags with casual self-acceptance. You can take Charlie out of the country, but you can't take the country out of Charlie. But why should you? What's so bad about being from the country? What's so terrible about being a Mennonite Christian? Friends of ours who recently moved away from the Mennonite community write how much more they appreciate their background than when they were with their own kind.

What's so bad about being a woman? I think I rather like it!

Paul once gave his pedigree in great detail when he wrote (Philippians 3:5): "Circumcised on the eighth day, of the people of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, a Hebrew born of Hebrews; as to the law a Pharisee. . . . " He went on, however, to say that all of this was not really important, for he counted everything as loss in comparison with the privilege of knowing Christ as Lord. But while he didn't glory in his Jewishness, neither did he negate it. It was part of his personhood, and sometimes he used it for the furtherance of the gospel.

When I truly accept you, Brother, I will accept, and be enriched by, all facets of your personality, your background, your appearance, your race, your gender, and even your idiosyncrasies. They are part of you and make you the person you are. And I will like having you for a neighbor! I hope you will accept me in the same way. — Helen Good Brenneman.

Your Driving Is Revealing

Remember the old Jekyll-and-Hyde theory — that getting behind the wheel of a car can turn a polite, even-tempered, and fair-minded person into a selfish aggressive bully? This theory is no longer held today. The consensus of most psychologists, traffic safety experts, and others who have had occasion to observe a great number of drivers is: a person drives as he lives.

If someone always acts like "a heel at the wheel" it is pretty safe to say that he is also a heel in all his other dealings. But more people who manage to mask their unattractive personality traits most of the time may give their aggressive instincts free rein when they get on the road. The question is: Why? It is held that such a person knows that inside his car he's pretty anonymous; nobody on the busy parkway knows him or his name. Such a person suffers from a strange mental quirk that makes him see driving as something divorced from all other phases of living — something to which the ethics governing other forms of behavior don't apply. And so the guy who is always polite (or overly polite) and follows all the correct procedures at the office doesn't really change when he beats someone out of a merging lane, when he blocks the way for someone who's trying to get in the rush-hour traffic. When he sets himself up as king of the road and judges all the "stupid" drivers around him, he has really dropped his mask and revealed his true self.

But even those of us who drive courteously most of the time are afflicted with this kind of split behavior once in a while. Occasionally we try to get by with something in traffic which we wouldn't think of taking the slightest freedom with in business or social ethics. Yet fair play on the parkway, a spirit of nonresistance, and going the second mile — in short, true Christian behavior — is even more important than fair play at work or at home. It may mean the difference between life and death!

An optimist is a man who thinks the dry cleaners are shrinking the waistline of his trousers.

A tourist is a man who travels to see things that are different and then complains that they aren't the same.

"Once again we wish to express our gratitude for the help Mennonite Aid has been in easing our finances during my sickness." Furulund, Sweden

"I had just been questioning myself whether you would get tired of paying all my hospital and doctor bills, and here comes a letter. To find a $100 check for extra payment, made me feel grateful for all that you have helped me. Thanks again." Meade, Kan.

"We thank God for those who continue to support the program even though they submit no claims. We know it is because of these our claims can be handled so well. Thank you again for everything you are doing." Tampa, Fla.

"I don't know how to thank all of the people who are working out and keeping up to date the sharing ministry in our church, but I do appreciate it! I will always pay my premiums with additional eagerness now that I've needed to be a recipient." El Dorado, Ark.

"We sometimes are tempted to cancel our policy when the assessments are increased but then we must remember our "brothers" who cannot meet the cost of medical expenses if it were not for our company." Hydro, Oklahoma

"Your personal letter revealed a new dimension of MMA to me. Yes, we have had a rather heavy amount of hospital experience, but I never dreamed of receiving additional aid from the Catastrophe Fund. In my opinion, your "second mile" help certainly placed MMA in a different category from being "just another insurance company." We were grateful for the past assistance which you provided. Now to receive this additional check and to have you say it is a 'symbol of the care and concern which your brethren have for you' does a lot to strengthen my belief in our sharing brotherhood." New Holland, Pa.

"My letter is an inadequate expression of the appreciation we feel for the way Mennonite Mutual Aid has helped us in this rather difficult time. Thanks so much." Iowa City, Iowa
"God is not dead, although some old ways of worshiping Him and believing in Him are dead," the Inter-Confessional Conference on Religion in the U.S. was told.

Therefore, according to Dr. Tom Driver, the hippie movement can be regarded as "the first wave of a new mysticism" which should be given serious consideration by the churches.

The conference at which Dr. Driver spoke was sponsored by the Graymoor Ecumenical Institute operated by the Atone- ment Fathers. Some 200 clergymen attended the two-day meeting.

Dr. Driver, a professor of theology and literature at Union Theological Seminary in New York City, claimed that the age of individualism is passing and that "we are moving, from the belief in God as the ultimate individual to the belief in wholeness with one another and with God."

"The hippie movement," he continued, "was the first wave of a new mysticism that has exalted love over warfare, unity over diversity, belonging over isolation. And whereas the church might talk about fellowship, it was the underground that started putting people together."

The clergyman said that "a whole new bearing and style of concern has been appearing in church life... and not just a free-floating sacramental fellowship in someone's living room but the historic church of bishops and buildings and consistories and seminaries."

The church, he said, "is not someone's religious club, it is literally something let down by God out of heaven. It has a power shared by no other institution."

The validity of faith healing and speaking in tongues (glossolalia) is recognized, along with the reality of the devil in some form, in a study document received by the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church.

The report, on which endorsement was not asked, was developed by a Special Committee on the Work of the Holy Spirit.

Speaking in tongues was said to have a biblical basis as a sign of persons having been "baptized by the Holy Spirit."

In recent years, glossolalia has caused a few controversies in the United Presbyterian Church. Pro and con attitudes have on a few occasions split congregations and resulted in legal action.

The report said that despite attempts to "demythologize" Satan, Christians may not discount "the possibility that Jesus saw a dark reality which we often miss in our devotion to rationality, important as reason clearly is for any mature understanding of the Christian faith."

In reference to the healing acts of Jesus, the document continued: "Might it not be true that Jesus saw illness as clearly and accurately as we see it, both emotional and physical, but that He saw something else in some instances, a shadow behind the divisiveness, an adversary, an Anti-Christ?..."

Adolescents and the aging are most prone to depression, but college-age people are more suicide-prone than any other segment of the population, a consulting psychiatrist at Marquette University said.

Dr. Don H. Martin, who works with students at the university counseling service, described depression as an emotional condition characterized by sadness and loss of interest which can be mild or so severe it can result in suicide.

A college student plagued by depression, he said, is generally physically and emotionally unhappy and "feels a kind of pervasive anxiety unrelated to any specific cause he can identify."

In an interview published in the Herald Citizen, newsweekly of the Milwaukee Catholic archdiocese, Dr. Martin said of the depressed college student:

"Usually he is unhappy with himself, his relations with others and his environment."

Noting that there are more depressed adolescents than is apparent, he observed that they "often resort to drugs or alcohol in an effort to improve the situation." He said this delays psychiatric assistance at best, or causes a crisis at worst.

President Nixon was accused of offending millions of Americans by severing the principle of separation of church and state through the appointment of a "quasi ambassador" to the Vatican.

"If the World Council of Churches sets up a 22-acre sovereignty in Bossey, Switzerland, will the President make a similar appointment?" asked Dr. Harold Lind- sell, editor of Christianity Today, in a statement in Washington.

"The principle of separation of church and state has served our country well," said Dr. Lindsell, "and we fail to see that principle upheld in President Nixon's appointment of Henry Cabot Lodge as personal representative to the Vatican."

The editor of the evangelical fortnightly observed that "there is nothing Mr. Lodge can do in an official capacity that could not have been done in an unofficial way. This decision grants to the papal see a quasi ambassador."

The primary test for conscientious objectors to military service is how deeply their views are held, according to guidelines laid down by Curtis W. Tarr, director of selective service.

Their views need not be comprehensible to draft board members, Dr. Tarr said in an official memorandum to local boards.

"The primary test... is the test of sincerity," he said. "The board should be convinced by the information presented to it that the registrant's personal history reveals views and actions strong enough to demonstrate that expediency is not the basis of his claim."

The new guidelines were issued in the wake of a recent Supreme Court decision that claims to conscientious objector status do not have to be based on traditional religious beliefs.

At a press conference following that ruling, Dr. Tarr said the conscientious objector must have "consulted some system of belief," considered the thoughts and writings of "wise men," and undergone "some kind of rigorous training."
Conflicting convictions within the brotherhood, adequate representation of women in church programs, achieving a balance of evangelism and social action—resolutions on these and other issues confronting the Mennonite Church were adopted during the closing days of Mission 70.

Meeting on the Christopher Dock campus near Lansdale, Pa., on July 6 and 7, Mission Board members representing the various conference districts considered presentations submitted by the 11-member Issues and Concerns Committee that was appointed during the 64th annual convention.

According to Chairman Laban Peachey, this committee became a mission '70 "standing board," responsible to listen and draw material from speakers and visitors alike in an attempt to discern what the Spirit of the Lord was saying to the Mennonite Church through the Strategy Groups, WMSA and mass public sessions, the July 2 Board business meeting, and the Sunday Report Teams in 42 Franconia Mennonite congregations.

From a preliminary list of 11 issues and concerns suggested by the committee, board members selected nine for eventual action following several sessions of discussion and revision.

For Home Missions, an area of major concern during the week of Mission '70, it was "moved and carried that since the proposal to examine program priorities for Home Missions is urgent and valid, this concern be referred to the Executive Committee and appropriate administrators for careful study in consultation with the Minority Ministries Council and representatives of urban churches." It was further requested "that a report be made to Mission '71, including progress in this review and recommendation for reordering of priorities and new program development."

As a guide for establishing Home Missions priorities in line with program evaluation and priorities within the total Board program, the Issues and Concerns Committee called for a doubling of the Home Missions budget for the 1971-72 fiscal year.

In addition, the Executive Secretary was encouraged to restructure Home Ministries to provide greater strength and coordination. Additional resources must also become available, the committee said, for the training and orientation of minority personnel and urban workers.

Lois G. Clemens, a member of the Issues and Concerns Committee, presented the following statements to Board members, which were adopted:

"We resolve to return to our world of work and responsibility with the determination to listen carefully and with love to our brothers."

"We resolve to learn by experience that the Holy Spirit creates understanding when we confront each other with love at the point of our conflicting convictions.

"We call the congregations and church agencies to include in their ministry more emphasis, teaching, and clarity on the work of the Holy Spirit and how He works in the church.

"We call on the Mission Board executive with others of our churchwide agencies and our district conferences and local congregations in a united effort to arrange broader contexts for brothers to discuss conflicting convictions in a setting where reconciliation can occur."

A resolution adopted on the role of women in the church's program calls for increased clarity in the proposed church reorganization to allow for the same kind of freedom that women presently experience in WMSA. It is also important, the statement says, that women be elected to membership in the Mennonite Board of Missions and its various administrative committees.

As a start, Mrs. Norman High of Kitchener, Ont., was appointed the first female member at large of the Board.

"How is Christianity tied to our culture?" the Issues and Concerns Committee asked.

A resolution in response to this question calls on Mennonites everywhere "to speak of the good in our lands without confusing faith and patriotism" and "to speak of the evil in our lands without confusing faith and revolutionary zeal with destructive goals."

Earl Bennett, executive secretary, presented a concern for young adults who move into the city after college, VS, CPS, or other reasons, and eventually lose relationship with the church. The committee considered this problem and presented a resolution calling on congregations to develop closer family and church relations with young people before they leave for service, work, or study, and to maintain closer contact during their absence. The Mennonite Church through boards, conferences, and congregations also carries responsibility to provide resources and personal contact.

A significant statement adopted on evangelism and social action reads as follows:

"The Mennonite Church affirms commitment to the life-style of Jesus, who gave Himself to save man and meet his human needs.

"We call for a deep commitment to preach and live the gospel. We call for vigorous involvement in winning people to Jesus as Savior and serving their other needs in the Spirit of the Lord.

"We call for an awareness that the Spirit assumes people for differing tasks. Some are more gifted in evangelizing; others in speaking to and meeting social needs. We ought to affirm, not criticize, persons with differing gifts.

"We recognize the equal dangers of spiritualizing or humanizing the gospel.

"We call Mennonites to humbly and articulately invite those who polarize evangelism and social action to look again to Jesus as the One who unites both dimensions of Christian witness and action."

Discussions at Mission '70 indicated widespread concern among Mennonites regarding the relative validity of the various ways young men relate to the Selective Service System and the pros and cons involved in paying taxes used for military purposes.

It was moved and carried to urge the Peace and Social Concerns Committee to direct more study on the congregational and family levels which can lead people to a clearer and more forthright understanding, conviction, and action on matters relating to peace, the draft, and taxes used for military purposes.

Another adopted resolution speaks to the need for clarifying and strengthening relationships through mutual counsel and fraternal exchange among Mennonite churches in the U.S., Canada, and overseas. It was also moved and carried to increase efforts and resources to develop training programs for lay leaders and to encourage trained personnel to respond to ongoing pastoral and leadership needs.

A complete verbatim listing of resolutions adopted during the July 6, 7 Board business session will be released soon. — Jim Bishop

North American Mennonites Convene in Bible Congress

The Gospel of John was the focus of attention at the first All-Mennonite North American Bible Congress which convened at the Portage Avenue Mennonite Brethren Church in Winnipeg, Man., July 16-19. "All of us came with certain interpretations of the Gospel of John in mind," observed Arthur Climenhaga of Upland, Calif. "And yet no matter what prejudicial interpretations we had in mind, it is evident that we came with a deep desire to hear what the Spirit had to say—and to do this by hearing each other."

Participating in the congress were 264 delegates representing the following groups of the Mennonite family: Mennonite Church, 41; General Conference Mennonite Church, 107; Mennonite Brethren Church, 39; Brethren in Christ Church, 25; Evangelical Mennonite Church, 28; Evangelical Mennonite Mission Conference, 8; Evangelical Mennonite Brethren, 10; and others (including the Church of God in Christ, Mennonites), 6.

Delegates were provided with input on the Gospel of John by David Schroeder, of the Canadian Mennonite Bible College, Winnipeg, and by J. C. Wenger of the Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries, Goshen, Ind. Major blocks of time were provided for small-group consideration of selected passages from John. Plenary sessions allowed the entire delegate body to share the best thinking of the discussion groups.

"It was evident," one observer noted, "that there was widespread feeling that we are obligated to communicate our faith in Christ to others, but that there is need to determine modes and mood in doing so."

The congress also sensed a need for a better understanding among us of the work of the Holy Spirit in the world today, His presence in the life of the believer, and the necessity for every Christian to live the Spirit-filled life.

The rich fellowship enjoyed during the congress was enhanced by the intermingling of persons from a wide variety of backgrounds—church leaders and lay persons, men and women, youth and older folks, rural and urban dwellers, Americans and Canadians, rich and poor, educated and less educated. One third of the delegates were women and 28 percent were youth between the ages of 16-25.

Two insights emerged from youth members: (1) how meaningful it would be if youth could express their opinions in as free an interchange in their local congregations as they did at the congress and (2) the generation gap among Mennonites seems not to be so much between young and old as between spiritual and nonspiritual.

Winnipeg provided an interesting setting for the congress. Earlier the same week, as part of the centennial celebration of the province of Manitoba, the city had hosted Queen Elizabeth, the Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Charles, and Princess Anne.

With a population of more than 525,000, Winnipeg contains more Mennonite citizens than any other city in the world. A large proportion of the 60,000 Mennonites of Manitoba live in Winnipeg and are members of the city’s 26 Mennonite churches.

The use of the German language is common among many of Manitoba’s Mennonites. One church, with an attendance of about 700, provides 10 minutes in English each Sunday morning. The balance of the service (including their church bulletin) is in German.

Three mass meetings, open to the public and Mennonites of the greater Winnipeg area, were held in the Winnipeg Civic Auditorium. Featured speakers were Leonard Wiebe, Fort Wayne, Ind., president of the Central District Conference of the General Conference Mennonites and pastor of the Maplewood Mennonite Church at Fort Wayne, and Frank C. Peters, Kitchener, Ont., president of Waterloo Lutheran University and pastor of the Mennonite Brethren Church at Kitchener.

The concluding session of the congress was a mass meeting held on Sunday afternoon observing the fiftieth anniversary of Mennonites cooperating through Mennonite Central Committee. Peter J. Dyck, Akron, Pa., MCC Director for Europe and North Africa, spoke on "Mennonites Serving Together in the Seventies."

Howard J. Zehr, Scottdale, Pa., provided overall leadership as program coordinator of the congress and chairman of the planning committee. Other members of the committee were Dennis Becker, secretary (Mennonite Brethren); Jake I. Pauls (General Conference Mennonite); Alvin C. Burkholder (Brethren in Christ); Ernie Isaac (local pastor), and Reuben Short (Evangelical Mennonite Church).

Zehr commented that "no decisions were forced upon the congress. We were not there to implement programs. We were together to share meaningfully in an encounter with the Scriptures. There appeared to be a growing appreciation for each other as persons and as groups."

Participants in this unique congress agreed that the experience was a new milestone in inter-Mennonite fellowship and understanding. It is hoped that similar experiences can be provided in the future for bringing increasing numbers of Mennonites from all groups together around the Word of God and our common heritage.—Paul M. Schrock.

Zook Employed Forty-Five Years

Ellrose Zook, editor of books and miscellaneous curriculum, marked his forty-fifth anniversary of employment with the Mennonite Publishing House on January 13, 1970. He is probably the longest term, current, full-time employee in a church institution.

At the age of seventeen he moved from Allensville, Pa., to Scottdale to work in the pressroom. The ensuing forty-five years have brought him experience in almost every phase of publishing and printing, including a BA from Goshen College and an MA in journalism from Syracuse University. After several years on the presses he transferred to the composition department and spent four years as a linotype operator and makeup man. He spent the following three years as an assistant editor, helping people like J. A. Ressler and Aunt Lima with Words of Cheer, Story Friends (then Beams of Light) and adult quarterly. He also assisted John L. Horst with Mennonite Yearbook and with general books, Daniel Kauffman with Gospel Herald, and C. F. Yake with Youth’s Christian Companion and intermediate quarterly.

His first editorship came in 1936 with appointment as editor of Words of Cheer. He continued as editor of this paper until 1949. He has served as editor of Mennonite Yearbook since 1943. From 1943-1955 he also edited Family Almanac. He twice previously served as book editor. In February 1953 he was appointed Executive Editor of the Publishing House. In this position he carried responsibility for oversight and general editorial planning and supervision of editors. He served as the production coordinator for Faith and Life Press, Newton, Kan., and for the Mennonite Publishing House in the printing of the new Mennonite Hymnal. In 1969 he asked to be released from administrative duties so he could give full time as an editor.

As book editor he will be responsible for the editing and preparation for printing of the 15 to 20 books and pamphlets published each year by the House. The miscellaneous curriculum editing assignment includes such materials as missionary education, leadership training, and congregational life courses and club materials.

Convention 70 Preview

!Lawrence Hart and Manuela Garcia

Four Contemporary Witnesses will speak in the morning assemblies at Convention 70. They will tell how God has been working to bring His people into being in their work through their lives.

Lawrence Hart, a minister from Clinton, Okla., is a Cherokee Indian who is currently working at rehabilitation of alcoholics among his people.

Manuela Garcia from south Texas is active with Mexican American youth while teaching with the Teacher Corps.

Bob Lavelle is a real-estate agent who is working for racial reconciliation in a low-income area of Pittsburgh.

Ken Hurst, a college student, has been an outspoken witness to the peace position particularly on a recent trip to Tokyo as a National Science Fair winner.

Committed to God and to people they will add a topical dimension to the study of biblical witnesses who acted for God in times of crisis.

Work Campers Do TV Research

A unique work camp experience began June 6 for eight young people from Kansas, South Dakota, and Ohio. Their job: to conduct a research project with the 1970 Family Life TV Spots produced jointly by Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., of the Mennonite Church; Faith and Life Communications of the General Conference Mennonite Church; and the Mennonite Brethren Church.

The research, to be conducted in Denver, Colo.; Lincoln, Neb.; Albuquerque, N.M.; and Oklahoma City, Okla., is intended to give some indication of the effectiveness of the Mennonite TV Spots.

Mennonite Advertising Agency in Harrisonburg, Va., is distributor of the spots. Director David Thompson will travel with the group compiling information from the survey. He expects this to be a valuable experience for the participants in becoming familiar with the Voluntary Service program, as food and lodging and the necessary telephones will be provided by local VS units and Mennonite pastors during the three-week project.

The young people were recruited by George Lehman of the General Conference Voluntary Service office in Newton, Kan. Team members are Christine Schrag, group leader; Cindy Andres, Warren Deckert, Teresa Graber, Marlene Kramer, Mary Lehman, Joretta Penner, and LuAnn Schrag.

Field Notes

Readers Say

Submissions to Readers Say column should comment on printed articles.

The publication of Dennis Byler’s “Letter to the Draft Board” (June 30) is an affront to the Mennonite Church and especially the participants in its service agencies.

Just as certain as Mr. Byler enjoys life and breathes as a citizen of this country, the government has not made any unreasonable request, and the Mennonite Church has provided positive ways to carry out its responsibilities as a citizen.

Mr. Byler may be authentic in his self-styled nationalism, but he might recognize Christian citizenship is a healthy balance of many things.

Should he persist in writing his own rules, I would hope he would consider the move to willfully relinquish his Mennonite citizenship, and join the lot of international drifters who find Western values too confusing.

In the meantime there will be dozens of sincere purposeful young men and women who will face squarely their responsibilities of today and elect voluntary programs in Christian service to their fellowmen. Let’s not deter their good efforts by publicizing the deviant actions of a few. — James D. Lehman, Harrisonburg, Va.

I would like to commend you for printing these refreshing and encouraging articles. And I would like to suggest that you continue to provide this type of reading as part of a well-balanced diet.

It is becoming increasingly evident that people — youth and adults — including our denomination, have a growing thirst for new water (Jn. 7:37-39), and new wine (Eph. 5:18). This was very evident at Mission ’76. I was happy for the emphasis on, and evidence of, the work and power of the Spirit at that meeting.

We are hearing persons tell of the deep heart-longings, and then the subsequent fulfillment of joy, peace, and power when they experience a new relationship to Christ in the Spirit. We are also hearing folks ask why there has been such a lack of biblical research concerning the work, power, and gifts of the Holy Spirit.

I believe such Scriptures as Acts 2 and 1 Corinthians 12, 14 (and many others), which have been explained away (for our day) so long, are coming alive as a fresh breath of the Spirit is blowing. Praise the Lord!

Will we let Him blow upon and among us, bringing us new freshness and power for the glory of the Holy Trinity and for our abundant joy? Or will we let Him blow past us? — Elam H. Glick, Reedsville, Pa.

Funeral services were held at the Millwood Church, with Reuben Stoltzfus and Isaac King officiating.

Noffsiger, Reneym, Sr., son of Joe and Anna Noffsiger, was born at Turlin, N.Y., June 26, 1890; died at his home, Beaver Falls, N.Y., of cancer.

This is a novel about three youth, who live together as a family. All are running away from broken homes and unhappiness. They are not Christians and so life is presented from a non-Christian setting.

In this book Christianity is viewed through the eyes of the nonbeliever. The Christian will see himself and his role in society in a little different light. He will be awakened to the fact that his actions and responses are not always interpreted in the way they are given.

Here is a novel written for both the believer and the nonbeliever. The believer will have his faith in the power of God strengthened and the nonbeliever will discover the source of life for true happiness.

That Controversial Peace Symbol

By Gerald C. Studer

An amazing array of interpretations and explanations are being offered today concerning both the origin and the meaning of the peace symbol. Allusions and documentation are provided to enrich and authenticate the viewpoints of the writers. Some insist that the symbol is an ancient one; others insist it is of recent origin. Some find it has a Christian pedigree; others declare it has a demonic and/or communist-inspired origin.

Can we "cool it" long enough to survey the facts? Can we subdue and restrain our emotions while we assess the data? Can we suspend our judgments until we have the possibilities sorted out and ready for evaluation?

One of the best basic sources of information concerning the symbols that have been used from primitive times to the middle ages is Rudolf Koch’s The Book of Signs, first published in English in 1930. It has been deservedly called "one of the most fertile single sources of decorative ideas available today ... a graphic history of the development of written communication ... (offering) a singular insight into the psychology of the primitive mind." This book provides illustrations of 493 different symbols with brief commentary concerning the origin and meaning of most of them.

The basic meaning of the symbol (△) found inside the peace symbol's circle is simply "the man dies." It is one of a series of equally simple symbols illustrating the vicissitudes of family life. The first of the series is ( ¶ ) and means "man."

This symbol has been called a broken cross but the broken (sometimes called "chevron") cross looks like this (△), and has no demonic or nefarious connotations. It is also true that among the house-marks (sometimes called "holding-marks") of primitive to medieval times there is to be found this same symbol (△) which is called the crow's foot or witch's foot. These house-marks were at first private signs of ownership which individuals used, like western cattlemen use brands on cattle, to mark all their movable property. To this day some craftsmen mark their tools with some such symbol. The upright form of the symbol under discussion ( ¶ ) was also called a "fork" and this sign (△) without the cross piece was known as the "chevron." Koch says the names for these symbols are of considerably later origin than the signs themselves and arose from close association of ideas. That is, the inverted symbol meaning man dies (△) looked somewhat like a crow's foot and so it was called that or it reminded someone of a deformed footprint and since witches were considered mysterious and erratic, one could disparage them by dubbing this sign a witch's foot.

Another fact which throws additional doubt upon the demonic origin of this symbol is the fact that another symbol entirely, the pentagram or five-pointed star which can be drawn with one stroke of the pen (★) was also called the witch's foot by the Celtic priests. But this star was sometimes known as Solomon's seal. It generally had a Christian or good meaning so that Koch says "it was popularly believed to be a protection against demons and, by analogy, a symbol of safety" (italics mine).

I failed to find any reference or illustration of this symbol in a basic reference book on witchcraft nor was I able to find any further light about its origin, for good or ill, in J. E. Cirlot's A Dictionary of Symbols except to say that the circle or the triangle as figures to enclose other forms are "basic symbols" and that "the inverted five-pointed star is a symbol of the infernal as used in black magic." But then, we aren't talking about inverted five-pointed stars, are we!

To call the peace symbol "a new symbol of the Antichrist spirit" and "the communist peace symbol" but another example of the way many Christians today play into the hands of both the Antichrist and communism. For both thrive on anything that will arouse fear and hatred in the hearts of people. They delight in taking credit for anything that can be used to throw controversy and panic among Christians. Both thrive on disorder and suspicion and consequently find anything, whether true or false, useful so long as it hinders the Christians from going about their "Great Commission" with confidence and unity. So crying an alarm about the use of this symbol on the ground that it is communistic makes just the kind of contribution to the communist cause that the communists delight in and, contrary to the good intentions of the Christians who believe they are showing their faithfulness, they are rather aiding and abetting the enemy.

From another viewpoint, symbols mean what they are worn to mean or taken to mean. If the Christians wearing this symbol either do not know the antichristian meanings ascribed to it or do not subscribe at all to those ways of life, their way of life should prove to be an adequate counteraction to the misunderstandings of those people who have blindly adopted the false reports. After all, for some people, anything not as they think it ought to be, is communist inspired! What better ploy to keep my own and other people’s attention off my own faults than to be baiting everyone else’s faults with the cry, “communism!” Why give yourself to the promotion of the good news when it is so much easier to get a hearing by crying, “wolf!”

The explanation that has been offered for the peace symbol which makes it a composite of the semaphore letters N and D standing for Nuclear Disarmament which when inverted is a composite to the semaphore letters U and D standing for Unilateral Disarmament is unsatisfactory. [This view simply says that the surrounding circle was added for aesthetic reasons.] This explanation, however true and clever as far as it goes, is obviously inadequate to explain a symbol as ancient as this one.

If Mennonites are turning to the use of jewelry to augment their witness to Christ, I suggest someone make a casting of the new MCC symbol and sell pendants and brooches of this. With all the controversy that has stirred around this peace symbol, we could avoid misunderstanding by using Kenneth Hiebert’s symbol since the dove and the conventional cross are unmistakably Christian. Once the devil has been able to confuse the issue, our attempt to use a suspected symbol for a good witness is like trying to adapt the Muslim sword and crescent to suggest that we urge a dependence upon the sword of the Spirit and the crescent (rainbow) of God’s love!

The Ministry of Christian Bookstores

By Kenneth Schwartzentruber

"Princess of the West" they call her. She embraces one-half million people. She has just held centennial celebrations for one of her native and world-famous musicians — Carlos Gomes. She just realized centennial observances for the founding of the first evangelical witness. She is Campinas (the plains), in Sao Paulo State, where ten years ago Mennonite missionaries opened the first Christian bookstore carrying a full line of evangelical books and a broad selection of secular books and materials.

William is a typical missionary. He received his first orientation and Portuguese words here at the language school. He makes frequent return trips to Campinas to buy Christian literature for his people in the far western state of Mato Grosso. At times he even submits mail orders between trips.

Dna. Rosa is an elderly lady who recently became a believer. She didn’t have the opportunity to learn to read when a child. How could she learn all the hymns sung in her church when she hears them only a few times a week? She found an answer by buying records at our store so she can listen to the songs, Bible stories, and sermons while working at home.

Dna. Mercedes is an industrious doctor’s wife. Now that they are believers she wants to be active in her church by teaching others. She has learned to know a girl clerk at our store, Lizena, who is very apt in giving counsel and demonstrating Bible study helps and audiovisual materials in her teaching. She comes often and stays long but we patiently work with her. She is our customer and God’s disciple.

Yukio is a young Japanese believer. He is faithfully endeavoring to start a little church in a Japanese colony. He needs Bibles, hymnals, and Sunday school quarterlies. With the assistance of the store staff he is now equipped with basic tools of soul-winning and church building.

Stra. Maysa is a young Catholic girl who often comes just to hear the music. She also likes to discuss with the store staff the problems that face a young girl. We pray that someday she will move beyond this stage. Will you pray for us that we may daily sense “the Spirit upon us” as we serve?

Kenneth Schwartzentruber is a Mennonite missionary serving as a bookstore manager in Campinas, S.P., Brazil.
Where Is My Allegiance?

"I can’t approve of the missionary work and publications of the Mennonite Church, so I send 80 percent of my contributions to other programs." So said a businessman recently. The Mennonite Church is not perfect.

We are living in days of conflict. Many are confused. There are so many different denominations. There are also many independent churches, missions, and schools. Some emphasize evangelism, others social action, some for peace, and others support war. Some are called conservative while others are liberal or progressive. How does one find his way through this religious organizational confusion?

Presumably there are Christians in all of these groups. All of them are engaged in Christian witness and service of one kind or another. They also base their mission and work on the Bible. They are God’s people in various stages of spiritual growth and maturity. Perhaps we should also note that there likely are unsaved people in any or all of these groups as well. No organization or group is perfect in itself.

Fortunately God has reserved judgment of people to Himself. We are to work with one another, encourage one another, and pray for one another. Organizations are simply devices to enable us to work together and to undergird and support one another. Organizations are tools to help us get a job done. They enable us to share responsibilities. The early church began with practically no organization. As needs arose they formed additional organizations. Today’s complex world and society demands much more organization than ever before.

Since we as Mennonites have come to this stage in history, either because of our common background or through evangelism and witness, we have espoused the position and stance of the historic Mennonite Church. We are not saying one group is better than another, but once having become a member should we not extend our efforts and loyalties to the group? Should we not support our group and its work and let others serve their respective groups?

If the Mennonite Church is worthy of existence then it deserves the support of its members. The same is true of all other denominations and groups. This does not prevent anyone from also supporting other groups, but until our own programs are adequately provided for, we certainly have no responsibility to those of other groups who organize their own programs. How can we as Mennonites move effectively without the wholehearted support of all members?

By Still Waters

"Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth" (Col. 3:2).

We are easily persuaded, like the people of Sodom, to center our thoughts and lives on this earth. Things become our main concern and receive our primary affection. Things drive us to do many things which dim our spiritual eyesight. The passing pleasures press out the best. And the passing treasures take up our time. But to love the world and to live for the world is to perish with the world.

"Set your affection on things above," this becomes a clarion call to every Christian. It is a call in contrast to the world’s call to carnal living. It is a command to strangers and pilgrims headed for a heavenly home.

This Scripture does not despise things on the earth. God the Creator made all things good. This Scripture points out that only as we keep the proper perspective, only as things are in their proper place, can there be progress. After all it is the one who sees the importance of the spiritual who makes best use of the material. It is the one who has no hope of heaven who makes earth a hell.

God has given us the things of His material creation for our benefit and blessing but they can never take the place of His spiritual creation.

Our affection, our love is always to be on more than sticks and stones, gold, or steel. God made us to be more than clay objects. He breathed into us and we became living souls.

To See

I saw it,
I heard it,
But you did not see
The beauty, the grandeur
Of that lovely tree
Or the bird singing in it.

Your mind was wrapped up in today.

— Winston J. Martin
Not by Intellect—But by My Spirit

A fallacy we better face up to fast is the one which imagines that spiritual truth can be understood by intellectual means. Modern orthodoxy has made a great blunder in this erroneous assumption. It is wrong to believe that Bible study itself can remove the veil which keeps us from spiritual perception. The Scripture does not say, "No man knoweth the things of God except he studies the Bible." It does tell us that "the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God" (1 Cor. 2:11).

So there is a tremendous difference between an intellectual perception of God and the Spirit-revealed knowledge. It is possible to grow up in the church, know all its doctrine, and be fanatically faithful and yet not know God at all or understand spiritual truth. Put it down that we are spiritually blind to the things of God without Holy Spirit illumination. "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned" (1 Cor. 2:14).

Great men, mighty in intellectual, emotional, and volitional powers are always present. And such may seek after God and seek to interpret spiritual truth. But it is not correct psychology, oratory, overpowering logic, dynamic personality, or willpower which will convert or correct men to the truth. "The world by wisdom knew not God" (1 Cor. 1:21). Paul says, "And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom" (1 Cor. 2:4). Soul culture or intellectual power cannot open spiritual eyes.

A. W. Tozer says it well, "A revelation of the Holy Spirit in one glorious flash of inward illumination would teach you more of Jesus than five years in a theological seminary — and I believe in the seminary. You can learn about Jesus in the seminary. You can learn a great deal about Him, and we ought to learn everything we can about Him . . . But the final flash that introduces your heart to Jesus must be the illumination of the Holy Spirit Himself, or it isn’t done at all . . ."

"If you have to be reasoned into Christianity, some wise fellow can reason you out of it! If you come to Christ by a flash of the Holy Spirit so that by intuition you know that you are God’s child, you know it by the text but you also know it by the inner light, the inner illumination of the Spirit, and no one can reason you out of it."

A primary reason for emptiness in many a sermon, Sunday school class or Bible study is not that correct facts are absent. It is because it is no more than an intellectual discussion from an intellectual viewpoint. Hence no spiritual illumination. Of course there must be a knowledge of the facts. This is why the Bible stresses our need to know. But until there is the illumination of the Holy Spirit nothing happens. Many can testify that after years in the church and hearing many sermons and being in many Bible classes, suddenly they receive a love, a longing for, and an understanding of Christ and His Word which cannot be understood aside from Holy Spirit work.

What does this say? First, before we make spiritual progress we will need to admit that we cannot by our own intellect understand spiritual things. No amount of intellectual reasoning could have persuaded Paul that Christ was the Savior of the world. No amount of intellectual persuasion would have brought Peter to the conviction of all present, "God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." He knew it only by the Spirit of God. And without the Spirit we can go on repeating the gospel stories and facts, even in dramatic and scholarly form, yet leave hearts empty of spiritual refreshment, insight, and strength.

One has a strong feeling that much which may be called irrelevant in preaching and teaching today is not poor preaching or teaching. What makes the message hollow is that the Holy Spirit is not present to give life and meaning. Why? Because we think we can somehow do a spiritual work ourselves. Because we stop short of the prayer for Holy Spirit illumination. And because we do not recognize our need of the Holy Spirit and covet His work He cannot give His gifts and blessing of spiritual illumination to us. He cannot lead us into all truth because we do not desire that He lead us.

Praise God that growing numbers of persons of all ages are growing tired of what the flesh can do and they are not satisfied with the husks of human reasoning and intellect. And thank God many, in confessing their own inadequacy and opening themselves to the Holy Spirit of God, have found new freedom and power in living and witness. When this happens Christ becomes precious and His program is really promoted. For greater are a few simple words from a believer who knows the touch of the Spirit than great words from one who feels his own wisdom or power will perform a spiritual work. Do we really believe, "All is vain except the Spirit" does His work and bears His witness?

— D.
Was the Lord Jesus a Revolutionary?

In teaching Bible to secondary students I have a struggle with those who spell God with a lower case "g," or write about "angles" that announced the coming of Jesus; young people who insist they have "excepted" Christ as their Savior. Failure to capitalize, to spell, or to use the right homonym has caused their well-meaning intentions to be irreverent, illiterate, and even Antichrist. We sometimes say the opposite from what we mean with a right word used wrongly.

The same thing may happen when properly used words have changed in meaning through the years. The King James Bible translators had no idea that some of their carefully chosen words would one day mean the opposite from what they did in the days of Shakespeare and Queen Elizabeth I. In just the last fifty years the word "communism," which once referred to believers who shared their common possessions, has so changed in meaning as to give the wrong impression if applied to those believers today. Consequently these vehicles-of-thought must be modified, dropped, or substituted to fit the current occasion for which they are used. A word is misleading that does not convey the meaning intended at the time and circumstance of its use.

Jesus Was Not a Political Revolutionary

A revolution according to the dictionary is "a complete overthrow of an established government or political system." Examples of this are the English Revolution of 1688, the American Revolution of 1775, the French Revolution of 1789, the Chinese Revolution of 1911, or the Russian Revolution of 1917. Many more could be included. The revolutions of history are marked by insecurity and bloody revolt against established controls and authority, in which violence is followed by hunger and pestilence that may cause more destruction and suffering than the revolt itself. Such revolutions are usually started by a few people, sometimes only one, who rebel against established government or authority. They use propaganda, hysteria, mass persuasion tactics, the mob, and usually violence to accomplish their end, and the end always justifies the means — they think.

I wonder if it is necessary to spend much time to prove that the Lord Jesus was not this kind of a revolutionary. His whole life and teaching were strangely misunderstood by His disciples because they expected Him to somehow overthrow the Roman yoke and establish a temporal kingdom of His own. Jesus never denied that He would some day set up such a reign, but was quick to claim that it would not be during His first advent when He came as a Redeemer and not as a judge; to save men's lives, and not to destroy them. "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn [judge] the world; but that the world through him might be saved." "For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them" (Jn. 3:17; Lk. 9:56).

The accusation written above His cross condemned Jesus as a revolutionary. To any Roman an unqualified assertion of kingship meant revolt against Caesar. But the statement was not true, being fabricated when Jewish enemies were at their wit's end to condemn a just man. Then should we who love and worship Jesus as Lord, with all the light we have, use the same falsehood as His enemies by branding Jesus as a revolutionary? We must credit Pilate with a shrewdness that drew a clear statement concerning any revolutionary ambitions Jesus may have had.

Pilate: "Art thou the King of the Jews?"
Jesus: "... My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence" (Jn. 18:33, 36).

To this generation a revolutionary is a Lenin, a Hitler, or a Castro. Since Jesus is now also dubbed a revolutionary, could we by any stretch of evil imagination say a Lenin, a Hitler, a Castro, and a Jesus? Never! Grant that Jesus was man while He was here on earth. Yet the very essence of His being was divine in that He was still wholly God while He was also man. Furthermore He was God become man, not man become God — incarnate God, not superman. Then how dare we, the finite products of His creation, equate the God of this universe, of whom it is said, "Holy and reverend is his name," with sub-Christian leaders that our generation calls "revolutionary"? As holy God He more than merits all the regard and worship that we impoverished beings, created for the praise of His glory, are able to produce.

Jesus Was a Transformist

A second definition the dictionary gives for revolution is "a complete or marked change in something." This has been used most often in referring to the nineteenth-century industrial revolution in which England had a leading part. The use of mechanical power and inventions that brought mass production to alleviate the drudgery of doing everything by human toil also brought great social changes and need for adjustments and reforms.

But a careful analysis of the marked changes that historians

refer to as revolutions will reveal that they were different from the great crises that have taken place in the history of Christendom. While revolutionary changes in the secular world were brought about by outward circumstances and pressures, the most significant marked changes in the spiritual realm have ever been spearheaded by transition within lives rather than by external influences.

When individuals are transformed from within, the masses are moved and society is helped. Jesus’ way of working from within is antithetical to the revolutionary methods of man. His ways are different and superior. Consequently the social changes that normally follow are superior in kind and more lasting in quality than direct attempts at reform or social betterment. We Christians, as the voluntary agents of His program, need a clear and definite terminology that avoids what is ambiguous and double meaning.

Of the marked changes in Christendom on this side of Calvary, possibly the most outstanding are the merging of the church and state in the fourth century, and then the separation of church and state about 1,200 years later. Although these changes would perhaps come the nearest to merit the name of revolution, yet historians are careful to avoid that term in speaking of the Edict of Milan and the Reformation.

A most glaring national tragedy was the French Revolution of 1789. While heads were being severed by guillotines in Paris, across the English Channel in London petitions were being circulated to abolish the slave trade. And so, in striking contrast, these two great rens were in progress at the same time; one a bloody revolution, the other a blessed revival in the wake of Wesley, Spurgeon, and other great evangelists. But it brings needless confusion into this scene to call both of these extremely different pictures by the one and same term, revolution.

A More Christian Word Is Needed

In Thessalonica the envious Jews took to them “certain lewd fellows of the baser sort” and falsely accused Paul and Silas of having “turned the world upside down.” To understand what is meant by this expression we do well to examine its use in other places in the Bible. In Isaiah 29:16 the prophet in warning against wickedness said, “Woe unto them that turn the world upside down.” In Isaiah 24:1 and Psalm 146:9 the Lord in punishment turns the way of the wicked upside down. One would gather that the enemies of the Christian way were trying to accuse Paul and Silas of being rabble-rousers and so make them the brunt of persecution. I have difficulty trying to understand why this Scripture is so often used to prove that early church leaders were revolutionary. And if they were, the connection between what they did and what we are to do is so ambiguous that I am left bewildered and confused. False accusers also claimed in mockery that those who came down from the upper room were full of new wine. Shall we not imitate that too; and if the one, then why not the other?

I recognize that for the most part, my brethren who join the cry for revolution have in mind a Christian revolution—a sharp change for betterment in social and spiritual conditions. But inasmuch as the radical left wing of this day is using the same term in their attempt to overthrow the establishment, and that between the Christian and the anarchist revolutionist there are all shades and kinds of revolutionaries, therefore the term implies a Laodicean aspect which we do well to avoid. If “come out from among them, and be ye separate . . . and touch not the unclean thing” means anything to us, then surely it applies to this usage.

I have a mental picture of multiplied millions crying revolution, revolution! The throng includes all brands, kinds, and degrees of revolutionaries, but they shout one word with one accord. The demonstrators increase their tempo until they become a mob that gets its way and there is a revolution. The establishment is overpowered, and anarchy becomes the thing. I see the sneering grin of victory on the anarchists because Christian revolutionists helped them gain their ulterior end by increasing the volume of their cry for revolution.

Aristotle and Shakespeare coined words in their respective areas when existing vocabularies were inadequate. Modern science leads the dictionary in everything from “psychedelic” to “lunar module.” We now have “dialogue” in things that we used to “discuss.” It seems tragic that in this generation of such super-literacy our theological sense of creativity has become so bankrupt that we Christians must borrow the world’s vocabulary to confuse what we try so hard to clarify. So if the timeworn term revitalize is too mild for this generation, and we need something that has more punch, then let’s coin a word that says what we mean, but let it be a Christian word! And please, let’s not call the holy Lord Jesus a revolutionary!

Nothing shows a man’s character more than what he laughs at.

The really happy man is he who can enjoy the scenery when he has to take a detour.

There is nothing wrong with the church. Jesus said with finality, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Any deficiency will be found in the lumps of "salt" and beams of "light" within the constituency of the church. And this is serious enough!

Very recently someone (not Mennonite) put it this way — "One of the defects of the church is that they lean too hard on their own teaching (doctrine), their own set of rules (traditions), to the point that they obscure Jesus Christ, the very essence of Christianity!" In our own denomination there is too much stress on "Mennonite Doctrine." There is no such thing! In Matthew 15:7, 8, 9 Jesus says among other things, "... teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." In Titus 2:10 we are told to "... adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things." If I did otherwise it would place me on the wrong road.

Councils, committees, commissions are working feverishly! The cry is — method, system, form, to the relegateing of Holy Ghost power! We don't have time to "tarry at Jerusalem until" directive "Power" comes. For what? Witnessing! Meanwhile souls are going to Christless graves!

In Matthew 5:3-16, Jesus sets forth the kind of positive living, with the resultant positive blessing which will most effectively influence the world. These, He declares, "are the salt of the earth." Have we lost our saltiness?

Jesus further declares since these "are the salt of the earth," they are consequently "the light of the world." We have here the idea of transparent living. Not a mirror but a clean window so others can see Jesus.

I'm afraid we today are a vivid portrait of Revelation 3:14-22. Please read this to get the relevance of the message. It is Jesus speaking. The whole of Jesus' living and teaching was positive. "Behold, I stand at the door and knock — " He "loves" — He "rebukes and chastens." He bids for repentance and He restores. Here is counsel for "a change for the better."

In 1 Peter 4:17, 18 we read, "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us [church], what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?"

"And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?"

"It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God" (Heb. 10:31).

Reform is the outward expedient. Revival is the inward experience. Habakkuk 3:2 reads, "O Lord, I have heard thy speech, and was afraid: O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy."

"He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

A Project of Goshen College

Editor's Note: Below is the English translation of the lead editorial in La Republica, of San Jose, Costa Rica, of June 29, 1970. La Republica is one of the two leading newspapers of Costa Rica.

Goshen College, an institution of higher education in the United States, has inaugurated an excellent plan called "International Study-Service," under which groups of young people come to live with us and enjoy the opportunity of cultural interchange in our country. For seven weeks they study the sociology, history, politics, and geography of the country, after which they give six weeks of work — without pay — in hospitals, medical centers, schools, and children's day care centers, usually in rural areas. Occasionally the group undertakes a special project as well, and this they have done this year. Since last Wednesday, therefore, seventeen young North Americans have devoted themselves to building a school at El Hoyon, near San Isidro de El General, working sacrificially to provide new educational opportunity in this country in a place where the children of that community can really profit by it.

In last Saturday's edition (June 27, 1970) we told the story of their work. Now we wish also to comment on them editorially: to pay tribute to a group of young people who have offered their work and their energy to the service of our country, motivated by an ideal of service and fraternity worthy of great praise and emulation, and for two other purposes. We would like to emphasize how necessary it is to direct the energies of youth into the minds of socially and personally beneficial activities that the modern world cries out for, rather than merely to criticize them. And we want also to point out that it is unfair to judge all of the young people of a country by the abnormal behavior of a few. Sorrowfully we admit that the news media are preoccupied with negative news about the conduct of young people throughout the world, without pointing out their positive characteristics. Maybe it is because good behavior seems less newsworthy than deviant. In any case, such publicity has given a distorted perspective of the young people of some countries. The attitude of this group of young people in San Isidro de El General makes very clear that among a great many youth of North America there is still ample spirit of service and work — and that their consumptive society does provide, as a by-product, a certain spiritual richness.

There is nothing that makes us love a man so much as praying for him ... . By considering yourself as an advocate with God for your neighbors and acquaintances, you would never find it hard to be at peace with them yourself. — William Law, A Serious Call, 1728.

A veteran church relief administrator says the aftermath of the Peruvian earthquake is the worst he has ever seen, and that the churches should plan on providing no less than $1 1/2 million as their share in the task of rebuilding.

"I've been in earthquake areas before and I've seen the worst that hurricanes can do, but I've never seen anything like the massive destruction that this earthquake caused," reports Wilson O. Radway, Operations Director of Church World Service, just returned from Peru.

"In Cosmo, once a city of 14,000, only one building — the bank — remains standing," Radway said. "Homes, stores, churches, factories are all flat. Church World Service recently helped complete some school buildings in this area; now only rubble remains."

Mr. Radway says that Peruvian officials now believe the death toll may reach as high as 60,000. Nearly a million persons are displaced.

Ministers must expect pain and tension if they are to lead their congregations in affirming their identities as disciples of Christ, the Southern Baptist Pastors' Conference was told in Denver.

"We are not the church when we are content merely to worship Jesus on the mountain," said John W. Nichol, pastor of Oakhurst Baptist Church, Decatur, Ga., one of several speakers who addressed the conference.

He said pastors are called as well to "obey Him by risking our lives in the valley." The good news of the gospel is not simply "God's on His throne and all's well in the world," he pointed out. "It is, God is on the earth and all hell's broken loose."

Baptist pastors were warned that in refusing to join God's present work on earth, they are rejecting "the substance of our sonship, and have no witness to bear."

The Bible is making renewed impact in contemporary Britain, according to a report at the annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

The report showed the total Scripture production in England and Wales increased from 2,705,736 units in 1968 to 4,394,153 last year.

The report was presented by John G. Weller, general secretary (overseas), who said, "There is a great surge of interest in the English versions of the Bible, old and new, and a greater circulation than ever before with considerable new readership."

This tendency was described as worldwide, and the report quoted an instance of a "hippie" colony in California which excluded all printed materials as the products of a corrupt society — except the Bible, "because it was basic."

The report added, "In the world as a whole the demand for Scriptures has never been greater — Scriptures to be read and studied, not just left unopened on a shelf or lecctern."

Hard-hit by decreasing income, the Board of Christian Education of the Presbyterian Church, U.S. (Southern) is cutting back its staff from 105 to 74 persons, it was announced.

The reduction, expected to be completed by January 1972, is the second paring of staff within a year. In July 1969, the staff was cut 40 percent.

Services and programs will also be reduced. Functions of the board to be eliminated include library services, camps and conferences, recreation, guidance, development, enlistment, field service, office of voluntary service, hunger office, challenge grants in higher education, and probably media services.

Dr. Robert F. Jones of Fort Worth, board chairman, said the move is aimed at adapting staff services to a continuing pattern of decentralization in the denomination.

The U.S. financial crisis beginning in late 1929 caused a sharp reduction in funds for missionaries. Among those affected were Dr. and Mrs. Frank C. Laubach, a couple specializing in literacy in the Philippines. By 1931 there was no money to pay native teachers. Dr. Laubach regretfully concluded the work must end.

"This work shall not stop for lack of money," a Moro sultan told Dr. Laubach, so the story goes. "Everyone who learns to read has to teach. If he does not, I'll kill him."

The sultan killed no one and the Laubach literary ministry did not stop. In fact, the incident gave a new impetus and a name to one of the most remarkable educational enterprises of all time: the "each one teach one" Laubach literary method.

When the famed clergyman died on June 11 at the age of 85 he had been responsible for helping more persons learn to read than probably any other individual in history. He had personally been involved in literacy programs in 100 countries and his techniques and materials were adapted to 500 languages and dialects.

"The fleeing of whites from our older cities has reached crisis proportions," the American Jewish Committee was told.

This analysis was provided by Dr. Richard J. Krickus, who has worked as a consultant on white ethnic groups with the National Urban Coalition, the United States Catholic Conference, and local ethnic and community groups.

"It is obvious," he said, "that this exodus of taxpayers deepens the plight of revenues-starved municipalities unprepared to cope with a black underclass group desperately in need of welfare assistance, jobs, housing, better educational opportunities, and all the other amenities so scarce in nonwhite communities."

Dr. Krickus's evaluation was published in the first of a series of papers issued by the American Jewish Committee as part of a new program with working-class white ethnic groups to reduce polarized conflict between groups in American cities.

A subtle but substantial shift in financial priorities by America's churches away from church-related colleges was noted by a United Methodist official who stated that funds are now being channeled into "social action" causes of all kinds.

Lyle E. Schaller, interviewed in nearby Bloomington, Indiana, where he attended the annual meeting of the South Indiana Conference of the United Methodist Church at the University of Indiana, said the change is being observed by all religious denominations.

Overall, he noted, churches are spending less money to aid church-related colleges and sometimes these colleges are "last" on the list of priorities.

Mr. Schaller, director of his denomination's Center for Parish Development at Naperville, Ill., said individual churches simply are not increasing their support and it becomes a "real dollar decrease."

He said the shift in priorities is also affecting church-related hospitals and homes for the elderly and for children.

Mr. Schaller observed that church-related colleges and universities are caught in a bind that started in the late 1950s when they expanded facilities in the expectation of increased enrollments. Now they have facilities for more students and attendance continues to decrease.

Some colleges are operating at a deficit, he asserted, and many others are mortgaging future revenues by selling bonds to pay operating costs.
Penner Case Acquitted, and Prayers Answered

The United States Supreme Court in its final decision for the 1970 Spring Session issued an order which dismisses all criminal charges against Jerry Allen Penner, a Mennonite from Balko, Okla., who was earlier sentenced to five years in a Federal penitentiary for refusing to accept induction into the armed forces after he unsuccessfully attempted to register as a conscientious objector.

As a typical Mennonite young man facing the draft, Penner registered in 1964 with Selective Service and claimed conscientious objection to military service. However, in Beaver County, Okla., the local draft board was most reluctant to classify registrants I-O (conscientious objectors to all military service). Consequently, Jerry Penner was classified I-A-O (conscientious objector accepting noncombatant military service). This was the beginning of a six-year struggle to be recognized as a conscientious objector opposed to all military service.

He exhausted all of his administrative appeals for having his draft classification reviewed and in the process his classification was finally and with no explanation changed on June 21, 1967, to I-A (eligible for induction into the armed forces). Then on Aug. 1, 1967, Jerry was ordered to report to Oklahoma City for induction. He reported to the induction station but refused to accept induction. As a result of this action he was declared to have violated a Federal law (the 1967 Military Selective Service and Training Act) and was turned over to the United States Department of Justice for prosecution.

In 1967 the Grand Jury for the United States District Court of Western Oklahoma issued an indictment and a warrant for his arrest. This then took Penner's appeal as a conscientious objector into the Federal courts.

In a nonjury trial on April 8, 1968, he was tried before Judge Fred Daugherty for his action of refusing induction into the armed forces. However, Penner was not sentenced until Nov. 8, 1968, when he received the maximum prison sentence for such a violation — 5 years in the Federal penitentiary.

The case was immediately appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the tenth circuit; this request for an appeal was granted and the decision of the District Court was reviewed but sustained.

After a conviction in the lower court and support for that conviction by the Circuit Court of Appeals and the major costs involved, the Penner family did not know if they should proceed further and appeal the case to the United States Supreme Court.

It was at this point that the family consulted the Peace Section of the Mennonite Central Committee for advice and assistance. The Peace Section, after discussions within the section and consultation with professional legal counsel, felt that the Jerry Penner conviction would be an extremely unfortunate legal precedent for any future conscientious objector in similar circumstances. Consequently, the Peace Section took action to support Penner both with legal counsel and finances. The section also agreed to file an amicus curiae (friend of the court) brief if the Supreme Court would hear the case.

Marvin Karpatkin, a New York attorney who serves as general legal counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union and as general legal counsel for the Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors and who represented Leroy Garber in the 1967 Amish religious freedom issue in Kansas, agreed to take the Penner Case and file a request for a review with the Supreme Court.

In the conclusion of the petition filed on behalf of Jerry Penner the attorney asked the Supreme Court to rule as to whether... "...a conscientious objector must be a saint, or whether it is sufficient to be an ordinary man who is, by reason of religious training and belief, conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form." Penner's conviction rested largely on the basis of rather fragmentary and undocumented evidence contained in an FBI report which alleged that he did not hold to some of the basic tenets of the Mennonite faith.

Now in a completely unexpected and unprecedented action the United States Solicitor General, Ervin N. Griswold, in writing his recommendations to the Supreme Court, said that the Penner Case was an obvious miscarriage of justice and in fact likened it to the Sacco-Vanzetti Case, a case where guilt was supposedly established and execution was carried out largely because of strong public feelings — only to have some concrete vindicating evidence uncovered after the execution.

The Solicitor General, whose responsibility it is to support the government's conviction, came to the defense of Jerry Penner and recommended that the Court of Appeals decision be reversed and that the case be remanded to the District Court for a dismissal of indictment. Attorney Karpatkin said that this statement by the Solicitor General was in his practice and to his knowledge unprecedented.

The Supreme Court in its final action for the 1970 Spring Session reviewed the case and stated that there had been an obvious error in the conviction of Jerry Penner. They decided not to hear the case but to simply order the recommendations of the Solicitor General.

On Monday, June 29, 1970, the United States Supreme Court issued the following very terse order: "On the basis of a confession of error by the United States Solicitor General and of an independent review of the record, the petition for writ of certiorari is granted, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is vacated, and the case is remanded to the United States District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma with instructions to dismiss the indictment."

The Supreme Court's decision annuls the lower court's conviction and completely dismisses all criminal charges against Jerry Penner.

After six years Jerry Penner has been acquitted, justice rendered, and prayers answered.

The family has borne almost the entire financial load of about $10,000; persons wishing to share in this expense with the family may channel contributions through the MCC Peace Section. This was, after all, a decision which will be of benefit not only to Jerry Penner, but to all conscientious objectors. — Walton Hackman

Costa Rica Likes "SST" Students

Goshen College students in the Study-Service Trimester abroad are giving more than they are getting, according to Sr. Otto Barrantes, chairman of the local committee in San Isidro del General, Costa Rica.

The Study-Service Trimester abroad consists of 14 weeks in a country abroad and includes seven weeks of study — its language, culture, economics, art, religions, history, geography, and plant and animal life — and seven weeks of unsalaried service in an assignment such as teaching, construction, farming project, assistance at day care centers or orphanages, and aid at hospitals or health centers. Students live as guests in the homes of nationals during the entire period.

Sr. Barrantes told Theron Schlabach, faculty leader of the Costa Rica Study-Service Trimester unit, that as far as he is concerned, the people of his town are getting much more than they are giving.

Sr. Barrantes said that in general his committee considers the Goshen College students a good influence on the young persons of the town and that many homes with young persons want GC students because they want their sons and daughters to associate with them.

He also pointed out that GC students are changing some attitudes toward work. In Costa Rica, young persons of the middle and upper classes often think it is a disgrace to work with their hands. But now they see GC students — "college students" — willing to take any kind of manual labor job or hospital job or other unpleasant work.

Sr. Barrantes mentioned the contribution of Miss Carol Troyer (a sophomore from Green town, Ind., who was in Costa Rica on SST last winter) who was willing to serve in the hospital day after day at work that is considered very distasteful by Costa Ricans. He said that in time the influences of GC students will change attitudes of the Costa Rican youth toward doing some of the work in the community.

Overseas Committee Convenes

On July 1 the Overseas Missions Committee adopted a budget of $945,000 for the 1970-71 fiscal year. This figure is included in Mennonite Board of Missions' total program budget of $2,415,899 for 1970-71 which was approved during Board business sessions at Mission '70 the first week of July.

The committee also heard John Koppenhaver, a member of the Overseas Committee, summarize his year of work and study in Argentina. A professor of Spanish at Hesston (Kan.) College, Koppenhaver spent one year with his wife in Buenos Aires in study and research while giving one-third time to serving the Argentine Mennonite Church in special assignments. He reported both positive and negative aspects of church life and challenges that face a Mennonite brotherhood living in a revolutionary context.

In other deliberations, the committee approved a plan whereby Wilbert Shenk and James Kratz will devote one-fifth time during the coming year to study, research, and critical evaluation of Mennonite Board of Missions' total overseas program. Necessary adjustments in staff work loads will be made to permit this move.

Interviews were also conducted with missionaries presently on furlough and attending Mission '70.

Overseas Missions Committee members are: Mrs. Clifford (Lois) Anstutz, H. Ernest Bennett, Calvin King, John Koppenhaver, Carl Kreider, Mrs. David (Doris) Lehman, David W. Mann, Emerson McDowell, Glenn E. Miller, M.D., Paul M. Miller, John H. Mosemann, and John B. Mumaw.

24 Commissioned for Service

One- or two-year assignments at locations ranging from Robstown, Tex., to Calling Lake, Alta., were accepted by 24 participants in the July 13-23 Voluntary Service orientation school at Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart. The group was commissioned on July 23 and left Elkhart for their respective assignments the following day.

First row: Rosanna Stoltzfus, Morgantown, Pa., teacher for one year in Pittsburgh, Pa.; Margaret Schrag, Moundridge, Kan., day care worker for one year in London, Ont.; Krystal Shoemaker, Easton, Mich., one year as kindergarten teacher in Buckeye, Ariz.; and Joanne and Ron Hostetter, Harrisonburg, Va., one year as recreation leaders with the Los Angeles, Calif., unit.

Second row: Albert and Barbara George, Marion, Ohio, two years as program directors for the Winston-Salem, N.C., unit; Diane Miller (not entering VS); Gladys Horst, North Lawrence, Ohio, assistant at teen girls' home in London, Ont., for one year; Douglas Wiens, Hillsboro, Kan., child care worker for two years at Frontier Boys Village, Colorado Springs, Colo.; and Merle Christner, Shipshewana, Ind., orderly for two years at Mennonite Hospital, La Junta, Colo.

Third row: Janet Toevs, Whitewater, Kan., one year as a physical therapist with the 18th Street, Chicago, unit; Danny and Ruby King, West Liberty, Ohio, two years as houseparents in Robstown, Tex.; Lynn Yoder, Midland, Mich., construction worker with the Philadelphia, Pa., unit for two years; George Fenton, Wellsboro, Pa., two years as a maintenance worker at Kansas City, Kan.; and Neil Hartzler, Orrville, Ohio, child care worker for two years at Kansas City (Kan.) Children's Home.

Fourth row: Donald and Rosanne Wiest, Mohnston, Pa., community service workers in Calling Lake, Alta., for two years; Mary and Edward Warner, Harbor Springs, Mich., one year as program directors with the 18th Street, Chicago, unit; Gloria and Leon Goshow, Harrisonburg, Va., program directors for two years with the Pueblo, Colo., unit; Phillip Steininger, Grabill, Ind., child care worker at Frontier Boys Village, Colorado Springs, for two years; and Harold Jackson, Hydro, Okla., stockroom worker for two years in Wichita, Kan.

To accommodate the rapid influx of volunteers during the summer months, Mennonite Board of Missions has scheduled three orientations for August and September as follows: Aug. 3-13, Aug. 24 to Sept. 3; and Sept. 14-24.

International Youth Team on Tour

"If we can succeed in living together in harmony, then this will demonstrate that different peoples and nations can also live harmoniously together." Daniel Nyamageni states this as one purpose of the six-member International Youth Team of which he is a member.

The team, sponsored by the Youth Min-
Home Mission Council Meets

With 52 persons in attendance, the Home Missions Council was called to order on July 1 at Mission '70 by Mark Lehman, pastor of Rehoboth Mennonite Church, St. Anne, Ill.

John Powell, Executive Secretary of Minority Ministries, presented a progress report on the Compassion Fund. As of July 1, $65,000 had been forwarded to Mennonite Board of Missions in Elkhart. Powell asked that 50 percent or more of Compassion contributions be sent to MBI for general projects with up to 50 percent utilized by district conferences operating qualified urban projects. In later Board business sessions, several appeals were made for Mennonite district conferences to take more initiative in promoting and interpreting the above-budget Compassion Fund.

A strong mandate given at Mission '69 in Kalona, Iowa, for more effective training for VS workers and others involved in urban mission was answered this year when Roy Yoder, acting secretary for Relief and Service, reported on several recent in-service training efforts. Four different in-service training sessions, coordinated by Ken Seitz of the Elkhart VS Office, have been held thus far, and others are upcoming. This led to further discussion on the preparation of young people for the central task of mission, personal witness, and evangelism.

Other considerations included a report by Chester Wenger of Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions, Salunga, Pa., on the "Project Timothy" program for the recruitment and training of potential Christian workers. Ivan Kauffman, acting secretary for Information Services, outlined a proposed 1970 Missions Week promotional campaign that will utilize inserts in Gospel Herald and district conference periodicals in lieu of a special mailing.

Kenneth Weaver of Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., pointed out the budget limitations that have led MBI to question the priority of the Mennonite Hour broadcast as over against new "Choice"-type shorter programs. Discussion among district leaders seemed to favor the continuation of production for both types of radio ministries.

Home Missions Council climaxd with Paul Landes of Phoenix, Ariz., a district director for Voluntary Service, presenting a provocative report on issues surrounding the plight of 3 3/4 million farm laborers in the nation's economy.

The Home Missions Council, comprised of the chairman and staff members of district mission boards, meets annually to discuss mission strategy especially related to urban areas where the Mennonite Church is at work.

Board Adopts New Budget

A $2,415,899 program budget for the 1970-71 fiscal year was approved during the Mennonite Board of Missions' annual business sessions July 6 and 7 at Mission '70 near Lansdale, Pa. Sources other than contributions are expected to supply $357,899 toward the total budget.

Total contributions needed from churches this year amount to $2,058,000 which represents a $17,000 increase over last year.  On October 1, 1970, the per member contributions asking will be increased to $55 per member to allow for inflationary factors and program expansion. Congregations operating on a planned giving basis should note this increase.

David C. Leatherman, Board treasurer, pointed out that $384,521 has been received in contributions for the first quarter of the 1970-71 fiscal year ending June 30. He also noted that contributions last year for budgeted programs amounted to $1,977,793 for an average of $30.28 per member.

Although the actual per member asking was $33, a 3 percent midyear budget reduction and an allocation of estate and special gifts allowed Mennonite Board of Missions to end 1969-70 operations in the black.

What is Convention 70?

Named to Board of Mennonite Broadcasts

Stuart W. Showalter, director of public relations for Eastern Mennonite College, has been appointed to the board of directors of Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., in Harrisonburg, Va. H. Ernest Bennett, executive secretary of the Mennonite Board of Missions under whose auspices Mennonite Broadcasts functions, announced Showalter's appointment to the nine-member board.

Showalter, a native of the Harrisonburg community, graduated from Eastern Men-

Gospel Herald, August 11, 1970
monite College in 1967 with a Bachelor of Arts degree in English. He then worked for one year as editor in the Information Services Department of the Mennonite Board of Missions in Elkhart, Ind., before moving to Athens, Ohio, to earn a Master's degree in journalism from Ohio University. He was elected to Kappa Tau Alpha, the journalism honorary fraternity at Ohio. Showalter joined the EMC faculty in June 1969, as director of public relations and instructor in journalism. He is a member of the Trissels Mennonite Church and is married to the former Shirley Hershey from Lititz, Pa.

Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., the mass communications arm of the Mennonite Church, produces broadcasts in seven languages, special Christmas and Easter programs, 30- and 60-second spots for radio and television, and conducts extensive Home Bible Studies and literature projects.

FIELD NOTES

The LeRoy Petersheim family was scheduled to arrive in the States from Tanzania on July 31. During August they will live at R. 2, Elverson, Pa. 19520.

Richard and Elsie Bowman left for British Honduras on July 31 for a three-year term of missionary service as a pastor-nurse team. Their address will be Box 461, Belize City, British Honduras.

Esther Schlabaugh flew to Honduras on July 31 to begin a two-to-three-year missionary term as a teacher at the Pine Grove Academy. Her address will be Apartado 143-C, Tegucigalpa, Honduras.

Lena Horning arrived in the States on August 5 from missionary service in Kenya. Her address is R. 1, Box 370, Denver, Pa. 17517.

The Norris Square Mennonite Church, Philadelphia, Pa., is working with a Baptist group and two Presbyterian groups in presenting open-air services in a city park. Pastor Jacob Frederick reports that these services will continue throughout the summer.

Larry Crumbly was installed as a minister in the College Hill Mennonite Church, Tampa, Fla., Sunday, July 19. He will be sharing ministerial responsibility for the congregation with Bishop Martin Lehman and others. Crumbly has been a worker in the College Hill congregation for three years.

Dorcas Stoltzfus left on July 28 for a three-year doctor assignment in Tanzania. She has already served five years in Somalia and Tanzania under EMBMC, Salunga, Pa. Her address will be Shirati Hospital, Private Bag, Musoma, Tanzania.

Carl Hansens have returned on furlough from Ethiopia. Their address is Box 64, Duchess, Alberta, Canada.

John E. Witmer, R. 1, Columbia, Pa., was ordained deacon for the Columbia mission congregation on July 26. Ivan D. Leaman was the officiating bishop with the sermon given by Richard Danner.

Clarence R. Neff, R. 1, Ronks, Pa., was ordained deacon for the Mt. Pleasant congregation in Lancaster Conference, July 12. Clair B. Eby was the officiating bishop, assisted by Paul G. Landis.

John Kaufman, Wildcat, Ky., was ordained to the ministry at the Pike Mennonite Church, Elida, Ohio, June 7, for ministry in the Kentucky field. Participating in the service were Merlin Good, Walter Stuecky, and A. Don Augsburger, former bishop of the Pike congregation.

New members by baptism: four at Hicksville, Ohio; one at Hartville, Ohio; twenty-three by baptism and two by confession of faith at Walnut Creek, Ohio.

Received by baptism on confession of faith, at the Holyrood Mennonite Church, Edmonton, Alta., June 28, 1970, Leslie T. Parth, former Hungarian Eastern Orthodox priest.

Erna Grove, Accra, Ghana, arrived in the States on July 24 for a one-year furlough.

Mark Kniss writes from Bihar, India: "This has been a year of growth and continued activity at the Nav Jivan Hospital. We are very happy to find another doctor to help in the hospital work. Eudora Paul joined us in May after completing her internship. Now three of us share the work load. A few statistics for 1969 may be of interest: the outpatient clinics saw a total of 21,618 patients: we had 1,605 admissions and performed 322 major operations. The operating budget for 1969 was $40,000, with the Mission Board giving about $4,700."

Warren Lambright, Adidome, Ghana, reports: "A month ago we started an evening Bible study in our home discussing John Miller's book, The Christian Way. We are pleased by the interest shown. The group is composed of hospital personnel, as well as interested persons from town. This helps to keep the hospital from being a 'closed community,' which can easily happen in our situation. From this initial attempt we hope other Bible study groups will be formed."

Robert and Rachael Hochstedler, OMA teachers, arrived in Santiago, Chile, on July 16. Bob has four hours of physics (grade 11) and 15 hours of mathematics (grades 10-12) plus department meetings and a possible extracurricular club. Rachael has four hours of sixth-grade geography and 16 hours of ninth-grade history.

Readers Say

Submissions to Readers Say column should comment on printed articles.

I want to express many thanks and wish him many blessings to pass onto our Mennonite Church — thanks millions for Bishop Lapp's article. I only wish we had 5,000 older people like him. He lives by what he taught and what he teaches. Why aren't they more like him? Maybe they are part of the silent majority? Will not be born into the Mennonite Church, but chose it in my early teens and still love it for many reasons, but I have to wonder at times, Is our light (or life) going out of our church as far as nonresistance is concerned? And then you publish an article like Bro. Lapp's and I am refreshed and encouraged to keep the faith and to continue on as the Mennonites taught on this subject. Our light is not out — it is still flickering! Please publish more like Bro. Lapp's, and I am that age, so we younger ones can be encouraged to continue on in this faith if we know there are at least some of the older generation who still believe in total nonresistance and speak out for it. — Rebecia H. Hiertzer, Denbigh, Va.

I appreciated Viola Weaver's article, "Beauty in Small Things," in the May 19 Gospel Herald. It was very well written.
I was especially impressed by her desire to visit her elderly uncle and aunt, but took no time to stop and say “hello.”

How often do we say when someone is gone, “Oh, had I only gone sooner to see him or her.” But why don’t we learn from these occasions, why let it happen over and over?

If we wait for “time” to write the letter someone is longing for, or “time” to make that friendly visit, or “time” to telephone some lonely person, the “time” passes and the days are over.

Let us take time for all things not only the ones which press the hardest, or which are for material gain. — Mrs. Lorne Shantz, Elmiran, Ont.

Bihar Enters a New Era

By Paul G. Kniss

Paul G. Kniss (right) confers with a business associate at his desk at Good Books Bookstore in Ranchi, Bihar, India.

God through His Holy Spirit is at work in the Mennonite church in Bihar, leading into all truth, convicting, and guiding.

Time of Transition

A new era has dawned for the church in India. This new era holds certain cause for apprehension because of uncertainties and fears. But there is promise and opportunity too. The uncertainties have made God’s people look to their moorings, to fortify themselves, and take stock of their present position and opportunities.

During the past century God has blessed the efforts of missionaries who came to this land sharing the good news. Churches have been established, and many non-Christians acknowledge that Christianity has made a positive contribution to the country. But mistakes have also been made. In the past Christian missions have included some characteristics of colonialism or paternalism. This served to make the Indian church, to some extent, dependent on help from abroad. Indian national leadership or initiative was sometimes stifled by the Westerners’ reluctance to turn things over or, perhaps, by lack of confidence in their Indian brethren. The Holy Spirit has brought conviction to missionaries’ hearts and revealed this sin to them. He has also worked in the church to prepare His people to move ahead with vision and purpose.

God is also working through political and social forces and the time has come when, because of these forces — and because of the preparing that the Holy Spirit has been doing in many hearts — missionaries are now taking steps to diminish and Indian Christians are stepping forward to accept responsibility. This move has been talked about for a long time, but the present political and social situation has brought on the urgent imperative to move decisively.

A Step of Faith

In every small congregation of the Bihar Mennonite Church (and some of the congregation consist of only three or four families) there is an awareness of the need for the church to be strengthened by learning the Word. When asked what might happen when missionaries return home, they affirm their personal faith and the lordship of Christ in their lives. They are growing in their sense of stewardship, and though they are poor, they are determined to support the work of the church through offerings of grain and money. They also have missionary zeal and invite their relatives and neighbors to discipleship.

This new impetus is especially evident on the conference level. The church councils are carrying out their work with a sense of responsibility. One senses in the nine ordained leaders and other church workers a sincere desire to serve the church faithfully. More leaders are being called and ordained. Those who were dependent on mission subsidy are entering a self-support program, investing an advance of their salaries in farmland, and terminating their mission support after three years. This is a step of faith and the future does not look easy, but their commitment to Christ and the church spurs them on. The administration of the hostel for schoolchildren, the nurture and Bible teaching, and leadership training programs are areas in which national leaders are now carrying increased responsibility and will soon assume full responsibility.

One sometimes feels hampered by a plethora of committees.
This pattern has been largely furnished by the missionaries, and perhaps in years to come a more indigenous pattern may emerge. But one cannot doubt that they are sincerely and earnestly putting their shoulders to the task.

It seems also that undue stress is sometimes placed on the need to make the Christian community economically strong. This is not hard to understand when we consider the background of poverty and deprivation the people have experienced in contrast to the affluence and prosperity of the West. We need to pray that in looking to her moorings and seeking strength for the trials ahead, the Bihar Indian church may increasingly see where her true strengths lie and drive her roots deep, drawing from the rich resources of Christ and His Word. The Holy Spirit will enlighten and guide the church in this step too, just as He has led all along.

One Spirit

The Mennonite churches in Bihar, Madhya Pradesh, Andhra Pradesh, and Bengal have become more aware of each other through the Mennonite Christian Service Fellowship of India. Joint study of our Anabaptist-biblical heritage, initial cooperation in fields of evangelistic opportunity and social service, working together in literature projects, and promotion of our peace witness are some of the thrilling ways the Spirit of God is leading us.

From the beginning of their work in Bihar the missionaries tried to avoid establishing too many institutions which the church itself could not carry on. Two such institutions of witness and service, however, were set up—a bookstore and a hospital. Since these would be too heavy an administrative and financial burden for the church, boards are being formed and administrative structures are being set up for these institutions that should insure their continuing to fulfill their intended functions. While not organizationally part of the church, they will continue to be part of the Christian presence and witness in Bihar.

One Purpose

During this time of transition the missionaries have felt constantly in need of the Spirit’s direction. Some, who came intending to work here the rest of their lives, are finding it difficult to think of withdrawal in a few years and of leaving the country and the people they have come to love. But they can see the clear working of God’s Spirit, and they see the earnest demonstration of His work in the response of their Indian brethren to the challenge before them, and they can only glorify God.

From the Uyo Story

By Ed and Irene Weaver

"Seeing Uyo for the first time evoked many kinds of feelings. We knew we had to like the place for this was to be our home. This was a new world, so indescribably different than any we had ever known... Our hearts sank with the dread of being alone in the difficulties which faced us. Had we come to the right place?... We were learning, too, how easily an uninitiated foreigner can jump to wrong conclusions.

"A sign at the edge of town read, 'Go slow through Uyo.' This had little meaning for us when we first arrived, but shortly we understood that these words were intended for us.

"Through the next eight years we began to feel the pulse of the indigenous churches about us. We began to understand what the people of Eastern Nigeria were saying to us. We loved them.

"We go. The church stays, but it does not stop. It goes on!... The validity of our whole strategy of the church in mission is now being put to the test. It was not designed as an easy escape from responsibility when the going got tough. Yes, we left Uyo, but not to forget. Our responsibility remains. This cannot be contradicted. We just can't break with the past and forget it all. No, our Mission Board is a responsible organization and we are responsible representatives....

"In relation to our church in Uyo there are three words for us to emphasize: First, there is responsibility. Second, there must be continuity. A relation with the church must be established as early as possible and our support and cooperation must go on. The third word is possibility. This is not the end of everything. It is merely the beginning. The future in God’s mission is always bright. The problem is to discover where and how God is working. It is there where we also will discover our future mission with the Uyo church.

"And your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams’ (Acts 2:17). We may be too old to see visions, but we do have a dream: the mission must always be God’s mission."

The Uyo Story, from which the above excerpts were taken, describes the development of the Mennonite witness in Nigeria as seen through the eyes of Edwin and Irene Weaver. Released in February of this year, the book is available from Mennonite Board of Missions, Box 370, Elkhart, Indiana 46514 for $2.00. Please add 20c for postage and handling.

Forty People Said

If you were to ask about forty people what the shape of congregational Christian education should look like in the next five years, what do you think they would say? Forty people were asked. They were persons with the focus of youth, women, pastors, laymen, minorities, college, peace, theology, group process, publishing, and the denominational Christian education departments of the Mennonite Church and the General Conference Mennonite Church. That should be a fair sample of the brotherhood. The group worked at their task for four days in what was called a Christian Education Seminar. Here is some of what they said:

They said that the congregation should concentrate on enabling adults in mission. In fact the slogan, "Enabling Adults in Mission," should be the primary focus of persons working with congregations in the next few years.

They said that there are a number of methods which are most likely to achieve results in our present context. Among these methods are:

1. An approach to learning which starts with the experience of the person: relationships between teacher and pupil must be emphasized.
2. Persons must be given the opportunity to reflect, then act as responsible adults.
3. Multimedia methods should be used increasingly in the Christian education program of congregations.
4. Conflict resolution as a learning method should be explored and used in our churches.

They said that among all the options for content in congregational Christian education several are most urgent. They are these:

1. The relevance and authority of the Bible for the contemporary situation must be communicated,
2. The credibility of a transcendent God at work in His world must be emphasized,
3. Brotherhood concepts which provide the basis for mission such as giving and receiving counsel, mutual aid, discipline, and resolving conflict between brethren, should be reaffirmed,
4. Congregations must be well informed on world issues if they are to be in mission to the world; these issues include, acculturation/nationalism, minority group needs, war and peace, poverty and affluence, ecology, drugs, international relations, sex, marriage, and the family,
5. Congregations must develop a style of church that is both prophetic and reconciling.

They said that denominational "enablers" who help congregations should:

1. Work first with congregations and individuals who are ready,
2. Use the Sunday morning and all settings for Christian education creatively,

By Still Waters

"The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms" (Deut. 33:27).
Surrender can rightly be said to be the secret of rest and security. Our lack of rest and peace is the result of our own struggle. Rather than surrendering we keep on searching and struggling. But as rest and peace comes to a child who relaxes in his mother's arms in full trust, so we find rest and peace as we place ourselves completely in the arms of God.

What satisfaction soothes our spirits when we really believe our refuge is the eternal God and underneath are the everlasting arms. When we surrender to God we find that neither the Creator nor the creation is unfriendly to us. He is good and He made all things good.

In God there is a sure refuge. His arms never tire. Let us then quietly surrender ourselves into His care and keeping. And as no child is safer or more secure than when in his mother's arms, so we are never so safe as when we rest in God. And though a child may not find complete refuge in running to his mother, be assured we find a refuge unfailing in the Creator and Lord of all.

O God,
What we have not, give us.
What we see not, show us.
What we are not, make us.
Amen.

Ministerial Information Service Provided

A Ministerial Information Service is made available to the Mennonite constituency through the office of the executive secretary Mennonite General Conference in Scottsdale, Pennsylvania. This has now been in operation for almost four years under the guidance of the Ministerial Committee of Mennonite General Conference and the services of Executive Secretary Howard J. Zehr.

About 50 congregations of the Mennonite Church have been given assistance in one way or another through this service. It is clear that this is not a placement office. It is an information service and counseling resource to congregational and conference leaders.

A file of prospective ministers and pastors is kept up to date with registered questionnaires, giving primary essential information about each prospect. Persons and churches knowing of prospective ministers and pastors available are encouraged to register these names with the Scottsdale office. Likewise, congregations desiring assistance are encouraged to make their requests known.

Need for such a resource has been realized for more than a decade. The Ministerial Committee of Mennonite General Conference brought a recommendation to the 1961 biennial session urging district conferences to study the question of how to give guidance in the placement of pastors, and encourage their sharing of findings with the committee.

During the 1961-63 biennium the committee gave serious attention to the question. They saw a number of problems involved and brought a report giving pros and cons for some kind of personnel ministerial service without bringing a special recommendation. The conference delegates picked this up and asked the committee to study it further in greater depth and bring a recommendation to the 1965 biennial session. The following recommendation was brought to the 1965 session of General Conference at Kidron, Ohio:

"For the sake of providing a churchwide source of information on ministerial personnel, we recommend setting up a Ministerial Information Center, administered by the Ministerial Committee of Mennonite General Conference and using the services of the office of the executive secretary of General Conference."

The delegate body approved this recommendation and steps were made toward its implementation. The church is invited to use this resource. Because of his broad background of experience in the life of the church and its congregations, Executive Secretary Howard Zehr is in a position to give counsel to congregational and conference leaders in the selection of pastoral leadership. He has served three pastorates in Illinois and one in northern Indiana prior to becoming general secretary of the South Central Conference, and later executive secretary of Mennonite General Conference. You are encouraged to register your needs and concerns with Mennonite General Conference, Scottsdale, Pa. 15683. — D.

Antichrist Is Here

Often we look for the Antichrist at the wrong place. We think of his being revealed in the last time and miss his presence at the present time. The Antichrist is that which stands in the place of Christ, be he man or mammon.

Many overlook the Antichrist in nationalism. While there is place to honor one’s nation the Christian dare not narrow down the gospel and love to one nation. God is the global God. Christ is the cosmic Christ. No one nation or race or people is the pet of His creation or redemption. Nor is God a protector, respecter, or blesser of some over others. All sin and all who sin are equally under judgment. One nation is as loved by Him as another. And our love and concern must be for all. The cry, "our nation, right or wrong," is the cry of the Antichrist.

Without doubt militarism is the Antichrist. It claims absolute loyalty and life itself. When militarism calls none dare disclaim its authority or its rightness. No personal or corporate conscience dare declare its procedure pagan without severe punishment. Militarism claims first loyalty in the lives of multitudes. And whenever or wherever first loyalty is given to any but God, the Antichrist is in control.

Materialism is the Antichrist. Whenever the pull for mammon competes with the claims of Christ and right the Antichrist is seeking to reign. Whenever we yield to putting money ahead of persons the Antichrist is doing his work.

Atheism is the Antichrist, not only when we declare bravely and openly our disbelief in God but when we exercise practical unbelief by simply ignoring God’s commandments in certain situations. Most today do not preach their atheism. They practice it even while they protest it. There are one hundred who will fight to protect God’s Word to every one who will practice it. So there is a lot of practical atheism around.

On and on one can go pointing out the fact that as the Apostle John says in 1 John 4:3 the Antichrist "even now already is it in the world." — D.
Until We Have Voices
By Katie Funk Wiebe

We, in the church, have frequently assured ourselves of the power of words. I've said so myself and I've heard others say that "the pen is mightier than the sword."

We have now come to a juncture in church and national history when we will have to determine whether the pen is not only mightier than violence, but whether it is also mightier and preferable to protest. I use the word protest not in its old meaning of verbal dissent, but in its newer meaning which includes marches, demonstrations, and similar activities.

A recent Time essay points out that many of today's protesters have switched from verbal to physical dissent because "no one pays attention to words any longer." These people say they've tried language and it hasn't worked. Dialogue has not solved the race question, stopped the war in Vietnam, or eased the problems on college campuses. Young people in the church would add it hasn't turned the church into a vital fellowship of God-followers.

The death of students at Kent State and Jackson State was a confession of the ultimate failure of words, as violence always is. Are the increasing number of protests (the use of "body rhetoric") also an indication of the failure of words?

Obviously something has happened to language when large masses of people from various segments of our population are becoming disenchanted with words and are turning to other methods to make their voices heard.

The Time essay points out that we are moving out of an age of print into an age of electronic media, and popular philosophers like Marshall McLuhan and Herbert Marcuse are teaching that words are less important than signs, symbols, and pictures.

But this is not the only reason why words are being discounted. News media, advertising agencies, public speakers and writers, even the ordinary person, all help to debase language so much so that even the church, where the Word and words always have been strongly supported, has lost ground. Daily Bible reading, preaching, religious literature have all been the subject of a barrage of criticism.

In an era when personal testimony is being emphasized, we need to recognize that there is a moral and immoral use of words. Virginia Mollenkott writes that evangelicals are guilty of using language immorally in their desire to make an event appear better than it really is in order to achieve certain goals of money, attendance, or other support. They think they must color or romanticize an event to make it appear better than it really is to keep the people coming.

When I was working at the Mennonite Brethren Publishing House I read stacks of church bulletins regularly. What I discovered there, I am sure holds true for other groups.

I found that church services were sometimes described beforehand in all manner of glowing words. Services were always "challenging" and "inspiring," newcomers were always "warmly welcomed," singing was always "heartily."

At most one hopes or prays the service will prove to be uplifting. But these opinion words were always written as accomplished facts. When a church member reads such words for half a lifetime, knowing that some services will be fairly ordinary, others even dull, and a few highly edifying, in spite of what adjectives are applied, is it any wonder that words like "challenging," "inspiring," and "blessed" have as much effect as a dull knife at Sunday noon if the roast happens to be a wiry old rooster.

I was a member of a church at a time when it first adopted a printed church bulletin. We heralded this aid to failing memories as a great forward thrust. Over the years many young people have gone to church each Sunday to receive a bulletin with a picture of a church building on the cover and a list of weekly activities related to that building on the inside. According to McLuhan and others, pictures speak loudly in a technological era. Is it any wonder then that this group of people subconsciously think of the church as a building and its prime work as that which takes place within that location?

I think we have allowed language to erode also by letting words like brother and sister become formal titles for church members, instead of restricting their use to indicate the relationship of believers in Christ.

We do damage to language and to the psyche of conscientious and uncritical persons, often the old and the young, by putting many very human projects and activities under the label of "the Lord's work" in order to get their support.

Aldous Huxley once wrote that we commit "intellectual blunders [in language] because it suits our interests to do so." Most of the weaknesses in language have come about because the speaker or writer has wanted to achieve a certain effect whether he was selling deodorant or promoting the gospel. That cause has become more important than the truth of his words.

Many people after the recent student killings on college campuses are seriously considering protest. I would like to make a plea that we need to consider language once again to push the issues of the gospel and of peace. The church needs a voice — as powerful as Vice-President Agnew's. The Time essay pleads for healing words. Words can become this when the hearers have faith in the authority behind them. When have Christians had a better opportunity than today to speak such words?

Generally speaking, in looking at our past it is fair to say that we have been somewhat guilty of neglecting the physical needs of man and were content just to "preach" to hungry, downtrodden, poorly clothed people. Now, thank God, this attitude is changing and our social consciences are being awakened. Having said that, however, it seems to me that the pendulum might be swinging to another extreme position.

For instance, I have heard from several sources recently that as Christians we must give to persons who express need without asking questions, setting limitations, or establishing guidelines. I wonder if I might take the liberty to push this viewpoint to its logical conclusion.

What would happen if, the next time I am confronted with this idea, I would graciously ask each of its proponents for fifty dollars for the needs of my family? At that point maybe the pendulum will swing back nearer center and remind us that there is a need for Spirit-directed decision-making even when it comes to charitable giving. — Richard Bartholomew, North Lima, Ohio.

Begin Again!
Where You Are
By Willis L. Breckbill

Most churches provide some instruction for beginning the Christian life. It’s often supposed that after the catechism or after the baptism or confirmation as the case may be, the Christian life is established for the rest of the person’s days. It may be compared to a car that starts out in a certain gear and then is stuck there. A whole life can be spent in second or low gear when it should be shifted to high.

For many, life is dull, sour, and empty. But there is hope. You can begin again because today is the first day of the rest of your life. The good news from God is that man can always begin again. There can be many beginnings. Don’t stay in undesirable ruts. Begin again.

Maybe life is sour because relationships in the family are rough. Mom and Dad are arguing with each other. The kids are irritable, ill-behaved, and insulting. Home is not a comfortable place to be. Everyone seems to be finding someplace to go to get away from each other. That family can begin again. Your family can begin again and you can begin that beginning. You can find forgiveness with God and the grace to forgive the members of your family. Fear of one another is replaced by faith. Division is replaced by harmony of purpose. A comfortable atmosphere replaces an atmosphere of competition.

Maybe life has been rough. The tensions of the job are getting to you. The unpaid bills are bulging the desk drawer. The family demands on your time disturb your plans with the fellows or the club. Temper boils through thin skin into an explosion. The wife of a minister who had great skill in the pulpit but an uncontrolled temper at home said, "When you’re up there, I think you shouldn’t come down. And when you’re down I think you shouldn’t go up." You can begin again with a new life. In God’s grace your past failings are forgiven. Don’t be bound by them.

What about your work? How are things there? Do the guys in the shop get to you? Does the gang in the office tear you up? For many the daily work, whether behind a desk or behind a bench or a conveyor is boredom. Every day is blue Monday. Motivation for work is limited to the paycheck. Daily life is lifeless. But it doesn’t need to be. There can be purpose in your work. The gang, the guys can be your responsibility to make life more pleasant. It gets more pleasant for you.

Maybe all of life seems empty. You may have adequate means to live on or you may be a pauper, but your soul is in poverty. That is what Jesus Christ is all about. "For you know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sake he became poor, so that by his poverty you might become rich." There’s your hope. "Begin again! Today is the first day of the rest of your life.”

Not As a Thief

Oh Death, thou wilt not pilfer me
When thou shalt come, on silent wing;
While loved ones mourn the lifeless clay,
Or somber be the songs they sing.

For then, O Death, I shall have wealth;
Arrived, I shall be; run, the race;
No longer tears my meat, but joy
When I shall see my Father’s face.

Then shall my faith be realized;
Hope be my fruit, all ripe at last.
Then shall I breathe love’s atmosphere,
Pure heaven’s air, eternal, vast.

There shall I quit me of all pain
And gnawing hunger of the soul.
In company of all the blest
I shall be free from Time’s harsh toll.

No, Death, thou canst not rob from me
When thou wilt come, some day or night;
For I shall fall asleep to wake
To joy, — and everlasting light.

— J. Paul Sauder

This book is an eye-opener into the lives of millions who suffer from hunger in America, on the one hand, and into the politics of intrigue and greed of politicians on the other who conspire to subsidize the rich.

The reading of this book stirs one's righteous indignation and makes the reader wonder if there are 10 percent of men in politics who are honest and concerned about the problems of mankind.

The author tells how a few senators, among them the late Robert Kennedy, exposed the stark reality of hunger and malnutrition in the nation. He denounced federal programs were proposed, how various committees in Congress protected the interests of the rich farmers, the food manufacturing lobbies, the milk distributors, etc., with no concern for the poor. When programs for distribution of surplus to the poor were set up, state agencies stalled the distribution. The milk program for children was set up not to help the children, but admittedly to benefit the producing farmer. The food stamp program only intensified the dilemma of the poor, and made hunger more acute.

The author says, "The politics of hunger in America is a dismal story of human greed and callousness, of immorality sanctioned and aided by the government of the United States. But it is also a story that does provide hope that men can change things, that men do care about fulfilling countries' highest ideals and do care about their fellow human beings."

This book should be available in church libraries and be read and discussed widely. — Nelson E. Kaufman.

The Black Sheep is a marvellously funny and perceptive satire on "Society" by a very good children's author. However, whereas younger readers may be able to read and comprehend the story, both the style of humor and the message and its form are suited best for junior-high age and up.

The black sheep is born into a society of white sheep living on a remote island of the North Sea. In this "advanced" society the sheep busily themselves with shearing each other's wool and then knitting sweaters to keep themselves warm. The black sheep refuses to fit into this role but rather keeps his own wool and spends his time planting gardens. His quiet but revolutionary style of life is attractive to many of the young lambs and so disturbs the whole ordered structure of things that the authorities feel they must deal with the threat he presents in a very drastic manner. There is a long period of oppression before a revolution comes peacefully.

This is a warm and humorous story which satirizes a very un-funny reality. It is a good consciousness-raising book for young people and would make a good discussion book for youth groups. Excellent for church libraries. — William E. Herschberger.

This small (5 1/4 x 4 1/4 inches) book is exquisitely illustrated by fifteen gemlike miniature paintings of Amish life. The illustrations of the Lord's Prayer are on the left-hand page and the full-color illumination on the right-hand page. They are the work of George Kraus who spent many happy years among the Amish of Pennsylvania.

These paintings reflect the simplicity and beauty of Amish life. There is a primitive and childlike quality to these paintings somewhat like those of Grandma Moses. I was particularly impressed by the artist's inclusion of lightning in the impending storm scene illustrating the phrase "and the powers of heaven shook," the beautiful rainbow and the stillness of the same orchard/field scene depicting "and the glory."

This sturdy bound book is enclosed in an attractive cover such as to make this an unusual gift for a person of any age and appropriate to any occasion. It is in every respect just what the jacket suggests: "A book to cherish and treasure forever." Excellent for church libraries. — Gerald C. Studer.

A booklet of this kind is rare. It presents very simply the necessary steps to be taken by a pastoral committee in the setting of a pulpit or a congregation. The use of this book would help many congregations avoid pitfalls in this area.

Suggestions are made on how to go about the task, how to get off to the right start, the kind of preliminary work to be done, where to look for prospects, how to evaluate recommendations, and a host of other considerations.

Helpful and necessary information is here brought together in a practical way. Even though the booklet speaks primarily of Baptists and deals with the popular Protestant concept, congregational leaders in searching for a pastor would do well to purchase and study this booklet before taking any steps in their work. It would be good to have this in the church library so it would be available whenever needed. — Howard Zehr.

This is a companion volume to the author's book, Meditations for the New Mother. The aim of the author is to create right thinking in the expectant mother's mind. From experience, she writes about the many things a woman thinks about during this period. It helped me to relieve the sense of isolation and helped me understand the thoughts and feelings of an expectant mother... — Mrs. C. J. Ramer.

Intended for new Christians, this book explains the meaning of the new birth experience and the Christian life. It also points out the problems of the Christian who confesses his sin and receives Christ as his Savior. Guidelines are presented for his growth in Christ in the areas of Holy Spirit indwelling, Bible reading and prayer, assurance of salvation, relating to church, and the cost of discipleship.

The message of this book comes through in clear, understandable style. Strongly rooted in the appropriate Scripture texts, the meaning of the new life in Christ is explained very adequately for the new Christian. The book is designed in an attractive format and is intended as a gift selection. It is highly recommended for this use as well as for the church library. — Harold D. Lehman.

Jesus and the Disinherited, by Howard Thurman. Abingdon 1959. 112 pp. $1.25, paper.

This is a paperback edition of the book first published in 1949. Howard Thurman, for over 30 years, has been an outstanding preacher. A grandson of a slave, Thurman poignantly recaptures a fresh view of the flesh-and-blood Jesus in Roman-conquered Palestine. The other essays are on fear, deception, hate, and love. This is good reading and faithful gospel. Thurman is one of the unsung heroes of the years before the Negro revolution. He was one of the spiritual mentors of Martin Luther King, Jr. But in the day of black militancy, white savagery and benign neglect, these words may be too mellow. — John A. Lapp.

This book concerns itself with the question of women and their role in the church. It is written for a method of making proper decisions. In the Postscript, illustrations are given of biblical quotations of extremes to be balanced with comments on how, if it can be or is, reached. — Ed. Stalter.

It points out to us the significance and value of celebrations and festival days as they are observed in the family. We are cautioned to choose rituals that do not camouflage the true significance of the occasion but rather deepen its true meaning. Many of our holidays, even those which have Christian origin, are so commercialized that their real meanings are atrophied in the heart. These and other general explanations of why the "great days" should be taught is observed in the family are explained in the first section of the book under the title "Family Life. Festivals, and Rituals."

Part two, "Family Doings, for the Christian Year," deals specifically with Christian holidays, mentioning in addition to the common ones some that most families give little thought to but perhaps with Christian perspective. It is an attractively written book valuable to any Christian family in today's hurried, complex society. This book is good for families with children of all ages. — Jocele Meyer.
"Hundreds of people are being arrested here. Torture is going on in the prisons. The secret police are posing as Buddhists to attack and destroy the true Buddhist leadership."

So writes Don Luce to Atlee Beechy, former Vietnam Christian Service director. Luce, who spent nine years in Vietnam with International Voluntary Service, is back in South Vietnam after several years in the United States, during which time he co-authored the book, Vietnam: The Unheared Voices.

Torture by the Saigon police is reported to have been brutal during the recent crackdown on Vietnamese student dissent. On April 21, ten of the arrested young people were released. Luce gives case histories.

"Do Huu lies in semi-shock in a laboratory at the College of Agriculture which has been converted into a dispensary for the ten released prisoners. His fingernails are blackened from having pins pushed underneath. He appears to be almost deaf. 'Soap water was put into his ears and then his ears were beaten,' a student explained.

"Miss Caothi Que Hoang, a teacher of philosophy at Doan Thi Diem High School in Can Tho, forces a tired smile when visitors come. Her knees are swollen three times their normal size and black-and-blue welts cover her tiny arms. 'They beat me with their police clubs,' she stated simply."

But there are even more indignities for her. "Even worse than the torture was the indignity of being completely undressed in front of several policemen who watched and drank whiskey while she was being beaten. At times Miss Que Hoang's new husband, Nguyen Ngoc Phuong, was brought into the room to watch her being tortured — an attempt to get him to sign confession papers," relates Luce.

The torture methods used are sickening: electrodes are attached to sensitive parts of the body, like the ears and the tongue; soapy water is forced into the mouth until the stomach of the victim is bloated, and then he is tramped upon; lighted cigarettes are extinguished on sensitive parts of the body of the victim hanging from the ceiling; billy clubs are used to beat the kneecaps and neck.

The torture leaves students with legs paralyzed, kneecaps swollen, ears deaf, fingernails blackened, and bodies covered with black-and-blue welts.

"The government claims that it did not torture or manhandle the students, but that they exhausted themselves to make themselves appear ill," says Luce.

The condition of three students who were not released and who did not appear with the others in the April 20 Military Field Court trial because they were "too ill" was described by the newspaper Tin Sang on April 11; One is unconscious, another's hearing is almost completely gone and his legs are paralyzed, and the third's legs are paralyzed and his kneecaps show little reflex action.

A government spokesman, Nguyen Ngoc Huyen, refused to comment on the accuracy of the article. But the paper was confiscated, the ninth time in less than a month, because the article was deemed "harmful to national security."

"Article 7 of the Constitution of South Vietnam specifically prohibits the use of torture or of confessions obtained by torture, threat, or force," explains Luce. "Yet signed statements obtained in this way are used extensively in the trials of political prisoners. In the case of the students, the government denies that it has tortured or manhandled them, but will not comment on their obvious disfigurement when they appear in court."

The gravity of the situation has led leading Vietnamese, like Father Nguyen Huy Lich, a respected Dominican priest, to start investigation. Doctors and nurses who treated prisoners during the day in preparation for the next night of torture corroborated reports of mistreatment.

On March 31 Father Lich and seven other priests called upon the Saigon government to provide humane treatment of its prisoners.

"Others, like former Minister Vu Van Man, Vietnam's foremost legal authority, have joined the struggle against torture in prisons," says Luce.

Leo Dorsey, a volunteer social worker with the Unitarian Universalist Committee on Vietnam, on April 21 went to the U.S. Embassy to request a private interview with American Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker for himself and a small group of American volunteers. They were concerned because U.S. equipment — like tear gas grenades made by the Federal Laboratories, Inc., in Saltsburg, Pa., which are a part of the U.S. assistance program in Vietnam — is aiding the Saigon government's repression. Dorsey was unable to meet with the Ambassador or with Deputy Ambassador Burguer.

The Fellowship of Reconciliation, Nvack, N.Y., in a memo dated May 26, urged clergy and laymen to ask congressmen to request the Ambassador to Saigon to (1) grant an interview to Leo Dorsey of the Unitarian Universalist Committee in Vietnam and Don Luce of the World Council of Churches and (2) to take effective action to stop the Saigon government's brutal repression of South Vietnamese peace demonstrators.

The Fellowship of Reconciliation remonstrated with the American press for its failure to report and interpret these events to their American readers. "We align ourselves with these students, and will seek every way possible to identify with them more directly," they say in a statement on "Student Protests in South Vietnam."

Repression of these protesters seems to have reached a new high. "Never have I seen the repression and terrorism by the government so bad," says Luce. "Please help the world to hear the voices of the Vietnamese people," he pleads. "They are killed when they speak out."

Luu Hoang Thao gives the reasons for the student struggle: "We love our country; we struggle for freedom and the right to life for Vietnamese. We struggle for the autonomy of the university. We struggle for the freedom of the press. We struggle against the war. Our sin is the sin of loving our country and loving our people."

A United Methodist Church leader has challenged President Nixon to appoint a governmental representative to the World Council of Churches.

Bishop John Wesley Lord, president of the Council of Bishops, commenting on the President's appointment of a "personal emissary" to the Vatican declared: "The United Methodist Church historically opposes all 'establishment' of religion with government. Such establishment places the power of all society behind the religious expression of some part of society. However, the United Methodist Church must listen to the concerns and insights of churchmen and churches in all nations."

"It would therefore appear proper that since Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge is to serve as personal emissary, without title, to the Vatican, it would be a valid assumption that the United States government should relate in like manner to the World Council of Churches in Geneva."

"We will await further action from the President to justify his present action."

Evangelist Billy Graham expects a "strong" move toward the Protestant evangelical faith in Europe to have significant impact on U.S. religion.

America always follows Europe on theology, he said at a press conference held on his arrival in New York last June, for a five-day crusade at Shea Stadium. The services continued a series launched last summer in Madison Square Garden. Mr. Graham called attention to European, particularly German, indications of a resurgence of evangelical Christianity which he identified with this position and called it the "historical" or "orthodox" religion of the biblical message.

Curtis W. Tarr, director of Selective Service, said that the U.S. Supreme Court extension of the right of conscientious objection does not "open the door" to massive exemptions.

He referred to a Supreme Court decision declaring "deeper held" moral and ethical conviction on a par with religious training and belief as qualification for the conscientious objector status.

Mr. Tarr, speaking at a press conference, explained four standards which the 4,087 local draft boards will be instructed to apply in judging application from ethical and moral objectors:
1. Registrants' beliefs must be unquestionably "sincere."
2. Opposition must be to all war and not to particular wars.
3. Beliefs must be grounded in something more than a personal moral code and must have taken the thinking of "other wise men" into account and reflect some system of belief beyond personal views.
4. Objector's outlook must be the result of "some kind of rigorous training."

The World Conference of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church adopted a declaration on human relations calling for greater commitment to Christian ideals of brotherhood.

"We are commissioned by the Holy Scriptures to witness to the gospel's teaching that before God, mankind is one," the statement said. "We recognize that prejudice and discrimination are sins (that) grind down the victim and scar the soul of the person guilty of them."

The resolution was strongly endorsed by multiracial spokesmen from India, Ceylon, the Philippines, the West Indies, Africa, and other countries including black and white delegates from the U.S. There was no opposition.

A major program agency of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) allocated $5,000 for a controversial ministry to U.S. draft resisters in Canada and their families in the U.S.

The action had been under consideration for weeks by the United Christian Missionary Society. Supporters of the ministry, which is coordinated in Canada through the Canadian Council of Churches, say it is as necessary as ministries to "prisoners and other law violators."

The largest survey of its kind ever made has confirmed that the more conservative one's religious upbringing, the more conservative will be one's attitude toward sex.

More than 20,000 Americans participated in the survey directed by Dr. Robert Thanasisou, assistant professor of psychology at The Johns Hopkins University and just published by the magazine Psychology Today.

The survey also showed almost as strong a link between conservatism in other areas of life and sexual inhibition.

Dr. Thanasisou, in an interview, said the results of his study had been somewhat surprising because the survey had been conducted among the magazine's readers, most of whom are under 30, college graduates, with incomes of $10,000 or more. Consequently, he expected a more uniformly liberal response.

The survey also revealed that, at least among this group of young Americans, there is a strong feeling that law should not govern sexual behavior, and even the majority of Catholics surveyed believed that abortion is acceptable under some circumstances.

Premarital chastity was rejected by 90 percent of those responding, 76 percent of the married women having had intercourse before marriage.

Included among other findings is the rather wide-ranging survey were these:

— Many women are adopting sexual standards once considered suitable for men only, the large numbers of both sexes are "considering" new forms of sexual behavior, such as swapping mates.
— Only 8 percent of males and 9 percent of females responding described their sex lives as "very satisfactory."
— Illegal abortions had been performed on about 14 percent of the women respondents.
— Almost as many women (36 percent) as men (40 percent) reported they had had extramarital affairs.

A new program on alcohol education — the "Four-Dimensional Key to the Cause of Alcoholism (4-DK)" — was launched in Atlantic City, N.J., at the 51st World Conference of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church.

As was the successful Adventist Five-Day Plan to Stop Smoking launched in 1966, the alcohol program will be a free community service. The 4-DK program was "premiered" during the last week of the conference.

More than a million people throughout the world have participated in the Adventist 5-Day Plan to Stop Smoking, according to a report presented by Ernest H. J. Steed, head of the denomination's narcotics, tobacco, and alcohol education program.

As he completed his report, 100 Adventist children tossed 12,000 pink "dope" capsules into the audience of adults. The capsules contained strips of paper bearing the message, "If you're looking for extra zest and purpose in life, here is the real 'dope' for you."

The "real dope" urged departure from the "chemical counterfeits of pleasure" in exchange for "real life" based on the Christian concept of the power of Jesus Christ to build self-control.

Some 42 percent of people in trouble still seek a clergyman first, the director of the American Foundation of Religion and Psychiatry reported in St. Paul, Minn.

"In spite of the low esteem achieved by the church today, this figure seems to be on the increase," Donald E. Smith of New York told the annual meeting of the American Association for Mental Health.

Mr. Smith said that one of every 10 Americans needs psychiatric treatment, but the nation has fewer than 5,000 psychiatrists, psychologists, and psychiatric social workers — and many areas have none.

The solution, he said, is to recruit and train people in disciplines not immediately associated with the professions of psychiatry and psychology.

According to Mr. Smith, "the clergyman represents the most natural and obvious source of adjunctive service to the mental health team."

He pointed out that the U.S. has some 260,000 clergy in parishes, of whom 20,000 to 25,000 already have had some clinical training in hospitals, prisons, and other institutions.

Evangelist Billy Graham concluded his five-day crusade at Shea Stadium in New York, with a call for Christians to give increased attention to the Holy Spirit.

"You can't have the revival that is necessary today without an emphasis on the Holy Spirit," said the 51-year-old Southern Baptist minister. The success of his crusades, Mr. Graham added, was not due to organization and publicity but to the work of the Holy Spirit.

Abortion and laws making termination of pregnancy easier were condemned as "evil" and "immoral" by the 20th biennial clergy-lay congress of the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of North and South America.

Singled out for condemnation was a New York State law, which went into effect during the meeting, that gives a woman the right, in consultation with her physician, to decide an abortion up to the 24th week of pregnancy. There is no residence requirement.

"We . . . must give a clarion call to all the people of our nation warning them of this serious violation of the reverence for life by the indiscriminate exercises of abortion," said one approved document on social and moral issues.
Burkholder Sets Goals for Goshen College

The goals for Goshen College will center in the church. J. Lawrence Burkholder, president-elect of the college, told its Board of Overseers at a meeting at Coraopolis, Pa., on Aug. 1.

Burkholder, who is Victor S. Thomas Professor of Divinity at Harvard Divinity School and who will assume responsibilities at Goshen College on July 1, 1971, addressed the Board on the goals he has set for the college. He said, "Goshen College must form strong personal ties with churches. It needs the churches in order to serve them. And Goshen College will work closely with church agencies and boards."

Daniel Kaufman, of Scottsdale, Pa., Chairman of the Board, presided at the meeting. He reported that the Board acted unanimously to accept the president-elect's goals and instructed the staff to develop them further and plan for the necessary financial undergirding.

Burkholder told the Board, "Just as there is in the church a variety of views held by members, so there is at Goshen College a great spread of ideals, hopes, and backgrounds among students. The goal of Goshen College will be to serve each student and give him the preparation he needs to realize his maximum potential."

Burkholder indicated his desire to provide preparation necessary for the "new professional." The "new professionals," he pointed out, are the "new breed of lawyers, doctors, teachers, psychologists, ministers, social workers, nurses — or similar practitioners — who bring together the knowledge and power of the profession, with the idealism, vision, and enthusiasm of youth."

The Christian disciple must understand his role as a "reconciler," not a revolutionary. Burkholder said, "Goshen College will offer all students the opportunity to rise above the average in Christian life and experience. "Radical discipleship" goes far beyond nominal Christianity; it is the carrying out and promoting of the New Testament command to be 'tentmaking ministers.' It brings New Testament principles and historic Anabaptism into the 20th century."

Where two or three gather in Christ's name, "a church has begun just as surely as it did for our ancestors at the time of the Reformation. These young persons are disciples, members of the disciplined community, and ready to fulfill the Great Commission. Their activity is spontaneous and their commitment to the church is voluntary and strong." Burkholder emphasized.

He said his own role will be to build personal ties with congregations and individuals and develop programs for faculty to visit with and speak to church leaders and members. Other items of high importance are to find ways of further cooperation and of being included in the programs of church boards and agencies, and to know personally the northern Indiana community — from company president to factory worker.

Kaufman summed up the Board's response in saying, "Dr. Burkholder today affirmed the purposes and objectives that have guided Goshen College, the Mennonite Board of Education, and the Board of Overseers since their earliest days. The Board has shown genuine enthusiasm and excitement over Dr. Burkholder's statement of goals and is eager to work with him and his staff to see them achieved."

Members Reported Safe

No loss of life or serious injury has been reported among members of south Texas Mennonite churches in the wake of Hurricane Celia. The storm, termed "the worst to hit the Texas Gulf Coast in 30 years" by various news sources, struck the resort city of Corpus Christi with winds up to 145 miles per hour on Monday, Aug. 3. Several small bayside towns were virtually destroyed as the storm swept inland.

Administrators at Mennonite Board of Missions in Elkhart, Ind., were unable to make immediate contact with Home Missions and Voluntary Service personnel in south Texas due to an almost total blackout of power and communication there. Efforts to make phone contact with Mathis proved unsuccessful until Aug. 6 when Simon Gingerich of the Home Missions Office reached Atanacio Paiz, pastor of the Calvary Mennonite Church. Paiz said that the parsonage was severely damaged, while the Mathis church lost a portion of the roof.

On Aug. 4 James Miller, a member of the Corpus Christi congregation, reported extensive water damage and the roof was blown off the Prince of Peace Mennonite Church. To his knowledge, all members of the congregation escaped injury.

Leonard Garber, VS administrator, made phone contact with VS-er David Nofziger at the Corpus Christi unit in the Molina area of the city on Aug. 5. Nofziger said that the unit was "providentially spared" while adjacent homes received major damage. At Robstown, ten miles west of Corpus Christi, only windows were broken at the unit house.

Nofziger, who has been involved with the Red Cross, attributed three deaths in the Corpus Christi area directly to the storm, while at least six others stemmed from heart attacks.

Mennonite Disaster Service officials arrived on Aug. 5 to ascertain MDS involvement in south Texas areas most severely hit by Hurricane Celia.

EMBMC Leadership Appointments

The Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, Salunga, has announced two executive appointments in a reorganization of responsibilities at Salunga headquarters.

Ira J. Buckwalter, Intercourse, Pa., has resigned from the Treasurer's office effective Dec. 31, 1970. Buckwalter has served as Board Treasurer for the past 24 years. A banker by profession, Buckwalter assisted his predecessor on a part-time basis, 1943-47.

Norman Shenk, Mount Joy, Pa., will succeed Buckwalter as Treasurer. Shenk served 17 years in the Business Office, and more recently he served as Assistant Treasurer.

Ira Buckwalter will continue to serve as Secretary for Institutions and as Executive Secretary of the administrative committee for the Landis Homes retirement community. He will also be able to give more time to developing Eastern Board's investment program, Church Investment Associates.

Buckwalter has also been appointed interim Secretary of the Board as of December 1, 1970, to serve in place of Paul N. Kraybill, Landisville, Pa. Kraybill, who serves both as Secretary of the Board and Secretary of Overseas Missions, has been granted a sabbatical leave as of this same date. In view of his appointment as Executive Secretary for the Study Commission on Church Organization, Kraybill has been granted permission to spread his sabbatical over two years.

Harold S. Stauffer, Lancaster, Pa., has been appointed Secretary for Overseas Missions. Kraybill will continue as Associate Overseas Secretary, with administrative responsibility for Asia, Europe, and Haiti.
College Credit for Service Experience

The Council of Mennonite Colleges is making college credit available to persons serving in the various service programs sponsored by the Mennonite Church. Through special seminars, language study programs, and a readings course, up to 14 hours of college credit can be earned during a person's service experience.

Currently five MCC Paxmen assigned to the Congo are studying French in Brussels where both intermediate and elementary French are offered. Following completion of language study, they will move on to the Congo where a seminar providing on-location orientation is planned. This seminar will include consideration of recent political and historical developments in contemporary Africa and a discussion of African economics. Ken Koehn, a member of the Teachers Abroad Program in the Congo, will be serving as instructor for this course. Koehn has an MS in Political Science from Kansas State University. The CMC also provides college credit for the study of tribal languages.

A similar seminar is being conducted in San Jose, Costa Rica, for MCC Pax and TAP personnel assigned to Bolivia. In San Jose, this group will be joined by personnel assigned by the Conservative Mennonite Board of Missions, Irwin, Ohio, and the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions, Salunga, Pa., making a total of 28 persons studying economics and community development under CMC auspices in Latin America. Leading this program will be Gonzales Vega, a professor at the University of Costa Rica. Following completion of this course, the MCC Pax and TAP personnel will move on to Cochabamba, Bolivia, where they will participate in a 14-week Spanish language course on the elementary or intermediate levels.

A readings course will be offered beginning in October of this year through June 1971. These courses are designed similar to correspondence courses and attempt to help the student focus on the culture which surrounds him. Each student will maintain a personal journal to record observations of the culture in which he is living. He will be required to take two examinations during the course. Six books will be required reading for the course. Elmer Neufeld, professor of philosophy at Bluffton College, and Herbert Minnich of Goshen College will provide state-side leadership for the Africa and Latin-America readings courses respectively.

This new format replaces the Service Education Abroad Program which attempted to make possible through independent study and course seminars a full year's college credit during a 26-month service assignment. It is an attempt to provide a smaller number of credit hours to a much larger group of persons. In providing these services, the CMC can make available to participants in service programs the opportunity of earning college credit at minimal cost during one of the most important learning experiences of the person's life.

Lavon Welty, director of personnel services at Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pa., will assume responsibility for the Council of Mennonite Colleges' international education program in cooperation with Justus Holsinger, secretary of international services of the Council of Mennonite Colleges. Welty was appointed to this position at the recent MCC Executive Committee meetings in Elkhart, Ind., July 24, 25.

Welty feels that there is potential for expansion of these services to other service participants. Through the development of additional orientation seminars, locating additional language study resources and the development of readings courses for other areas of the world, the CMC hopes that college credit can be made available to persons serving in any of the service programs sponsored by the Mennonite Church.

History of MCC Available

Mennonite Central Committee 1920-1970 is the theme in the July 1970 issue of The Mennonite Quarterly Review. Contents include:

- Historical Background to the Formation of the Mennonite Central Committee by Guy F. Hershberger, who worked and traveled extensively for MCC Peace Section, is Professor Emeritus of History at Goshen College, and was former editor of MQR.

- The Impact of MCC Service on American Mennonites by Robert Kreider, who is President of Bluffton College and presently Vice-Chairman of the Mennonite Central Committee, after having served for a number of years in MCC relief work.

- A Theology of Service by Peter Dyck, who is veteran MCC worker from the early 1940's in England through refugee service after World War II, and after a few years as pastor in a Kansas congregation, returned to MCC as an administrator.

- The Peace Mission of the Mennonite Central Committee by John A. Lapp, who is Professor of History at Eastern Mennonite College on a two-year leave of absence from EMC to serve as Executive Secretary of the Peace Section of MCC.

- The Many Activities of the Mennonite Central Committee by Larry Kehler, who worked for several years in Information Services of the Mennonite Central Committee and is editor of The Canadian Mennonite.

The Mennonite Central Committee—God's Miracle Among Us: The Meaning of the Past Fifty Years by Orie O. Miller, one of the first relief workers for the newly founded Mennonite Central Committee and Executive Secretary of MCC during the period of its greatest expansion, the 1940's; to some, MCC himself.

Mennonite Central Committee Material Aid 1941-1969 by John Hostettler, director of MCC Material Aid since 1959, sometime after a European tour of service with MCC.

Statistics on Mennonite Central Committee Personnel by Paul Classen, who is office manager at MCC headquarters in Akron 1967-70 and now controller-business manager for MCC in the Congo.

Research Topics on the Mennonite Central Committee and A Mennonite Central Committee Bibliography by Melvin Gingerich, archivist of the Mennonite Church, with supervision of the MCC archives, who served as MCC Peace Section representative in Japan and is author of the major book on those CPS camps which MCC operated during World War II.

Films Explore Human Relationships

Three critical studies in human/race relationships have been recently added to Mennonite Board of Missions' audiovisual library and are now available for congregational use.

J. T., the critically acclaimed drama first shown on the CBS Children's Hour, is the story of a shy, lonely Harlem child whose only friend is an old, one-eyed alley cat named Bones. Through his devotion to a wounded animal, J. T. moved people a little closer to what is real and important in life, while he concurrently discovers his own pride and dignity as well. The superbly produced Carousel Film, 51 minutes in color, carries a $25 rental.

Beginning with an actual spontaneous classroom confrontation, Immigrant from America looks deeply at racism and prejudice in America. It shows how white immigrants gradually scaled the ghetto walls while millions of blacks became ghetto prisoners.

"Immigrant from America is a powerful, emotion-filled motion picture that should be seen by everyone with an interest in the black experience," says The New York Times, the film's producer. "It is a film that will provoke, raise serious questions, and stimulate discussion."

Immigrant from America, 20 minutes in color with free rental, is especially recommended for upper elementary through college-age groups and beyond. Its prime target is those persons who ask, "Why can't they pull themselves up by their bootstraps like we did?"

Our Father is a discussion starter, a haunting film on the experience of brotherhood, a mind-expanding parable. A ten-minute color motion picture from Burt Martin Associates (producers of A New Thing). Our Father is a dialogue between two brothers concerning another brother. It raises the question, "Do we have the right to 'choose' our brothers?"

Rental: free.

These three films, in addition to more than 250 other film and filmstrip titles dealing with issues of vital concern to Mennonite congregations and other groups, are available from Audiovisuals, Box 370, Elkhart, Indiana 46514. A complete catalog listing is available free from the same address.

MDS Cited for Camille Response

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development presented its Public Service Award to the Mennonite Disaster Service for volunteer efforts in helping to provide housing for Hurricane Camille victims in Mississippi and Virginia.

The presentation was made on Sunday evening, July 26, during MCC 50th Anniversary ceremonies in Goshen, Ind. The award was presented to Freeman J. Lambright, chairman of the local Indiana-Michigan MDS unit, who received it on behalf of all MDS volunteers who gave their time and efforts to the work. Kenneth C. Cavanaugh, acting director of HUD's Office of Housing Management, represented HUD Secretary George Romney at the presentation. Cavanaugh quoted Romney as saying, "The work of both Canadian and United States members of the Mennonite Disaster Service is an outstanding example of service to their fellowmen."

"On behalf of MDS," said Lambright, "I gratefully receive this certificate. I wish to thank all the churches in Canada and in the United States who responded to the need."

Following the destruction of Hurricane Camille in August 1969, MDS volunteers donated labor, and using materials supplied by other organizations, built more than 30 homes and farm buildings and repaired over 600.

Corrections Requested for Mennonite Encyclopedia

The reprint of The Mennonite Encyclopedia is under way: Volume I was reprinted in 1969 and Volume II has been submitted to press. The editors are now requesting information about factual mistakes, misprints and misprints in Volumes III and IV.

The following should be observed in submitting corrections to the editors. In view of the fact that this is a reprint by offset process, the text can be revised only in a limited way. Corrections are made only within a line without adding additional lines. This limits the corrections to factual errors, misprints, and misspellings.

The schedule for the reprinting of the Encyclopedia calls for one volume annually. By 1980, a thoroughly revised and up-to-date edition is to be prepared. Suggestions for new articles and major corrections for this revised edition are welcome at all times. The three major Mennonite publishing houses are the publishers of the reprint and the planned revised edition.

Kindly send your corrections and suggestions for the reprint of Volumes III and IV to Melvin Gingerich, Managing Editor, The Mennonite Encyclopedia, Goshen, Ind. 46526, as soon as possible and not later than Dec. 1, 1970.

VS Orientation Focuses on Unit Life

From June 8 to 13, twenty-four youth participated in an Eastern Board VS orientation that attempted to simulate an authentic VS unit setting. To accomplish this, the orientees divided into small groups. VS-CPS Director Leon Stauffer said, "Everyone stayed with his small group all week. He had to make decisions with those persons, eat with, discuss the Scriptures and play games with those persons."

John Miller's book, The Christian Way, served as a focus for the group's study of Matthew 5, 6, and 7. Each morning there was a Bible study period.

The groups used role-playing to let individuals see how they function with other people. Stauffer said, "The way a person makes decisions, his personality, and his leadership or inability to lead will come out. Then he can sit back and say, 'Really, that's the way I am in real life.'"

Each group was hosted by a Lancaster Conference bishop for one day. The groups visited the Mennonite Information Center, went to the Wax Museum or Han's Herr House, and then spent time at a park.

The bishops and orientation groups discussed their spiritual lives, their VS commitment, Mennonite history and ordinances. One VS-er said, "I really liked it; it drew us closer to the bishop and let us know him as a man and not a dictator of the church."

On Friday the groups scattered into local towns to feel the pulse of community life. They asked questions — "Who are the leaders in your community?" "What are the problems?" "How do you feel about them?"

FIELD NOTES

Eastern Mennonite College, Harrisonburg, Va., recently received a bequest of $5,000 from the estate of the late Mrs. Mary B. Berky of Boyertown, Pa.

Myron S. Augsburger, president of the college, expressed appreciation for the gift. "It is persons such as Mrs. Berky who make Christian education a viable option," he said. The money will be used in the development program of the college, which is currently building a new $1.4 million library.

Nine Goshen College students are in a five-week Stratford Festival Seminar in cooperation with Conrad Grebel College and University of Waterloo, of Ontario, Canada. Designed for students wishing for more work in English, music, drama, or speech, the seminar included (1) study of selected elements of aesthetic design, technical execution, and symbolic resonance in Stratford productions, (2) an individual project, and (3) experimentation with essentials applicable to the indigenous theater of the school, church, or community.

The Amzie Yoders, Goshen, Ind., began a four-year term of missionary service in Honduras under EMBMC on Aug. 10. Their address is Apartado 17, San Pedro Sula, Honduras.

The Victor Dorsch family was scheduled to arrive in the United States on furlough from East Africa on Aug. 12. The Dorsches just completed a four-year term of missionary service in Chismao, Somali Democratic Republic, under EMBMC. The address from Aug. 12-26 is Box 38, New Hamburg, Ont. After Sept. 1 it will be 1257 Greystone St., Harrisonburg, Va. 22901.

Grace Keeporl returned on furlough on Aug. 5, having completed a three-year RN assignment in Deder, Ethiopia, under EMBMC. Her address is P. O. Mills, Va., Pa. 17551.

James Stauffers returned from a four-year term of missionary service in Vietnam under EMBMC on Aug. 7. Their address is Eastern Mennonite College, Harrisonburg, Va. 22901.

Fifteen men from the Allenwood Prison worshiped at the Williamsport Mennonite Church, July 12. After the service the men had a fellowship meal at the home of the pastor, Jason Denlinger, who is an Eastern Board home missions worker. Jason reports that this has done much for the Williamsport, Pa., fellowship group, and the men deeply appreciated this opportunity for fellowship.

Each Monday night, Jason Denlinger and a CPS worker visit the men in the Allenwood Prison. Jason reports, "The last session was clear evidence of the Spirit's working as one shared his burden with the group and found partial healing." The nursing department of Eastern Mennonite College will have three new instructors and a new assistant instructor when the fall term begins on Sept. 9, announced Myron S. Augsburger, President.

The three new instructors are Beryl H. Brubaker in medical-surgical nursing from Belleville, Pa.; Olive M. Kuhns in maternal and child care nursing from Hatfield, Pa.; and Alta B. Weaver in medical-surgical nursing from Ephrata, Pa. The assistant instructor is Mamie M. Mellingier in public health nursing from Corfu, N.Y. Approximately 120 students have been enrolled in the nursing curriculum at EMC.

Change of address: Daniel M. Longenecker from Harrisonburg, Va., to 551 E. St., Lebanon, Ore. 97355. Amsey Martin from Listowel to Milverton, Ont.

New members by baptism: eleven at Erisman, Manhe, Pa.; four at Hillcrest, New Hamburg Commandery.

Ivan Maust was ordained to the ministry to serve the Maple Glen Conservative Church, Aug. 2. The officiating bishop was Ivan J. Miller, assisted by Willard Mayer, David Showalter, and Elmer H. Maust. His address is: R. 1, Meyersdale, Pa. 15552.

Wayne S. Weaver, R. 1, Ephrata, Pa. 17522, was ordained deacon for the Martindale congregation on Aug. 1. J. Paul Graybill and John E. Hollinger were in charge.

Readers Say

Submissions to Readers Say column should comment on printed articles.

Just a note of appreciation to you for the Gospel Herald. I have mentally written this letter often because the Herald has been a great source of inspiration to me for years. I cut out and save many of the articles and poems (could we have more of the latter in each issue?)

I never read the Herald but that I am challenged and inspired in my Christian walk. I especially liked "Christian Gratitude," by Christian E. Charles in the July 21 issue. It really helped me start my day off right! Keep up the good work.

— Irma Weaver, Washington, Ill.

During the last century the role of women in society has been a repeated headline. It is clearly stated: "Male and female created he them." The reason given is, "It is not good for man to be alone" (NEB); therefore, the creation of a partner (NEB), "a helper." (Genesis 2:18) (German Bible).

In 1 Corinthians 13 Paul records the order of rank — if this term is permissible — namely, God first, Christ second, and man the head of woman. This order does not warrant the idea that God is a tyrannical despot at the head, and woman a despicable underdog at the bottom. However, it does suggest a relationship in position. Perhaps the thirteen congregations as reported from that survey — entirely apart from superstition — probably hold the right concept regarding "women in control," etc., in church matters.

The reason for the creation of woman must never be lost sight of or her contribution to the Lord's work, which has been of inestimable value. A careful study of the role of women in the Bible, as we have in history, simply verifies their achievements. However, to suggest total equality for all areas of church organization, or society in general, appears to be an attempt to implement ideas difficult to harmonize with the .segregation of the record in Scripture. The Weaver), 3 sons (Enos G., David G., and Paul G.), 15 grandchildren, 6 great-grandchildren, 5 step-grandchildren, one brother (Joseph G.), and 2 sisters (Ada — Mrs. Harry Martin and Mrs. Annie Hahn). He was a member of the Bowmanville Mennonite Church, where funeral services were held July 8, with Wilmer Leaman and Benjamin Weaver officiating; interment in adjoining cemetery.

Roth, Catherine, daughter of the late George and Leah (Wilhelm) Bast, was born in Wilmot Township, Ont., June 8, 1882; died at St. Mary's Hospital, Kitchener, Ont., July 23, 1970; aged 88 y. 1 m. 15 d. On Mar. 8, 1906, she was married to Moses M. Roth. Surviving are 3 sons (Clarence, Milton, and Elmer), 4 daughters (Elmina — Mrs. Clayton Swartzentruber, Irma — Mrs. Lester Swartzentruber, Mrs. Luella Jacky, and Mrs. Selena Wagler), 21 grandchildren, and 10 great-grandchildren. She was a member of the St. Agatha Mennonite Church, where funeral services were held July 26, with Gerald Schwartzentruber and Elmer Schwartzentruber officiating.

Steury, Steve Alan, son of Lewis and Melinda (Schmucker) Steury, was born Nov. 16, 1964; died in a tractor accident July 22, 1970; aged 5 y. 8 m. 6 d. Surviving in addition to his parents are 3 sisters (Pauline — Mrs. David Zook, Linda, and Diana), 3 brothers (Melvin, Edwin, and Leon), his maternal grandfather (Samuel Schmucker), and his paternal grandmother (Mrs. Pete Steury). Funeral services were held at the Cuba Church July 25, with John Yoder and Ralph Yoder officiating; interment in the Yaggy Cemetery, Grabill, Ind.
The Spirit of the Lord in Madhya Pradesh

By John A. Friesen and Jacob H. Flisher

The past year has meant for us a growing concentration of responsibility, resulting from further depletions in missionary personnel and the inability to fill certain leadership gaps with national help. Its uniqueness, therefore, is not one of great conquests but rather the evidence of grace in experiencing the Lord's nearness and seeing Him at work in the lives of those about us.

Cleansing the Lepers

It has been a unique privilege to have Weldon and LuEtta Friesen here to help reshape and update the program at Shantipur Leprosy Homes and Hospital. This has meant training personnel for new skills and trying to set up a program that would be eligible for a government grant-in-aid. It has been a slow process, but there are indications that our application for aid has reached Delhi.

Through its S.E.T. (Survey-Education-Treatment) clinics, Shantipur is regularly in contact with some 1,600 patients, most of whom come from within a 15-mile radius. Two hundred are beggar "squatters" who have colonized on the outskirts of Dhamtari.

What does one accomplish with leprosy patients? The cleansing process seems very slow. Dhobnin, a blind inmate of Shantipur for many years, went to the hospital for a checkup: "What care! From head to toe we are looked over. I even had to put my tongue out." I think she meant to say, "I feel like I am wanted and am somebody. . . . Thanks a heap!"

Preaching the Word

Our ministry in the Word has largely come through two pastoral assignments we have had — one here at Shantipur and the second at the jungle settlement of Christians at Mangal Tarai. As a congregation at Shantipur we have tried to make Mangal Tarai our "small sister" project. A team of three persons from Shantipur has been appointed to bring some leadership and concreteness to the Sunday school and preaching ministry there. On alternate Sundays my wife Genevieve and I take the team, and the other Sundays Weldon Friesens are responsible.

We feel this endeavor has aroused a sense of mission and responsibility on the part of the Shantipur congregation and has helped the Mangal Tarai people feel closer to the rest of the brotherhood. Living in the jungle heartland can make isolated Christians ask "does it make any difference" rather easily. So our challenge is to keep the definitions clear and meaningful as to what it means to be the "church."

Currently the small Mangal Tarai community is busily engaged in a new church building process. For a number of

John A. Friesen and Jacob H. Flisher, serving with Mennonite Board of Missions, are stationed in Madhya Pradesh, India. years already they have been collecting materials and funds, and we had hoped to complete this project much earlier. However, famines, furlough, and spiritual lethargy all worked together to circumvent activity until this last fall.

Paul Husan Shah, a dynamic Alliance pastor, held a series of meetings for us at Mangal Tarai. In a concluding dedicatory and ground-breaking service each family head picked up the pickax and struck the ground, repeating the words of Joshua, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." It once again united the community in a common cause, and as I write these words in February 1970, the foundation is in, solicitation is under way, and we trust that the community can soon hold a dedication service.

Books and People

As part of our assignment this past year Genevieve and I have tried to guide the Literature Boards program in Dhamtari. Bookstores in this land have never been financial assets. Because of their contribution to the spiritual needs of a community they have until recently been accepted as valid subsidy programs. The new climate for the church in India, however, is forcing each program to be tested against its indigenous viability; literature programs not exempt. The past year, therefore, has been a time of exploration to see if the Sahitya Ratna Bhandar could not more nearly achieve this.

The new reading room was completed in May and immediately became a popular student center. Each month more than 3,000 persons sign the attendance register. These are largely non-Christian youth of the town, high school and college students, and other professional persons. Our concern in this project has been to meaningfully encounter the inner lives of those we meet. Properly guided, the use of secular and religious literature can give rise to special study and discussion groups.

The greatest blessing of the year continues to be the abiding presence of the Lord in the person of His Holy Spirit. He has not left us nor forsaken us, and as we have dared to trust Him He has led us into paths of usefulness and joy.

We rejoice that during the past year another congregation has been added to the number of organized congregations in the Mennonite Church in India. One should add that most of the members of this group had been members of other congregations. Nevertheless, this is a definite step forward in the activities of the church.

Which Way Institutions?

It becomes more difficult to see the working of the Spirit in institutions. Is it time to again evaluate the real contributions these institutions make toward the spiritual growth of the church? It is true that many of our workers are dedicated, but there are also those who are involved merely for their own security. Our institutions have no doubt made an impact on the community, and services rendered are appreciated; but again one must question whether the influence has been directed the right way.

We rejoice to see those in the community who realize the value of Dhamtari Christian Hospital and are interested in it, but does their contribution arise from Christian witness or is it merely a way to achieve their own merit?

The work in our medical program has been growing over the past year. Income also has greatly increased as we have moved out of the famine economy. We are thankful for qualified Indian leadership to assume the responsibility of program administration. We need to seriously consider the extent to which we can involve ourselves in added facilities, but it is equally true that our witness is hindered if we lack proper facilities.

Education

Nothing extraordinary has developed in the schools this year. No sooner had we changed to one scheme of education than we had to change back again, resulting in some confusion and complications. Our high school experienced success this year. The need for educational institutions still exists in India, but to increase the number of other high schools in Dhamtari itself makes one wonder if there would be adequate community support to assist these institutions. In our remaining primary school, the program continues as usual. They have been capably managed this past year, but the administrator has expressed his unwillingness to continue for another year.

We do feel that the Spirit has been leading in our activities during the past year, but we also realize that at times we have failed to discern His leading by relying on our own strength. We do trust that in the coming year we shall be more conscious of His leading in our work, and that our fellow workers will be able to more wholeheartedly give themselves to Him.

IF MENNONITE GENERAL CONFERENCE IS NOT A MEETING IS NOT A CONFERENCE IS NOT GENERAL, WHAT IS IT?

A man was asked by his priest to do penance. He had eaten sausage on a day when meat was forbidden in his religion. He insisted that sausage was not meat. The penance of a load of wood delivered to the priest’s house was demanded in spite of his protests. His priest was infuriated when he discovered a load of sawdust dumped at his door. “I said wood,” yelled the priest. With malicious mischief in his voice the parishioner replied, “If sawdust is not wood, sausage is not meat.” That’s magnificent logic but where does it leave the priest?

Some people insist that Mennonite General Conference is a meeting. That’s good logic because every two years there is a big church meeting called Mennonite General Conference. What you see when you see the meeting is the tip of the iceberg.

Mennonite General Conference is much more than a meeting. Similarly, it is more than a conference. There is considerable conferring when the delegates of Mennonite General Conference meet. The church needs to establish a point of view on a variety of issues. It needs to determine priorities for churchwide work. Groups of people, committees, working for the brotherhood need to report what they are doing. They need the counsel of their brethren on next steps. That is conference. But Mennonite General Conference is much more than conference.

Nor does “General” describe Mennonite General Conference. It is not the General Conference Mennonites. It is the Mennonite Church. It is not just the general gathering together of various district conferences. It is an entity in itself that has a job to do for the whole Mennonite Church. So it is “general” only because it includes all congregations and persons in the Mennonite Church. Beyond that, Mennonite General Conference is not general at all. It is really very specific. It is important to see that it is specific so we can respond specifically when specific counsel is needed or when a specific dollar response is called for.

It may be magnificent logic to think of Mennonite General Conference as a meeting, a conference, and something very general. But such thinking is inadequate. If the terms get in our way let’s look at it differently. Ask, what is the total program of the Mennonite Church? Then ask, what are the specific parts of that program accomplished by what just happens to be called Mennonite General Conference. You might even ask a third question, who would do these things if there were no Mennonite General Conference — or whatever name would be used for it?

Mennonite General Conference is a program that carries out functions in the brotherhood that an individual, a congregation, a local conference, or a district would have great difficulty doing alone.

That part of the church’s program in which Mennonite General Conference is directly involved includes the following:
1. A “gathered life” emphasis with training seminars on worship in many areas of the church
2. A new Mennonite hymnal widely accepted in the brotherhood as the best ever
3. A denominational youth convention with particular focus on sharing Christ
4. A developing program of adult education including a second track of curriculum options
5. A major research project to develop a youth profile to counsel the church’s work with youth
6. A group planning and outlining curriculum in church membership, missionary education, Sunday evening materials, and leadership training
7. A new curriculum for kindergarten children
8. Youth Christian Citizenship Seminars
9. Superintendents Training Workshops for Sunday school and Summer Bible School leaders
10. Direct help to congregations for designing their own purposes and programs
11. A group of persons giving leadership on peace, race, war, and poverty
12. Specific help for persons facing difficulty because of their stand on questions of peace.
13. Special refresher courses and seminars for ministers
14. Recruitment and placement of ministers
15. A stewardship education and congregational planning program
16. Brotherhood consultations and seminars, and bridge-building between various groups
17. Custodian of the denomination’s historical records, education on Mennonite roots, and research in Mennonite history
18. Preparation of a new model for denominational plan and structure
19. A wide variety of Mennonite Mutual Aid programs
20. The task of keeping a brotherhood in contact with itself through fieldwork, meetings, correspondence, publication, and personal communications and the even more important function, that of helping the church to move forward toward a common purpose as God leads.

Only a theoretical deity is left to any man who has ceased to commune with God, and a theoretical deity saves no man from sin and disheartenment. — Harry Emerson Fosdick, The Meaning of Prayer, 1915.
The Message of the Mennonite Church

A thorough study of the witness and teaching of our founding fathers—men like Grebel, Manz, and Sattler of the Swiss Brethren, and Obbe, Dirk, and Menno of the Dutch cradle of our church—brings greater clarity to the message which God through our heritage has entrusted to us.

Here is an attempt to summarize some of the major features of this heritage, which is, I believe, just as relevant now as it was some four centuries ago. If we could ask Grebel or Menno what it was which they felt we must proclaim to a world of dying men, I believe their answer would be something like the following.

We believe in one God: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. We believe that Jesus Christ was God in the flesh, that He died for our sins, and that by His death He broke the enslaving power of the demonic forces of evil and liberated us from the bondage of sin.

We believe that the risen and ascended Christ sent the Holy Spirit upon His waiting people on the Day of Pentecost. We believe that the Holy Spirit still accompanies the reading and proclamation of the Word of God, convicting men of sin and wooing them to repentance and faith.

We believe in the separation of church and state, that the only authorities in the church are the Word of God and the Spirit of God. We believe that it is the privilege and the commission of the members of Christ’s church to witness to all men that Christ died for them, and that God desires the salvation of all. Those who repent and are ready for the commitments of Christian faith and discipline are to be baptized with water, thus sealing their vows of discipleship to Christ.

We believe that infants and children stand in need of no ceremony, for by the Word of Christ they are in His kingdom. We believe it is the nature and the obligation of Christ’s disciples to willingly take up their individual crosses—to be ready to bear, even unto death, whatever it may cost them to follow Christ faithfully. This means a readiness to accept unjust suffering in meekness and love. And it involves a renunciation of force and violence in human relations.

We believe that when one is received into the Christian church he is committing himself to give counsel and to receive counsel from the brotherhood, and that the brotherhood must accept responsibility to keep a loving eye on each member, so as to help each one, through encouragement, warning, and intercessory prayer, to live a life of holiness, love, and obedience. That is, the church is a disciplined body, not under magistrates and state officials, but under the authority of the Word of God and the Spirit of God.

We believe that the Christian life is one of careful obedience to the New Testament, both in its spirit and in its letter, and for this reason no oaths should be sworn. We believe that the Spirit of God seeks to bring each Christian to, and to maintain in him, a spirit of brokenness and penitence, ready to accept correction and instruction from the brethren, and filled with the peace and joy of the Holy Spirit.

We believe that all the blessings of the Christian life are appropriated by personal faith. We believe that the ordinances (sacraments) of the church are joyful group celebrations of the blessings of being in Christ. We believe that the style of life of Christians should be a witness to, and a rebuke to those who live in secularism, in carnality, in violence and bloodshed, in materialism, and in any other form of that revolt against God which the Bible designates as sin and disobedience. We believe that the Bible should be accepted as God’s Word written, taken in simple faith, and made the rule of one’s faith and life.

We believe that the Christian church should, in humility and love, give a clear witness against all forms of personal sin and of social injustice. We believe that although the Christian life is a continual warfare against the demonic forces in society and in human nature, yet even in its suffering it is one of deep inner peace, and it issues in real joy.

We believe that the earmark of the Christian is caring love, both for those already in the church, and for those who have not yet found the Savior and His way of the cross. We look forward in hope to the return of our Lord Jesus Christ as the Savior of the church and the Judge of the world.

"In the Fulfness of Time"

By Harry D. Burke

The significance of the biblical expression, "In the fulness of time," has direct bearing on the modern Christian's entry into the decade of the seventies. The expansion of the Christian church throughout the world is a prime concern for believers everywhere. As this new decade opens, mission leaders are frankly aware of the delicate balance of many precarious political and economic factors which affect this expansion. Yet, accompanying this uneasiness is an optimism that our God is not trapped by current events, nor is He on the brink of historic defeat.

"In the fulness of time" has its origin in the Scripture (Galatians 4:4) and refers to the historical timeliness of the birth of Christ. Although these timely circumstances are not elaborated in the Bible, several factors can be discerned. Inasmuch as the Incarnation was at God's initiation, then the timing was according to His schedule. At the "right" time, Jesus was born. An earlier or later arrival would not have been a proper time for His appearance.

Some of the factors which are recognized to have provided the proper setting for Jesus' appearance include such events of world history as the dispersion of the Jews, the power of the Roman Empire, and the influence of Hellenistic culture.

The dispersion of the Jews developed as a result of the captivities several centuries earlier when the Jewish nation was crushed by Nebuchadnezzar and her people were carried away captive into Babylonia. When the Jews again were allowed to return to their country, not all of the people returned, but many spread widely through countries around the area. The dispersed Jews and their synagogues afforded the early apostles with interested and potentially responsive preaching points when they penetrated these foreign cities.

The "Pax Romana" indicated that Roman rule afforded comparative international peace and safe conduct for her citizens and other travelers. A network of roads was built and provided direct communication to the major cities. These advantages were heavily relied upon by the apostles in the dissemination of their message.

The spread of Hellenistic culture made it possible to employ a single language and to travel widely with relatively little trouble in verbal communication. The Old Testament had been translated into Greek at an earlier time and was in general use among the dispersed Jewish communities. God-fearing proselytes were probably bilingual, knowing their local language, as well as Greek, thus affording the further penetration of their culture by the Christian faith. The extension of the church throughout the Roman Empire was helped by the widespread use of a single language.

Undoubtedly there are other factors which facilitated the advance as well. The fact that Jerusalem was destroyed in AD 70 meant that Jesus had been born before the final devastating blow to the Jewish state ended its nationhood for nearly 2,000 years. Psychologically, to have begun evangelizing the Gentiles at a later date might have been a more difficult task. By that time, however, indigenous churches had been established throughout the empire.

Let's discuss some features of today's world which reflect the "fulness of time."

Rapidity and ease of international travel. Most cities of the world can be reached within a day's travel from the United States. Tourism and international business supply a steadily increasing volume of traffic for airline companies. Documentation for citizens of most Western nations is a mere formality. Passports are easily obtained and visas are available to visit practically all the countries of the world.

Improved language-training techniques. Fluency in a foreign language is often assumed to require years of diligent study. Ability to communicate effectively and fluently, however, can be achieved quickly. Perfection in fluency is a process which should never end while one is located in a foreign culture. Well-prepared and refined teaching texts have been developed for most of the major languages of the world. Some modern crash courses totally immerse a person in a foreign language and literally brainwash the language into his head in a startlingly short time. Wycliff Bible Translators operates a special linguistics school to assist prospective missionaries capture a foreign language more quickly and accurately.

Aids to understanding culture. Along with improved language-training courses, much help is available in orientation to the cross-cultural living situation. Christian students of cultural anthropology have written many excellent books and articles providing the individual with excellent perspectives to understand other cultures and peoples. Three faculty members in the missions department of one well-known seminary have their doctorates in the field of anthropology. Today, the modern missionary is able to sidestep many of the problems that his predecessors had to struggle through. Also, more information is available for solving difficult problems relating the Christian message to a native cultural context.

Medical care and education available. Many Christians contemplating foreign service are fearful of substandard conditions of foreign countries and worry that emergency services may not be readily available. Diplomatic and consular personnel, technical and business agents, and tourists have greatly influenced the life in the major cities and have usually enjoyed their time in visiting or living abroad. Eminently qualified medical and dental specialists and excellent hospitals are situated in practically every major city of the world. Away from the cities not such high standards may be maintained, but even there, the service is usually good and has access to all but the very latest drugs. Education for English-speaking children is available in practically every major center of the world and there is a vast network of private schools for missionary children.

Religious hostilities eased. The rigid fierce combative attitude that formerly characterized some native peoples toward Christians has diminished. Residents of the Christian West have traveled so extensively that there is no longer the fear of the unknown with regards to their persons or faith. The recognition by Vatican II of Protestants as “separated brethren” literally wrought a revolution in attitude in Latin countries. In most places, an openness toward dialogue exists which is always the first step in communicating the message of the gospel.

Existence of the Christian church. The Christian church is a fact around the world. Some may wonder if, that being the case, there is a continuing need for missionaries. This question is being reflected upon by many responsible church leaders and is resulting in a shifting of emphasis in the work of the missionary. Many places still exist where the frontier missionary is needed to extend the gospel as well as the specialized Christian worker who may serve as adviser or teacher in helping to strengthen the base of the church. Considering that the Christian church in most countries is three percent or less of the general population, the day of missions has not ceased by any means. The existence of the church in many nations is of great encouragement to the missionary and his spiritual life is strengthened by fellowship with many fine Christians.

Greater responsiveness of people. Although certain sociological groups continue to resist conversion, some other groups are manifestly more responsive than ever before. A great turning to Christ recently took place in Indonesia. Sub-Saharan Africa is experiencing a greater turning than ever before. The churches in Brazil and Chile are growing at a rate nearly four times faster than the population rate. The easing of religious tension, the greater degree of immigration, the growing despair to achieve rapid economic advancement, and the disillusionment with government promises are all contributing to the opening up of many peoples to change. This change can be an inner spiritual change or an outward physical revolution. Where the “harvest is ripe,” more workers should be deployed in those strategic tasks of “ingathering” and church planting.

Many other positive factors indicate the “fulness of time” for missions along with those mentioned above. The task of evangelization must be pursued with greater impetus. The world is changing at an increasingly faster pace. Many of these changes can work against the missionary task. Three possible inhibiting factors include the following points:

1) Nationalism, although on the rise during the fifties and sixties, has not peaked yet. India, Burma, and several other countries have already placed restrictions on the issuance of entry visas for missionaries.

2) U.S. currency has a precarious position on the world market due to the inadequate supply of gold to support dollars used on the international money market. The fall of the dollar as a unit of exchange undoubtedly would result in severely curtailing the missionary enterprise.

3) The population explosion has consequences that are totally unpredictable. It is possible that groups now responsive will become as unyielding to conversion as the Arabs of Arabia. The challenge to the church is to reach the people now. The birth of each succeeding generation only makes the task of discipling greater for the church.

Christ entered history at the “right” time. Paul and others of his day spread the gospel and had indigenously established churches before the fall of Jerusalem dealt a psychological blow to the influence of the Jewish propagators of the faith. Today’s apostles stand on the shoulders of courageous pioneers who, faithful to their calling, effected major changes in the lives of peoples of the world. Today’s missionaries also are able to use so many factors in the presentation of the gospel to good advantage that possibly now is the “fulness of time” for the greatest expansion of the church. The age of missions will not be over, however, until the church, looking squarely at Jesus’ command to go into all the world and make disciples, can offer the nations as tribute at the feet of her King. Still to be discipled are vast pagan populations of the modern world’s new generation as well as hundreds of bypassed tribal groups where languages are still waiting for the privilege to echo the sound of the good news.

On the basis of the many circumstances favoring missionary advance which did not exist in the past, now is the time for more daring strategies to be employed. Now is the time for more daring devotion to Christ on the part of His people. Although the nineteenth century, in contrast to earlier periods, may have been termed the “great century” for missions by historian Kenneth Scott Latourette, it is possible that the 1970s will be known as the “great decade of advance” for the church.

A Bit Much

Most editors are affable people who like to accommodate subscribers. One editor, however, felt the following letter was asking too much:

“Dear Sir: Last year you printed an article, at least I think it was in your paper, that interested me very much, but I have forgotten what it was. I lost my notes on the subject and can’t find the paper. Will you send me another copy of the same, if it was your paper?”

An Open Letter to Pastors of College Students

Dear Brother,

While you are probably surprised to get a letter from me, I feel that I must pass on some of my recent thoughts.

The Sunday after communion you preached about being a member of God’s kingdom and that a Christian should not hold public office. As strangers and pilgrims we have our true citizenship in heaven, you said. As I listened I began to consider the radical implications of this “heavenly citizenship.” I determined to seek you out after the service and discuss my questions. But after the benediction as you came around shaking hands, I just couldn’t bring myself to shoot the questions. I didn’t have the nerve.

Sometimes it seems that one isn’t permitted to question the status quo. As we shook hands that morning I saw where you stood and where I stood. But I couldn’t bring us together. This noncommunication has really bothered me. It not only happens between you and me, but somehow it seems to include a large percentage of the congregation.

You see, in my world at school I have to do a lot of thinking. I am taught to test ideas and seek my own truth. I must always be sure to have valid sources and proper analysis, but ultimately I come to my own conclusions. Suddenly, Sunday morning comes and I am to put away my thinking, questioning, and doubting. We turn to the Bible and search out some verse to apply to our problem. If we cannot find a verse, we go by what the church has always said.

This is fine if we would always consider what the Scriptures are really saying, rather than becoming dogmatically hung up on the literal interpretation. Too often, I feel, we lose so much of what the Scripture is saying by not taking into account the historical setting and purpose of the writings. Rather than losing meaning and importance, the Scriptures become even more powerful and revelant to me when I understand who wrote them and in what specific setting the author was writing. If we really believe in the Holy Spirit we talk about, this kind of interpretation should not seem dangerous, but should make the Christian faith more applicable to our world.

One area this affects directly is our relationship to government, especially to war. Most people seem to think their only responsibility is to pray for the president and pay taxes. I just can’t buy that any more. I feel that as a Christian I have a very strong responsibility to witness to the government concerning what seems to be a gross immorality. So when people are interested in the same goals as I (i.e. ending a war), and they use acceptable methods of achieving that goal, I will support them. This witness to the government might well include prayer, but it might also include not paying taxes which finance the immorality.

Another implication of radical discipleship would be our relationship to affluence. We very easily get wound up about investing money and acquiring property, and then sell our consciences by making our church buildings “look as nice as our homes.” To me the Christian way demands that we do not get tied to making money and raising our own standard of living, but that we see our resources as being usable mainly for our brothers’ needs.

This understanding of the Christian way implies involvement. Here I really clash with many in the congregation. On Sunday morning I gather that one should only be involved enough to make a living and preach the gospel. I ask: How can I, as a student, express my dissatisfaction with war and killing if I do not become involved in peaceful demonstrations? Or how can I claim to be concerned about my brother’s spiritual needs if I am concerned about my own financial accumulations to the exclusion of his physical needs? And how can I share Christianity with fellow collegians if I haven’t faced the questions of reality honestly myself?

The church says, “Stay away from the world! Don’t ask questions; it’s too dangerous.” Of course it’s dangerous! But no more than living on a $100,000 farm or running a $500,000 family business, while having no concern for the suffering and injustices all around us.

And so, brother, I’ll bring these rambling thoughts to a close. I hope you don’t think I’m angry with you personally or with the congregation. It’s just that I’m hurt because the church’s definition of Christianity has not been honest enough to allow for any questions, nor has it accepted me as a searching brother.

But I’ll see you on Sunday.

Sincerely,
Rose Breneman, Mim Hershey, Luke Good, Dan Hess

Christian higher education is entering a "new Dark Ages," precariously involved in a "survival game," a Lutheran theologian warned.

Yet, observing that "all institutions of higher learning are in upheaval, fighting for survival, occasionally enjoying the luxury of a quest for definition," he said these "new Dark Ages" will provide the context for a "new Christian mandate."

Dr. Martin E. Marty, professor of theology at the University of Chicago, told a Campus '70 Conference audience at St. Mary's College that the mandates he spoke of are not "new" from God but refer to a new response to the Christian tradition today.

Comparing the national climate of the present to the historical period of AD 400 to 1000, he said the new Christian mandate for higher education comes against a background similar to those Dark Ages.

"The old civilization is in decadence. Moral change is in the air. Violence and cruelty surround us. New superstitions are peddled everywhere. . . . And in our 'new Dark Ages,' premium has already been removed from higher learning," he said.

Rejection of the authority of Jesus and of the Bible is responsible for a "close-to-anarchy" situation prevailing in the U.S., a conservative Lutheran leader said.

John P. Strand of Minneapolis, president of the Association of Free Lutheran Congregations, said that "man is busy dethroning all authority and crowning himself."

In his report to the association's eighth annual conference, Mr. Strand declared:

"It is unrealistic to expect wars to cease when men stoop to use force to get what they want in schools, industry, and the streets of the nation. Has anyone a right to expect more of his nation than he is as an individual in home, school, and community?

"This is a time to pray for our nation and our leaders. This is a time for repentance that God would send a Spirit-wrought awakening, making new individuals, new creatures in Christ who respect the authority of Jesus. . . ."

Mr. Strand said some strange decisions are made in high and low places when the desires of the flesh have greater influence than the Word of God.

"Abortion, the destroying of the innocent, unborn life, is defended while the punishment of evil and crime is made more and more difficult.

"Pollution of the universe, a great tragedy, is overemphasized but the pollution of the mind is defended and made a human right.

"Adultery, homosexuality, and fornication are treated lightly and often made virtuous while the beauty of a clean and pure life and home is mocked.

"The killing of thousands each year because of drunken driving is ignored, while millions are spent each year in research against disease. . . ."

"There is much 'to-do' about women's liberation," the Lutheran clergyman said, "but the privilege and high position of homemaking and motherhood are largely ignored."

The Social Concerns Committee of the United Church of Christ in Japan (Kyodan) has appealed to the Japanese government to take steps to end the Mutual Security Treaty with the United States.

The government was urged to adhere to the national constitution which renounces war and projects the ideal of a peaceful nation, one having friendly relations with all countries.

The statement was issued in connection with the renewal by the Japanese government of the U.S.-Japan Security Treaty, which was due for automatic extension June 23.

Christians must find viable alternatives to abortion, David Burns, a United Church of Canada minister told the Birthright organization in Toronto.

Birthright is a Roman Catholic-spearheaded, nondenominational group that offers complete pregnancy care, including counseling, accommodation, and medical service, usually to unwed mothers.

Mr. Burns said there are three possible alternatives to abortion:

— Creating a reverence for prenatal life.
— Using methods for preventing pregnancy.
— Counseling and financial aid to pregnant women.

The American Medical Association has endorsed abortion for social and economic as well as medical reasons for the first time in its history.

Its stand, made in a 103 to 73 vote of the association's House of Delegates, immediately caused controversy and caused speculation that some Roman Catholic doctors may withdraw from the AMA.

Dr. Gino Papola of Upper Darby, Pa., president of the National Federation of Catholic Physicians Guilds, said he would resign from the AMA in protest and would urge the 35,000 Catholic physicians in the U.S. to follow his lead. His federation has 6,000 members.

"In effect," Dr. Papola charged in an interview, "the AMA has made it ethical for doctors to become paid executioners. I certainly don't want to be a doctor in the AMA under these circumstances."

According to Dr. Robert McAfee Brown, the U.S. may have to experience "humiliation" and "defeat" in Southeast Asia in order to recover "national health and sanity."

A Stanford University professor and a United Presbyterian theologian, Dr. Brown held that the truly patriotic stance today is one insisting that the U.S. is loved "too much to let it escape from Southeast Asia without having learned some very hard and searing lessons."

His comments were made in the June 22 issue of Christianity and Crisis, the biweekly journal of opinion.

Dr. Brown used the word "defeat" in a "particular concept." He recalled that German martyr Dietrich Bonhoeffer said in 1941 that he prayed "for the defeat of my country, for I think that is the only possibility of paying for all the suffering that my country has caused in the world."

In light of the U.S. "invasion" of Cambodia, said Dr. Brown, American Christians "have to ask ourselves whether we have not come perilously close to the position in which Bonhoeffer found himself."

Since 1965 the United States has delivered 9,279,295 tons of explosives. The NLF/DRV has delivered 17,000 tons.

U.S. Senator Mark O. Hatfield, speaking to some 80 graduating seniors of Fuller Theological Seminary in Pasadena, Calif., on June 2, lamented evangelicals' "trusts in chariots." He scored U.S. involvements in the Indochina war and found he had the backing of many in the audience.

As he began his speech, a banner reading, "Blessed are the peacemakers" and "We're with you, Mark!" was unfurled by students in the balcony of First Methodist Church where the graduation service was held.

Approximately one fourth of the graduating class wore white armbands to show opposition to the war effort. Afterward, propaganda was distributed outside explaining the significance of the white armbands and showing 70 signatures collected by antwar citizens in the school and in the community.
Broadcasting Aids Japan Church

The Japan Mennonite Church is alive and growing on Japan’s northernmost island, Hokkaido. This growth is receiving stimulation through involvement with HOREMCO, the Hokkaido Radio Evangelism Mass Communications project. Since Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., has pooled its resources with HOREMCO, Mennonite congregations in Japan have increased opportunity to meet people in their communities who respond to radio and TV programs and evangelistic meetings sponsored by HOREMCO. This cooperation with HOREMCO has been in effect for the past two years.

In August 1956, the Mennonite Church began sponsoring a religious radio program in Japan. A branch of Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., was established in Japan at the time to manage the program and follow-up activities such as counseling and correspondence Bible studies.

The first program sponsored by Mennonite Broadcasts was produced by the Pacific Broadcasting Association and released on stations on all major islands of Japan except Hokkaido. Then, in 1956, with the cooperation of the Mennonite Church and the Oriental Missionary Society, the program was placed on the Hokkaido Broadcasting Company network which covers nearly all of the island.

In October 1958 the Japan Mennonite Church, noting that HOREMCO was producing programs compatible with what the Mennonites wanted to say in Japan, recommended switching support to them. HOREMCO, a joint effort of about 240 churches of many denominations, is involved in radio programs, short television programs, evangelistic meetings, summer youth caravans, and correspondence Bible study.

Last year financial problems forced HOREMCO to discontinue all television broadcasts. But now, in 1970, because of Mennonite Broadcasts’ contribution to the project, a 13-week experimental TV program materialized entitled “Thought for Today.” It is a five-minute, midmorning program for housewives shown twice a week. The two people appearing on the program are Mrs. Miura, a highly respected and widely read Christian novelist in Japan, and evangelist Ishikawa, radio-TV pastor with a ministry in churches throughout Hokkaido. He appears on the program in a supporting role as Mrs. Miura discusses family and community life.

Marvin K. Yoder, director of Mennonite Broadcasts’ Japan office, is directly involved with HOREMCO as a member of the Executive Board and as chairman of the advisory broadcast committee. In his annual report to the Board of Directors of Mennonite Broadcasts he says, “More than half of our church areas are outside the reach of commercial radio. Commercial television already reaches these areas. Hence, mass media evangelism, to have any meaning whatsoever for more than half of our congregations, must be via television. We believe concern for the interests of our church has added weight to an already existing conviction that HOREMCO’s activities must also include television.”

Mennonite congregations in Japan are financing the cost of follow-up work referred to them as a result of HOREMCO programs. In 1969 the Japanese Mennonite Church’s share of the cost of the work was 87,300 yen or $100. In the future any contributions beyond the cost of this work will be given to HOREMCO through Mennonite Broadcasts.

Persons who respond to broadcasts are referred to churches in their home areas. In 1969 there were 29 individuals referred to Mennonite churches out of a total of 7,559 mail responses. Many requested the Bible correspondence course.

HOREMCO conducted evangelistic meetings in 342 churches in 1969 with a total of 18,000 persons attending. Twenty of these meetings were held in Mennonite churches and follow-up work became necessary.

Mennonite Church leaders in Japan are optimistic about the future of religious broadcasting as a means of reaching young people with the gospel. Yoder included this story in his report:

“Mr. Ogawara (approx. 22 years old) began the correspondence course in 1969 and was introduced to the Obihiro church. He is attending worship services and seekers’ class every Sunday now. Through his concern and leadership a monthly meeting in the Makubetsu town hall was started in March.”

David Augsburger, who spent two weeks in Japan in April fellowshiping with the congregations and teaching in evangelism seminars, had this to say of Mennonite ties in HOREMCO:

“The HOREMCO staff is a profoundly committed group of evangelical Christians. One senses the presence of the Holy Spirit operating in their creativity and skilled witnessing. They are on the forefront of Christian communications not in Japan only, but also in their leadership in such witness around the world. We thank God for the privilege of working alongside them through the Japan Mennonite Church.”

Navajo Program Communicates

“Dear Friends: This morning I just wondering about believe in God. Would someone tell me about believe in God? . . . I wondering how I can have a good life with my family and home. . . . We always listen to KHAC in Window Rock, Arizona. Yes, we always wish someone would pray for us or sing some happy songs.”

Response of this nature to the Navajo Gospel Hour helps make the effort worthwhile for Peter and Naswood Burbank, the brothers who share the responsibility of speaking on the Navajo broadcast. Stanley Weaver, who produces the program at Black Mountain Mission in Chinele, Ariz., is also encouraged by this evidence that God is speaking through the 15-minute broadcast. Considering their first efforts to evoke mail response, he said: “I didn’t know if we would get any response at all, [but] I have been highly pleased with the response of those who are really seeking help. We have written to each one, assuring them of our prayers and offering counsel.”

The program, sponsored by Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., since it started in 1956, is heard five days a week on two Arizona radio stations: KHAC in Window Rock and KDJI in Holbrook. KDJI is situated at the center of the southern border, and KHAC, a Christian station, is at the eastern edge of the Navajo reservation. According to Weaver, this allows the Navajo Gospel Hour to reach almost the entire reservation.

Naswood Burbank became a Christian through contact with Black Mountain Mission. In 1957 he became the speaker for the Navajo broadcast. In 1962 his brother
Peter joined the church and two years later began helping with the task of speaking to people through radio.

Also in 1964, Peter, with Stanley Weaver and his wife, started the Blue Gap Mission. One year later, Peter married Lita Rose Tsosie and together they assumed responsibility for the new mission church. Lita Rose had been a Christian worker and interpreter at Black Mountain Mission for several years prior to their marriage. They now have a son, Freemond, three years old.

In March of this year Simon Gingerich, Secretary of Home Missions for Mennonite Board of Missions, visited the Indian churches and commented on the Navaho Gospel Hour: "Having evidenced the mail and the comments of a number of persons, I am convinced that the broadcast is communicating well and that it is well received by Navahos both Christian and non-Christian. I feel that the broadcast is effective and deserves our support."

Chain Letters Are Illegal

"So you need an immediate $8,000 for your church?" This is the way a chain letter begins which is being circulated primarily among ministers and other church leaders. Some Mennonite names are appearing on these letters.

Many reasons, which may even appear good, can be listed as to why people yield to the temptation of perpetuating chain letters. But it is simply another method of seeking something for nothing. It is a snare for the greedy or gullible who have given little thought to its implications, churchwise or legally. Not only does it reflect upon the church, but such a letter is illegal in the United States and Canada.

Study of Science

Teaching Being Made

A committee has been appointed by the Mennonite Secondary Education Council and colleges to study the teaching of science to nonscience majors in Mennonite secondary schools and colleges.

The persons appointed are: Oren Horst, Bethany Christian High School, Goshen; Vincent Krabill, Hesston College; Robert Lehman, Eastern Mennonite College; Albert J. Meyer, Mennonite Board of Education; Levi Miller, Iowa Mennonite School, Kalona, Iowa; William Miller, Goshen College; Elam Peachey, Christopher Dock Mennonite High School, Lansdale, Pa.; and Arthur Smucker, Goshen College. The study was initiated by the Mennonite Secondary Education Council and the Higher Education Council. Meyer served as ad hoc chairman at the initial meeting in February at which time Smucker was elected chairman.

Concerns of the committee are: (1) education in science is often inadequate for making the nonscientist sufficiently familiar with the attitudes and methods of science necessary for making his best contribution in today's world — too often it has tended to be a survey of scientific knowledge; (2) often there is inadequate integration between the high school and college curricula in science, so that gaps or wasteful repetitions may occur in some students' science education.

Additionally, the committee found a point of concern in whether colleges were properly preparing the relatively large number of secondary and especially primary teachers for the teaching of science with good understanding and "feel." More efficiency in the total teaching-learning process could be obtained in many cases with coordinated planning of the high school and college curricula. It was felt that since Mennonite high schools graduate an appreciable number of students who continue their education at one of the Mennonite colleges, this type of project could be very significant.

To date the committee has looked at what is happening in the science curricula of some Mennonite high schools and colleges and has attempted to identify areas of need. It has also spent time in studying and evaluating existing national programs and projects on science teaching, from the early grades through college. The committee has prepared an instrument to be used in self-evaluation of science programs in Mennonite high schools and colleges during the 1970-71 school year.

Current plans call for a workshop of Mennonite high school and college science teachers sometime during the summer of 1971. It is hoped that some administration and Board members will also attend.

Thirty-One Attend Orientation

Thirty-one persons attended the July 7-21 orientation held at Mennonite Central Committee headquarters. Eighteen of the volunteers were assigned to domestic service, while 13 accepted overseas assignments.

Mennonite Church volunteers: Lucinda Bartel, Gap, Pa., will be working for the next year at Children's Center in Laurel, Md., as a teacher's aide. She is a graduate of Octorara Area High School and is a member of the Monterey Mennonite Church, Leola, Pa.

Lowell Bender, Rocky Ford, Colo., has accepted a two-year term of Pax service in Berlin, Germany, where he will be working in a hospital. He attended Hesston College and graduated from Otero Junior College. Lowell is a member of the Rocky Ford Mennonite Church, Rocky Ford, Colo.

Tom Geiser, Orrville, Ohio, will spend the next 30 months in a Pax assignment in Germany. He will be involved in a construction project in Bamberg. Tom is a graduate of Dalton High School and attended the Career Academy specializing in radio broadcasting. He is a member of the Sonnenberg Mennonite Church, Apple Creek, Ohio.

Lois Ann Handrich, Souderton, Pa., will serve as switchboard operator and receptionist at the Akron headquarters for the next year. She is a graduate of Eastern Mennonite College and had taught at Christopher Dock High School prior to entering service. Lois is a member of the Weavers Mennonite Church, Harrisonburg, Va.

Jacob Hartzler, Smithville, Ohio, has volunteered for a 30-month term of Pax service in Bamberg, Germany. He will be involved in construction work. Jacob is a graduate of Newport News High School and is a member of the Chestnut Ridge Mennonite Church, Orrville, Ohio.

Gerald and Mrs. Joy Kauffman and children Heidi and Karl, Portland, Ore., will serve for the next three years in public health work. They will spend four months in Haiti and the rest of the time in Indonesia. Gerald received his MD from the University of Oregon Medical School and Joy received her LPN from Lane Community College. Both are members of the Portland Mennonite Church, Portland, Ore.

Donald and Virginia Ranck, State College, Pa., have volunteered for a 27-month term of service in Recife, Brazil. He will be working with agricultural teaching and extension work and his wife will be involved in public health work. Don is a graduate of Pennsylvania State College with a BS in agriculture education. Virginia is a graduate of Lancaster School of Practical Nursing. The Rancks are members of the University Mennonite Church, University Park, Pa.

Kim Shantz, Fairview, Mich., will serve in the Congo for the next 30 months. He will be working at a mission in Eastern Congo with a livestock project. Kim attended Goshen College and received a BS in crop science from Michigan State University. He is a member of the Fairview Mennonite Church.

Robert and Anna Mae Weaver and daughters, Kathryn, Jenelle, and Kristin, Pittsford, Vt., have accepted a two-year assignment in Whitesburg, Ky. He will be serving as MCC representative to the Letcher County Family Services and a psychiatric social worker in a community mental health center. Robert is a graduate of Eastern Mennonite College and received his MSW from the University of Pennsylvania School of Social Work. Anna Mae received her RN from the House of Good Samaritan School of Nursing. They are members of the Bethany Mennonite Church, Bridgewater Corners, Vt.

Woodlawn Tried by Fire

Woodlawn Mennonite Church, in the heart of Southside Chicago, was scarred by a major blaze on Wed. night, July 29. Arson is suspected as the cause for the fire that did more than $25,000 damage.

On Sunday, Aug. 2, the congregation, joined by hundreds of neighbors and friends, met on the sidewalk on East 46th Street to serve notice that the gates of hell would not overcome the church at Woodlawn. At this impressive service, Curtis Burrell, pastor of the congregation, appealed for reconciliation with the gang who are presumed to be responsible for the fire. Burrell has been under attack by the gang since he removed them from positions in the Kenwood-Oakland Community Organization (KOCO) last spring. Pastor Burrell observed that the Woodlawn Church has deep roots in the community, has been a cradle of black leadership, and will use this occasion of rebuilding the structure as an opportunity for rebuilding the life and spirit of God’s people meeting here. The service of reconciliation, Burrell said, is also the celebration of a “new day” for Woodlawn.

Ed Riddick, a member of the congregation and Director of Research for Operation Breadbasket, chaired the meeting. Jesse Jackson, the country preacher who heads Operation Breadbasket, preached the sermon entitled “From Man’s Valley to God’s Garden.” Jackson eloquently described the inalienable rights of man to the good life as described in the Garden of Eden story and spoke of how various forces systematically prevent men from enjoying the life God intends for them. Men, especially those living in the area of the Woodlawn Church, are now in the valley of despair, evil, fear, and exploitation similar to what is described by Ezekiel in his famous valley of dry bones. But the bones will live. Jackson asserted, for God has put “His Spirit within” and “you shall live.” Jackson’s hope was not unrealistic. “The church,” he said, “must expect to suffer. Church buildings not being burned are being used.”

The Woodlawn congregation is a member of the Central District of the General Conference Mennonite Church. Representatives of the conference and district were at this service. Former congregational leader Elmer Neufeld, Bluffton, Ohio, and former pastor Delton Franz, Washington, D.C., took part.

The Scriptures say that where one suffers, we all suffer. Does this mean where one church building burns, all church buildings burn? As a Mennonite brotherhood we ought to support the rebuilding of the Woodlawn Church by sending contributions to the Woodlawn Mennonite Emergency Fund, Seaway National Bank, 645 E. 87th, Chicago, Ill. 62223. — John A. Lapp, Exec. Sec. of Peace Section, MCC.

MDS Units at Work in Texas

M DS personnel bunking in the damaged Prince of Peace Mennonite Church building in Corpus Christi, Tex., are hard at work in the Aransas Pass and Corpus Christi area repairing homes damaged by Hurricane Celia. MDS representative Marvin Hostetter, who, with Henry Z. Friesen, arrived on the disaster scene on Aug. 5, reported that “many, many homes of poor people have lost all or parts of their roofs. Entire roofs were lifted from their plates on brick houses. Shingles were stripped off many houses.”

Since there is no appreciable clean-up work, MDS will be involved chiefly in “drying in” houses and relatively light rebuilding.

MDS units wishing to help in the work in Texas are welcome to send workers to the area after having contacted James Miller at phone 512-353-3458 in Corpus Christi.

Four carloads of volunteers are reported to have arrived from Kansas on Aug. 11 to work with local Mennonite groups who are helping out. Those wishing to contribute funds to the MDS program may address them to the MDS Emergency Services Fund, 21 South 12th Street, Akron, Pa. 17501, or through normal conference channels.

Readers Say

Submissions to Readers Say column should comment on printed articles.

A few statements in the article, "Women, Equality, and the Church," by Dorothy Swartzenbruber in the July 21 issue have rekindled a concern of mine that I think needs consideration. Certainly in the Bible many women made great contributions to the church and this is still proper. However, my point concerns a certain view of the church expressed in the article too prevalent among us and contrary to the Scripture. She writes, "Many thinking women want to get involved in the mainstream of the church's program. Whether the church is prepared to appoint some of these women to its committees and boards remains to be seen." These statements indicate that her the "mainstream of the church" is serving on committees and boards.

The quote from the Canadian Mennonite gives a similar impression that the "mainstream of the church" is the "inner circle of control." I also find this concept of the church among many lay people.

But this is not a New Testament view of the church. Was the board of deacons the mainstream of the church? No. The mainstream of the church called them out to perform a necessary sidekick task, so that the mainstream of the church could go about its business.

Our boards, committees, commissions, church-related schools and institutions are to do a task assigned them by and for the mainstream, so the mainstream can be more effective. This does not mean we neglect the importance of committees, boards, etc., but it does put them in proper perspective as servants in the mainstream of the church. If and when they have fulfilled or fail to fulfill a function for the church, they should cease to exist.

Thank God for the many committee members etc., who see themselves as servants. But the opposition is certain. If and when members of our boards, committees, etc., come to us as "resource people with elaborate plans and programs rather than as servants waiting to hear what the mainstream asks them to do.

So, Dorothy and other readers, if you go about your daily tasks and worship, help you to make disciples by sharing Christ in word and deed, lifting the fallen, encouraging the weak, bearing the cross, indemnifying the sick, educating the young, inspiring others to the noble and true, then you are in "the mainstream of the church." — John F. Murray, Kouts, Ind.

Roy Yoder's excellent article in the August 4 Gospel Herald prompts me to write. I have a growing conviction that the government-approved I-W alternative of earning service carries all too little witness to our Christian peace convictions. In saying this I do not mean to impugn the motives of many of our young men who have taken this option. In fact, I think it throws the spotlight more clearly on the convictions or lack of them to us all, young and adults. Many of our youth have lived consistent lives and left a Christian witness during their two years of service in spite of others who have apparently done an earning service as the easy way to "get it over with."

Our Lord instructed us to go the extra mile if we want our discipleship to be worthy of His name. It seems to me that the two years of earning service acceptable in lieu of military training under the laws of the U.S.A. are analogous to the one mile which Caesar could demand of a citizen in Jesus' day. But Christ made it clear that His disciples will have to go more than the minimum requirement one better. It seems to me that Voluntary Service and Pax provide that opportunity.

I am inclined to regret that the Mennonite Church ever accepted earning service as an acceptable option. I have nothing but gratitude for our government's liberal in making provision for our conscientious objector convictions but I do not assume that our government's provision is necessarily identical with God's will for us. I believe it was an unnecessary and regrettable concession that we made when we placed I-W earning service for all practical purposes on a par with VS and Pax. I suspect that this has Milton considerably against our efforts to be a disciplined church and will continue to erode away at our integrity along with other compromises we have made.

I am quite convinced that draft resistance in the forms either of refusal to register, migration to Canada, or returning the draft card are viable options that should be fully supported provided the motivation is demonstrably Christian. As a Pennsylvania I cannot argue with the fact that this state was founded, one might say, by and/or draft dodgers. A great many of our American Mennonite forebears came to these shores to dodge the growing practice of conscription in Europe, among other reasons. The new paper of the UCC, News Briefs, published in Waterloo entitled I would like to dodge the draft-dodgers, but . . . and edited by...
Frank H. Epp should be required reading for many of us.

Admittedly, I have come embarrassingly late to this conviction, but I believe we should respond appropriately whenever our understanding changes. I am gratified by the large number of those young and older, who seem to be growing toward this same conviction with regard to earning service. Should we move increasingly as a brotherhood in the direction that earning service is seldom an acceptable alternative to military service, I believe that we will need a much more vigorous program of teaching than we have had until now. I am ready to help in the retooling necessary. Our days in which to do this may well be numbered.

What Is Your Work?

By C. Norman Kraus

We are in a period when it is necessary to radically adjust our concepts of work and vocation. We are living in a time when machines are doing the production jobs that men once had to perform and they are doing them better. We are living in a period when, as one labor leader put it, the "knowledge workers" rather than production workers are the largest group in the labor field.

An industrial psychologist pointed out that by 1975, three fourths of the people working in industry will be making new products not now on the market. They will be making them with machines that are not even yet on the drawing boards. Against this background of a radically changing industrial economy, a background of automation, and the age of what someone called "intellectronics" we Christians need to reexamine our concepts of work and vocation. We need to ask again what is the Christian's work?

A man's work is important to him because it is a primary means of self-identity. If you ask a person who he is, he will often identify himself by naming his work: "I am a carpenter," "I am a farmer," "I am a teacher," "I am a mechanic or businessman," etc. He answers this way because a man's life finds meaning in his work.

This was true of Jesus Himself. When John the Baptist asked Jesus for an identification, He pointed him to His work. He said, "Go tell John what you see. The lepers are cleansed, the blind see, the poor have the good news preached to them." And again when His disciples once begged Him to eat food, He said, "My food is to do the will of Him who sent me and to accomplish His work." Or again, He said, "I must be busy doing the work of Him who sent me; the night comes when no man can work." In these statements Jesus indicates that He found His own sense of self-identity in His work.

Unfortunately, our concept of work in modern society has become very narrow. We have come to equate it pretty much with job and I would like to separate these two concepts — work and job. By job we generally mean the production of some material goods or services for which a wage is received. As jobs in our modern society become less and less creative in an assembly line industrial economy, the meaning of work becomes more and more identified with the wage which is the reward of our labor. We measure the significance of work by the wages it brings.

In our society it makes little difference what one does so long as the remuneration is satisfactory. And unfortunately this is true among Christians also. For many people this situation results in a greatly diminished meaning of life. They see no option but to identify their work with their job and paycheck. Thus, they measure the meaning of their lives in terms of their material security and pleasure that their work brings to them. In the words of Jesus their lives are bound up in working for the bread that perishes.

I think the problem for the Christian in this kind of world is to find the way to reestablish the meaningfulness of work. Notice I did not say necessarily the meaningfulness of your job. I am using the word work in a broader sense. Our problem is to make our daily employment of time and energy become more than a job. We want to be occupied with the kind of endeavor that will add up to a lifework — a phrase which implies a sense of accomplishment and value.

It is work in the sense of lifework that we intend when we speak of it as a vocation. When we call our work a vocation, we intend to suggest that there is some kind of real value and worth in it. When we speak of it as Christian vocation, we intend to indicate that it is work to which God has called us. It is our vocation or calling which gives meaning to our lives as Christians.

What is it that God has called us to do? What is our work as Christians? The crowds that came running to Jesus after He had fed them were quite frustrated when He told them they should not work so hard for the bread that gets moldy. They asked, "Well, what shall we do to perform God's work?" And then He frustrated them even more by saying, "This is God's work — to believe on Him whom He has sent." What was Jesus saying in this passage? I think He is saying that we should not confuse our strenuous physical and mental exertion — our work — with God's work. We should not confuse the real or supposed service which we render in our occupations with God's vocation or calling. Rather, our work as Christians is to have faith in Him whom God has sent. Let me give you two examples.

Moderns attempt to inject meaning into a job by being a skilled worker, an expert mechanic, a good farmer. It is rather generally assumed that the way to be Christian if

God’s Word Stands
By Dorcas S. Miller

God gave His Word:
Living, inspired, written,
He will guard it well.
The gates of hell
Cannot prevail
Against it.
The devil himself
Cannot destroy it.

But he can make us mistrust its message,
Lead us to quarrel about its contents,
Cause us to be confused by apparent errors,
And urge us to ignore its warnings.

He can challenge us to discredit the translators,
Give us unkind labels for the publishers,
Indict the character of those handling the ancient manuscripts,
Hiding ourselves behind Education or Ignorance.

He can suggest that it is too difficult for us to understand,
Delay our attempts to begin its perusal,
Interrupt our thoughts while reading,
Or convince us that we are too busy to really study it.

We may take His Word and cast it in clear type,
Print it on strong paper,
Bind it in sturdv leather,
Tool it to artistic perfection,
Publish it in dozens of editions,
Price it to suit every budget,
Buy it, give it, or receive it —
But forget to read and to obey it.

God gave us His Word.
The devil himself cannot destroy it.
But Man. . .

"Many cannot accept the practice of separation from the world because they have set before themselves the primary objective of being well thought of in the world, and they try to bend their observance of the Scriptures to that end.
"If all people were bound for the same goal, there would seem to be no reason why they should be separated on the way. But since the Bible plainly teaches that believers go to heaven, and unbelievers go to hell, it is even more obvious that they cannot bear each other’s company on the way.” — Paul Erb.

you are playing pro baseball is to be the best baseball player. The idea is that somehow expertise will give a sense of accomplishment and, therefore, the meaning that we want to our work.

I am suggesting that this is a kind of idolatry. We should by no means equate being a good baseball player or mechanic or even a skillful nurse, teacher or preacher with God’s work. Indeed, it is just as incorrect to identify expertise in preaching God’s Word as it is to identify expertise in playing baseball with it.

The second example, and one that is perhaps a little closer home, is the attempt to identify our occupations, any occupation, as a “service.” This has been carried almost to the point of being ridiculous. Everybody in business wants to serve you. Even the high pressure salesman who uses all the psychological gimmicks in the book to unload a white elephant at your door wants to think of himself as your servant. “Service is our business” is the common slogan. This would be funny if it were not so pathetic. There is also a real temptation to attempt an automatic identification of our service and God’s work by entering the so-called “service” professions.

What then is our vocation? What is our work? What is that by means of which we as Christians are to find self-identity? I would sum it up very simply by saying that it is our work to follow Jesus Christ in doing God’s work. And what is this work?

It is to be instruments of His grace and love, in bringing health, wholeness (our religious word is salvation); in reconciling the hostilities that exist between men; in restoring men to life and hope, and in bearing witness to Jesus Christ.

This is our work and it is the work of every Christian, not just some Christians. No matter what kind of a job you have, no matter where you are, you have one vocation, one work, namely, to bear witness to the Christ. As a matter of fact, I would suggest that this is our work even if we are out of a job. It is this work or vocation which should be our means of self-identification.

So, if it is true that our vocation or work is that which provides our center of identity, I should hope that when anyone asks you who you are, you can simply answer, “I am a Christian.” — from I-W Mirror

My Car Is a Habit

By Nelson W. Martin

While listening to the radio one day, I heard this ad, "Car driving is a hobby for most people, but when you test drive our new models, driving will become more than a hobby; it will be a habit!"

To many of us, our car is more than a hobby; it is a necessity. It is the way we get to work, school, church, and social activities. Inevitably, cars do affect our lives as Christians. Jesus said, "Be ye witnesses unto me." This may include the size and cost of our car, the speed in which we leave church, and the attitude we have of policemen.

A neighbor of our local church said he has no desire to become a Christian because of the way some fellows leave choir practice on weekday evenings. Phillips translations of Rom. 13 says, "The honest citizen has no need to fear the keepers of law and order, but the dishonest man will always be nervous of them. If you want to avoid this anxiety just lead a law-abiding life." If all of us as Christians would try as hard to keep the law as we try to keep from being caught by the law, accident rates would fall so drastically that insurance companies would be forced to make huge cuts in premiums.

The Bible says, "Thou shalt not kill." This probably doesn't surprise anyone. You have heard that statement many times. You would never put a pistol to another man's head and pull the trigger. But do you and I fully realize that we have the potential to kill every time we drive? More than 100 Americans are killed daily in traffic accidents. During a recent holiday weekend, it was much safer to be in the war-torn jungles of Vietnam than to be on an American highway.

There are basically two main causes of accidents. The first is speeding. Speeding is no new problem. In 2 Kings 9, the writer tells of a man driving a chariot into a city, and says, "For he driveth furiously." Some of us do the same. While driving through one of our Western states, each motorist encounters this revealing sign: "In this state last year, 4,029 people died of gas: 2 inhaled it, 27 put a match to it, and 4,000 stepped on it."

The second main cause of serious accidents is drinking. Almost 50 percent of all accidents involve a drunken driver. Alcohol deadens the mind and makes the judgment of speed and highway conditions very poor. Just because you do not drink or speed does not necessarily free you from these "accident makers." We must all be on the lookout for the driver who is not looking out for us.

I will always remember traveling home late one night on a busy Philadelphia expressway, following a car which was hit head-on by another speeding vehicle. I will not forget the fiery crash, the bloody crushed teenagers, and the demolished cars. It is in these times that we again pause and realize that our driving should be committed to God, just as all other areas of our lives. May we be challenged again by the words of the Apostle Paul, ringing so clear to each one of us drivers: "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

O God,
When we get busy and do not pray, stop us.
When we pray and do not act, start us.
When we pray and do not mean it, search us.
When we pray and really mean it, strengthen us. Amen.

Who Answers Those Inquiries?

What things make the Mennonites different, a so-called peculiar people, and what are their main goals and beliefs?

Could you give me the addresses of a young Amish man and an Amish girl who would like to correspond on a personal basis? . . . I am a Catholic in good standing, German, unmarried, and in my mid-twenties.

Please send me the official shoofly pie recipe.

I would be interested in corresponding with a Mennonite maid or widow between the ages of 55 and 70 years. I have been corresponding at dating with one for five years. She informs me that she is making plans to marry a retired minister next spring. This of course is her privilege — to marry a widower.

What is your church service like?

What are the costumes of the people?

I would like information on settlements of Mennonites in other countries.

I would like information on the theology and practice of foot washing.

I plan to teach a course in religious movements in the United States. Your church is one of the number I will cover in the class.

Information that would help me understand the Mennonite position on believer’s baptism.

I am a wee bit anxious to find myself an integral part or member of a society like yours and a nonmember of this present highly civilized culture . . . I am more than willing to make my way out by bus (from Massachusetts) to meet any one of you and become educated about your society.

What place does the church have in conditions such as war, poverty conditions, and race conflicts? . . . What are some of the strengths and weaknesses of the Mennonite Church today?

I am wondering if you have any followers in the New England area that I could join with? . . . Would it be possible to join even perhaps at a distance?

What are the requirements of being a Mennonite minister? (from a non-Mennonite)

As a youth I wanted to be a Franciscan monk in the Catholic faith. Because of the nature of this desire, naturally I would be interested in the Mennonites and the Amish.

What is the present position of the Mennonite Church on the use of alcoholic beverages? Would the Mennonite Church be in favor of an alcohol education course for high school students as a means of lessening the problem?

I am writing a paper concerning the Amish society and overall Mennonite Church. What is the suicidal rate, if any, and is it among the young people or old? What is the illegitimate rate, if any? Are many people illiterate? Are many people leaving the order for the urban world?

I would like to know if there is a way of becoming one of the Amish people?

Do you hold that baptism saves or is a factor in salvation, or is it purely a symbol of a salvation already effected by faith?

What is your view of the millennium?

What is your view of the ecumenical movement?

What is your position on the bearing of arms?

How often do you partake of the Lord’s Supper?

If you observe footwashing, does it come before or after the emblems are administered?

What is your teaching concerning the Trinity?

What is the position of the Mennonite Church on homosexuality?

What is the attitude of your faith toward interfaith dating and marriage?

Could you send me any information on the Mennonite influences in Southwestern Pennsylvania?

Could you send me a few copies of your weekly order of service, and of some of your special services?

How would you answer questions like these? Does any one answer them?

Mennonite General Conference office at Scottdale, Pa., receives an average of two to five inquiries a week about some phase of the Mennonite Church, its life, and work. The above are a few of the questions which come.

In addition, a large number of high school, college, and university students take some phase of Mennonite life for a particular study and write the Scottdale office for further information. Likewise, the executive secretary of the Historical and Research Committee, as well as the Mission Board office and other offices of the church, receive frequent inquiries.

This interest varies widely. Basically, most of the inquirers are interested in knowing more about the life of the Mennonite people and their beliefs. Some want information about specifics such as the kinds of food they eat, the clothes they wear, and other cultural patterns. One woman stated that she was advised by her doctor to eat certain health foods and that she heard the Mennonites grow and prepare special foods. She wanted specific information on this. One man wrote that he was now approaching 67 years of age and was planning to retire from the field of education shortly. He said he learned that our office provided a pen pal service. He was interested in finding someone who might enjoy sharing life with him. Unfortunately, the office is not equipped to meet this unique request!

A packet of materials has been selected to send to persons making general inquiry about the Mennonite Church. The executive secretary of Mennonite General Conference attempts to answer requests for specific information. Some persons write and ask how they can become members.

In many cases this provides an evangelistic opportunity. Frequently persons are referred to a local church or pastor of the area. And the questions keep coming. — D.
Project Timothy
By Martin W. Lehman

Richard Peterson, Raymond Martin, Laurence Sauder, Nathan Eby, Daniel Martin, Elvin Engle.

Timothy heard Paul preach at Lystra. He may have seen the cripple leap to his feet at Paul's command. He may have watched the mob worship Paul as Mercury, the messenger of the gods, then stone him as a heretic. He may have cried over what looked like Paul's dead body, may have seen Paul rouse himself, go back into Lystra for farewells, and leave to continue his journey.

On Paul's second missionary journey, Timothy's home church commended him to Paul, who then made him a part of his team. Timothy became Paul's son in faith and service. He wrote to the Philippians, "As a son with the father . . . [Timothy] has served with me in the gospel." Timothy became Paul's closest friend, for he wrote, "Timothy and I are likeminded."

Timothy became Paul's most trusted agent, for he wrote, "No one will care for you as naturally as Timothy." Paul entrusted personal belongings to Timothy, for during Paul's last imprisonment he wrote to Timothy, "When you come bring my cloak, my books, and my notebooks."

Paul foresaw the gospel radiate in ever-expanding circles when he wrote to Timothy, "The things you learned from me entrust to faithful men who are able to teach others also." Timothy himself became an organizer of churches, ordaining bishops and deacons.

Project Timothy is what its name implies. Congregations and their pastors are working together to do what Paul did when he took Timothy with him on his journey. It is an attempt to recruit ordinary Christian men to the service of Christ, to help them discover, develop, and use their gifts, and to help them find the places where God would have them use their gifts.

Sponsored by the Georgia-Peninsular Florida District of the Lancaster Conference, Project Timothy is subsidized by the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions. The district includes ten churches: four in white suburbia, three in black communities, two in farm centers which use migrant agricultural laborers, one in a settled white rural community.

Differences exist, naturally, among the churches and their pastors. But all the pastors are convinced that if their churches are to become relevant, Southern, and permanent, they cannot depend on money and men piped in unceasing flow from the northern churches. The pastors believe that growing, responsible churches develop leaders of their own. Although the pastors wish they could have had seminary training, they know that a seminary is not the only place to qualify men for Christian service. So they have searched for a way to train Christian witnesses and leaders which would let a man enjoy a near normal relationship to his family, job, community, and church, yet give him an educational experience.

The pastors began to look for men—men in their own churches who wanted to be better men, who wanted to learn, who wanted to share spiritual experiences with others. Men willing to read for hours, willing to risk the pain of self-discovery, willing to accept the discipline of directed learning. And most of all, men who were willing to obey the call of the Holy Spirit, now or in the future.

The pastors found such men—for ty of them, counting themselves, and they could have found more. The men range in age from sixteen to fifty-seven; in education from elementary grades to graduate students. With these forty men, Project Timothy began on January 1, 1970, as a two-year program divided into six terms of four months each. Each term has a central theme. The themes are:

I. Better Men
II. Enjoy Your Bible
III. Mennonite History and Doctrine
IV. How to Give Away Your Faith
V. Understanding Our World
VI. The Pastor

During each term books related to the theme are to be read. For the first term (the only term as yet completed), four books were required. These books were Power Through Prayer, by E. M. Bounds; Dare to Live Now, by Bruce Larson; This Way to Happiness, by Clyde Narramore, and Sit, Walk, Stand, by Watchman Nee. Since the abilities and interests of the men varied widely, they could choose four additional books from an approved list. After the book was read, the participant wrote a paragraph of response to it, and it became his personal property.

The local Pauls and Timothys meet regularly in small groups to discuss the books they are reading and to share personal problems. The meetings vary. Laurence Sauder and Marvin Nisley, two of the Atlanta men, asked their wives to join them, met weekly, and the foursome shared deeply, often late into the night. The five Immokalee, Florida, men met weekly, too, but for a five-thirty restaurant breakfast and sometimes for only thirty minutes. Elvin Engle, one of the five, reported, "Our meetings were great. If it hadn't been for them, I probably would have dropped out."

Each term is to be climaxed by a seminar to clinch the lessons of the past term and to introduce the next term. The first seminar was held May 2 and 3 at Lakewood Retreat, Brooksville, Florida. Major emphasis was on personal development in the small group, using methods suggested by "Faith at Work." The Faith at Work film, A New Thing, touched off a lively discussion. A Sunday morning panel tried to leap into "The Church of the Seventies," using as a springboard the March 31, 1970, Gospel Herald article, "No Business as Usual," by John Drescher.

Sometimes the question is asked, "Is Project Timothy copyrighted?" No, nothing about Project Timothy is copyrighted. Not the name, the book list, or the seminar program. Especially not the idea. That men should be called to service from the brotherhood and equipped for service by the local ministry is an idea that is Mennonite, biblical, and old.

It is too soon to know if Project Timothy will be a success. E. M. Bounds says, "God needs better men, not better methods." The first term aimed to make better men. And when some men volunteered, "I'm a better man for being in Project Timothy," success seemed on the way.

Mission ’70
By Elaine Rosenberger

Silence tiptoed through the tent,
I saw the holy people bent
And felt God’s presence there —
In pages of an open Book,
In recognition’s startled look,
And shuttered souls laid bare.

I heard once more in anger’s heat
His whip, His voice, His sandaled feet
On temple’s earthen floor;
Hearts were cleansed by godly shame
While others bristled, shifted blame,
And guilty, hardened more.

God in silence speaks His mind
Where the holy seek and find “Comfort from above”;

But He walks in ratty rooms,
Reservations, cheap saloons,
And palace where a sad heart croons —
To feel, to heal, to love.

Communique
To: Chief of Staff; Demon Division
From: Agent 787, Christian Subversion Detachment

A weakness camouflaged is a major sin in the making. Take jealousy, for example. Very few people will confess to entertaining envious thoughts, because to do so would be to admit their inadequacies—and this is most painful for human beings.

Jealousy begins to take form at an early age. Sibling rivalry is almost a natural part of development. Now parents are not above playing favorites—and this can produce all sorts of lovely frustrations that last a lifetime—but even when there is no parental partiality, children can imagine inequalities. From such small beginnings, the seed of jealousy can grow—and grow—and grow. In school, in marriage, in work, in church—it sends its tentacles into all areas of human relationships.

Remember the convert I mentioned in earlier communique? His wife has developed a marvelous case of jealousy—against the church. She is certain her spouse cares more for it than he does for her, but she can’t fight the church the way she could another woman in a romantic triangle. Thus, instead of reaping sympathy from her friends and heaping social indignation on her straying spouse, she must suffer in silence. This is leading to ever greater alienation, and it may even drive her to seek attention elsewhere.

Many an employee suffers from subliminal jealousy. While he would never identify his problem as such, the average white- or blue-collar worker can instantly dissolve a friendship if some real or imagined favor is shown a fellow employee. The offer of a better job, extra overtime, a new desk, an expense-account trip—the list is endless—can turn the tide. Immediately the former friend becomes an apple-polisher, an undercutter, a brownie (which, of course, he sometimes is).

And what do you suppose sells more cars than all the TV commercials and magazine ads combined? It’s the man next door. When he drives home a new model, a neighboring husband will begin explaining to his wife that the old bus is about ready to fall apart, and repairs to put it in shape would be too costly to be practical. So he goes out and buys not only a new model but a more expensive one. Does he realize that jealousy is what makes him do it? Never! (His wife may suspect the true motive, but if she is smart she will resist the urge to tell him.)

Jealousy is a great invention. I only wish I had invented it!
Challenge in Bavaria

By Harvey Miller

Start from Munich. Driving north through housing developments, you pass extensive construction work. Olympics 1972 and airfield grading make this a busy, bustling section, through which the four-lane Autobahn leads you. A scant twenty miles drive through the lovely countryside of Bavaria brings you to our destination — Freising.

Fourteen Bible school students came to Freising the first week in March to assist their alumnus, Wilfried Gundlach, in launching a new mission endeavor. They fanned out over the 30,000 people of the city with invitations and tracts, contacting individuals who were open to hear a testimony. While this attack on the city took place, friends of the new venture were praying. Intense anticipation vibrated in the hearts of many. What would the results be? Would some persons in this Catholic city respond to the invitations?

The head pastor of the Catholic Church had previously been contacted by missionary Gundlach. In a gratifying interview he agreed that the Bible is the basis for faith, requiring the personal decision of each individual. He would be thankful if persons beyond his reach could be confronted with the gospel.

The efforts were not in vain. Beside the several Mennonite and Baptist families in the area, a number of persons came to the evening meetings that week. They heard gospel messages. They listened to testimonials and singing by the Bible school team. They saw a missions slide picture report and a film on God’s creation.

The high point of the week was the Saturday evening youth meeting. A number of young people from the city joined the youth of surrounding Mennonite churches to make an audience of about seventy. Three young people accepted Christ.

And how did all this begin? Not overnight, to be sure.

Some years ago a young German Mennonite man, now a lay minister, spent a year among the Mennonites in America. He came home with a vision for local mission work. His father, a minister, came to share the conviction and for years they waited on the Lord for His leading. Meanwhile, a number of others in several congregations caught the vision. But it was not until after the death of his father that this vision could be realized.

Since the small Eichstock Mennonite congregation was financially involved in the youth retreat center they had recently built, the interested brethren began to cast about for some possibility to begin mission work in their area. They approached the Eastern Board with regard to opening work in the area. They were assured help in such a project, provided they would take the initiative in organization and planning. They rose to the challenge. Together with the Eastern Board, they worked carefully toward the forming of a suitable organization. The result was the first Mennonite Home Mission in Germany, organized as a nonprofit association on May 18, 1969. Apart from the writer, as Eastern Board representative, the executive committee is all-German.

In tracing the beginnings of the new missions project, we pick up another thread. Six years earlier, Eastern Board missionary, Omar Stahl, met a young man in an evangelistic crusade in Saarbrücken, Germany. The young man was converted in the crusade. For some time he was in close fellowship with the Stahls. After his marriage, he went to Brake Bible School for three years. Subsequently he transferred his membership from the state-supported Evangelical Church in Germany to the Mennonite Church at Eichstock, where he was ordained to the ministry. On October 15 he brought his wife and two children to Freising and began the groundwork of opening the new mission. His name: Wilfried Gundlach.

The Lord has marvelously blessed the new work. Local believers sacrificed time and money to help get the alterations in the mission center done in time for the initial campaign with the Bible school team. The building provides a chapel for a maximum audience of seventy-five. At present there are ten to twenty in the Sunday morning services, most of whom are believers in the area. Children’s work began with a dozen. Prayer meetings at the center and cottage meetings in the city are held on alternate weeks.

Looking into the future, the “Mennonitische Heimatmission” has no vain illusions of a task easily accomplished. The goal is church building. Committed to this goal, missionary Gundlach is seeking the Lord’s leading in the road ahead. A few Mennonites and Baptists are involved in the missionary outreach. Can they be consolidated into a working fellowship while doing the utmost toward reaching others for Christ? There are no ready answers available. One thing is clear to all the responsible brethren. Here is a challenge that calls for the Spirit’s leading step by step. To shrink from the task because of unanswered questions would be cowardice before God. He it is who called. He has given direction in many ways already. He will build His church in Freising.

The Importance of Accuracy

You cannot compromise with correctness. A thing done is done correctly or incorrectly. Accuracy comes before clarity and nothing can be clear that is not accurate. Things get twisted so easily in the telling of them. When an accident occurs, or workmen go out on strike, there are almost sure to be widely differing stories about what has happened. Two persons see the same thing from different angles, and each is sure he knows all about it. It takes a skillful reporter to give a strictly factual account of such a happening.

A good physician is skilled in the art of finding facts. He listens attentively to the patient’s description or symptoms of the disease. But he does not depend entirely on the word of the patient, however trustworthy the patient may be. His practiced eye sees what escapes the patient’s notice; and his understanding of the working of the human body enables him to know the real meaning of the patient’s observations. The life of the patient may well depend on getting things straight. It is confronting to know that our Great Physician is also our High Priest and Advocate. He knows all about us, even our very thoughts. Those who try to hide anything from Him only deceive themselves. — Christian E. Charles.

The Meaning of Life

By Janice Christophel

I stood one day on a lonely path
Wondering where to go.
Wanting peace from all the wrath
That filled my troubled soul.

I sought a friend, but none I found
To share that inner pain,
To ease the load that pressed so cold
Upon that deepest plain.

Slowly wondering down that path,
My being deep in thought,
Wrestling back and forth within . . .
Myself, or what I sought.

Within the stillness of that night
There seemed a gentle touch,
As if a voice was whispering peace;
Be calm, have rest, release.

And then I knew that Hand of Love
Was watching over me.
I had been blind, but now I see
God loves and cares for me.

Want to Be Old?

Do you want to live long? Well, by the statistics you should be rich, a married woman, and in the class of white-collar jobs. You should also be born in an English-speaking or Scandinavian country, be the second child, female again, or a mother between 25 and 29. Your grandparents should also be very old.

Don’t be a king, they have the worst longevity record, only 49 years. Don’t be a Catholic priest if you are going to be a minister and want to live long. Protestant ministers live five years longer.

Science has added a bonus of 23 years to life since 1900. The average life-span is about 72 years today. If you hang in there until 2000 it may well average 80 years.

Now the value of life does not depend on its span of time but on the quality of our performance and faith. — Moses Slabaugh.

A New Era for the Nigeria Mennonite Church

Since July 1967 no Mennonite Board of Missions personnel have been assigned to the South-Eastern State of Nigeria as this area was very much involved in the Nigerian civil war. During the past year and a half there have been exchanges by correspondence with leaders of the Nigeria Mennonite Church and certain members. Efforts by the moderator and secretary of the church to attend the Africa Mennonite and Brethren-in-Christ Fellowship meetings in Kinshasa in July 1969 did not succeed. However, Million Belete, AFBCF chairman from Ethiopia, did manage to reach Uyo and spend several days visiting the churches in August 1969 following the Kinshasa meeting.

From February 25 to March 8, 1970, Vern Preheim of Mennonite Central Committee and I were in Nigeria to plan Mennonite participation in the relief and rehabilitation work. We also succeeded in paying a short visit to the Mennonite Church area.

It was very important that we could meet and visit with the leaders of the church from all four areas. They were eager to be reassured that we wanted to continue a fraternal relationship to them, and our coming was one tangible evidence of that commitment. The time was all too short but we nevertheless managed to meet with the leaders of the Itam, Ubium, and Ibiono areas in one session and then — together with O. E. Essiet, moderator; I. U. Nsasak, secretary; and B. O. Udoh, assistant secretary — visited the more isolated Ibianga area in the afternoon.

Three Thousand Members

The church has grown during the past three years from 30 congregations to approximately 50 today. Membership has increased during this time from 2,400 to about 3,000. A vigorous new evangelistic thrust has been particularly evidenced in the Ibianga area.

The Mennonites were located in an area close to the state line. For a long time there were intertribal tensions present. When war came this region became a battleground.

The battlefront moved back and forth, with each change affording a new round of difficulty for the local people. The Ibianga congregations were evacuated from their homes for nearly a year, spending this time in the bush.

Among the concerns discussed with the church leaders were pastoral support, the possible return of mission personnel, subsidy to church, reopening of Bible school, a renewed appeal for medical and educational work, and scholarship and agricultural programs. Most of these matters were under discussion already for several years. In a written response to the church I attempted to indicate how the postwar situation is a new one which, in many respects, precludes the possibility of returning to prewar dreams and visions:

"War is always a decisive happening with many implications for the future. Already several years before the war came, we had been feeling and saying that a new era was opening. The old patterns in mission-church relationship, for example, were no longer adequate and new concepts were needed. At times you found us as a mission reluctant to respond to your pleas in the conventional manner. This was because we were also trying to be sensitive to what we felt the demands of the new day are. Consequently some things you expected and wanted of us did not materialize.

"It seems very clear now that the war sealed that earlier chapter of history and, whether we want it otherwise or not, there can be no returning to the old ways. In fact, we feel that your government's policy is sound and geared to the future welfare of your people and should therefore be respected."

Should Foreign Missionaries Return?

First, in weighing the question of justification for the mission to attempt to return missionary personnel to work with the Nigeria Mennonite Church, three factors must be kept in view: (1) In general government policy toward missions is restrictive and new visas will only be issued after careful scrutiny and assurance that the personnel receiving visas will be doing something a Nigerian cannot do and which is essential to the national welfare. Certain states are more sensitive in this matter than others. Among the sensitive areas is the South-Eastern State. (2) During the next two years when rehabilitation is being carried out, there would be added risks to both church and mission in keeping a clear line to avoid misunderstanding. (3) Most basic of all is the question of whether the return of missionary personnel after this three-year period of complete autonomy from mission direction — and taking into account the encouraging growth and vitality the church now evidences — is actually justified. Are there not other ways and means of symbolizing and experiencing our fraternal relationship apart from dependence on a mission presence? In view of these concerns, we agreed that the question of the return of missionary personnel will be dropped for at least the next two years.

Second, the board has a policy of not subsidizing national pastors and evangelists. Offering such help now, even though there has been hardship during the past three years, would not encourage the church to come to terms with the long-range question of pastoral support and the total pattern of the ministry.

Third, it is even less realistic to talk today about a mission implementing medical and educational work than it was a decade ago. Rather, our board is prepared to continue and even expand somewhat the scholarship program which was inaugurated several years ago. This is something that the church can administer and it has the kind of flexibility in application that is highly desirable in this still fluid situation. This includes scholarships for trade training (apprenticeships in crafts), secondary and technical school, and theological/Bible school. This will provide assistance to between 45 and 50 students each year.

In addition, the mission has agreed to help the church in establishing an agricultural program as a continuation of what was being done before the war — although the approach is now somewhat modified. This is to be carried out in the four church areas.

Fourth, although we are strongly committed to theological training and see the need for training programs, the question of what kind of approach should be taken by the church in Nigeria in the future is still not clear. There is a Bible school in the Ibianga area which was founded by the Mennonite congregations there within the past year. Twenty-four students are now enrolled and plans for adding a special one-year pastor's course are under way. If similar programs could be founded in the other three areas in the next several years, this would serve the growing needs of the total church and would possibly point the way for the founding of a somewhat higher level school in a central location sometime in the future.

We are now entering a new kind of history with the decision not to return missionaries to work with the Nigeria Mennonite Church. This will be our first experience in trying to maintain a vital and mutually helpful relationship with a church where we no longer have a physical presence. This now forces us to consider what the basis of that relationship should be and what can be done to keep it alive. Undoubtedly, there must be provision for exchanges of fraternal visits, special teaching missions, and literature that is usable in that context. We must think imaginatively and be open to the leading of the Holy Spirit in order to find our way.

"As I See It"

Readers are urged to submit material on any issue for this column. Maximum of 400 words.

As a youth, I read the book by Drummond: The Greatest Thing in the World. Love has been the greatest motivating force since God promised a Savior to man. Our response to God's love is determined by our love to Him. "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he" (Prov. 23:7). See also Mark 7:21-23. God has given purpose for the life of each one of us, and has also given directions how to attain it. Being made free from the power of sin by the atoning blood of His Son: and then becoming His willing servants, we produce fruit unto a holy life. Romans 6:21, 22. Certainly a holy life is righteousness and obedience motivated by love to Christ. According to Paul in Ephesians, if we so learned Christ, and have been taught by Him; it follows then, that we will put off the old man, which is corrupt according to deceitful lusts; and that we put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness. God "hath chosen us .... [to] be holy and without blame" (Eph. 1:4). "That he might present to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish" (Eph. 5:27). This is love if we keep His commandments. John 14:15. It follows then, that a genuine love for Jesus who died for us, will give direction to our life.

I cannot help but think that the worldly drift, so pronounced in today's Christianity, reveals a fatal lack of love. A mere profession is not sufficient. Matthew 7:21. Genuine love to Christ would take away the immodest miniskirt, as well as all worldly fads prevalent in both sexes. It would also give us a proper relationship to our fellowman, and remove all racial barriers. As I see it, if we do not possess that love and appreciation to our Lord for the great price He paid for our salvation, then we will seek a carnal satisfaction in the sports, fashions, entertainments, and pleasures of this evil world. "Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." And then follows a love for this world with its lust and follies. Unregenerate men make sport of being girl watchers when miniskirts appear. But we have been called out of darkness into His marvelous light.

The Parable of the Donkeys

By Wesley S. Mast

In the town of Cantwen located in the state of Nakap lived several varieties of donkeys. Their appearance and behavior varied, due in part to donkey mutations, to the uniqueness of particular donkeys, and to changes in environment.

The donkeys’ residence was on the highest hill of Cantwen. In the last two decades of the twentieth century the donkeys “waxed fat and kicked.” Nevertheless, they lived together in donkey barns scattered over the hill, each donkey with his individual stall, a computerized and automatic diet, and instant cleaners for donkey waste. The donkeys met together once a week to listen to the head donkey hee-haw from a manual called “Ideal Donkey Behavior.” After this weekly speech the donkeys returned to their individual stalls, or to their plot of land (each donkey was allotted a half acre to till and to raise corn). Each donkey had his own plow, hoe, and harvesting equipment. Except for the donkey tradition, which said that all donkeys should meet weekly to listen to the head donkey, each donkey made his decisions by himself, even though the donkey manual said that donkeys were created to live together and their survival depended on loving relationships with other donkeys.

Though the last twenty years of donkey activities were becoming increasingly asinine, the year of 1970 was the worst. Donkeys were frustrated. In January of 1970 a donkey named Odor accidentally tramped on the cornstalk of a donkey named Steward. Since Steward was in charge of his things, that is his own plot of land, he immediately saw that justice was accomplished, and kicked Odor in the front-left knee. Odor’s knee was knocked out of joint and he fell to the ground. As a responsible donkey Steward decided to be sure that no more cornstalks would be destroyed, for Odor was a serious threat to the donkey corn crop. The operation was simple: put a tranquilizer in Odor’s water and after fifteen minutes proceed to operate. (As a responsible donkey Steward did this at night.)

In a more severe uprising two months later the hoof of one donkey got caught in the mouth of another donkey. Not even the PhD in the removal of hoof-in-mouth cases could remove the hoof. The one donkey died from lack of food and the other donkey died three months later from lack of exercise and from air pollution.

Out of these and many more crises the donkey colonies produced several answers. Though it is generally difficult for donkeys to do anything together there were several groups of donkeys who met together to discuss the situation. Donkeys began to mix in ways unknown to their history. The distinctiveness of donkey varieties decreased and donkeys began to gather for different reasons, and emerged with different answers.

One group of donkeys (all from the hill on Cantwen) said that the problem with donkeys comes from heart sickness. According to their research donkeys throughout the world had received help only from heart transplants. So the heart donkeys began to examine each other. Five donkeys had heart murmurs, four had high blood pressure, and two had faulty valves. The diagnosis was obvious: donkeys need new hearts. If it were possible to get a heart transplant, all would be well. So eleven donkeys had heart transplants.

The donkeys had not anticipated the change that would come when the new heart is placed in a totally new environment. But after several days they became well adapted. And every week on Monday night the new-heart donkeys met together to tell each other when each had received his heart transplant and precisely what his feelings were since the transplant, particularly the warm, inner feeling of donkey heart transplants.

The donkeys told others about the results of heart transplants, the certainty of happier donkey life, and the guarantee that in spite of donkey kicks the heart would always function. They assured other donkeys that a new heart was just what all donkeys needed and that it would be beneficial in every case.

Back home donkey behavior had changed little, if at all. In one week two hoof-in-mouth cases were reported. Even the donkeys with new hearts, though able to do more work, found relationships with other donkeys more difficult than before, for each donkey claimed he had received a better heart than others.

A second group of donkeys (also from Cantwen) did research on the sociology of donkeys and methods of donkey power. They traveled to other donkey groups to find new ways to benefit all donkeys as a system. As a result of their research the answer to the donkey crisis as they saw it was an equalizing of power for all the donkeys. It was obvious that the head donkey owned and operated all of Cantwen. He was the one who underfed some donkeys, the one who gave large plots of land to rich donkeys and small lots to poor donkeys. He must go.

The donkeys met at night, making plans to take over the donkey presidency and to guarantee that all donkeys would have equal wealth and equal power. Their strategy was this: when the chief donkey gave the command to rise at 4:00 a.m. they would lasso him and put him in jail. And so they did.

These donkeys met every Saturday night to celebrate the overthrow of the head donkey and the subsequent implementation of the “Equality for Donkeys” program. Like the first group they planned how to achieve maximum results from their efforts and traveled throughout the donkey world sharing their vision for the entire donkey population.

Even though better conditions were promised, donkey life remained the same at Cantwen. Donkey plots were shared equally and donkey stalls eliminated, but the power remained in the hands of a few rather than one. Not all were treated equally for the few at the top themselves implemented equality—an impossible task.

A third group of donkeys met together, fed up with their own bulky actions yet with the hope that perhaps a few donkeys might put into action something yet unknown around them. The inadequacy of heart transplants and the difficulty of the new donkey government led them to believe there must be another way. They investigated the origins and the history of donkeys. They found, to their surprise, that in several different periods of donkey history very small groups of donkeys had actually plowed in teams. Their code was quite simple: pay close attention to healing the bruises and sores of fellow-donkeys and nudge fellow-donkeys when they need help.

And so a few donkeys shared their land with each other and submitted to each other in making decisions. Though there were many sores there were many more resources for healing.

The Witness of Missionary Medicine

By Mark A. Kniss

Some persons today are questioning the validity of missionary medicine, and this is not entirely without reason. Economically speaking, the witness of medical missions is the least productive method of evangelism. That is, dollar for dollar, medical missions bring fewer people to Christ than any other form of witness or evangelism. There are, of course, exceptions to this rule.

What then is the justification or the witness potential of missionary medicine? First, it is the direct fulfillment of Christ’s command to “go . . . heal . . . teach . . . baptize . . .” In all good conscience we can no more omit the command to heal than the commands to teach and baptize, and Christ did not base this on economic feasibility.

Second, in so far as the staff of the healing institution are Christian in their motivation and outlook, missionary medicine is a visible demonstration of the compassion of Christ. The people of India are seemingly more hungry for love and compassion than the people of North America. This is the reason that many patients are willing to travel eighty or one hundred miles—passing by two or three adequate medical facilities and several private practitioners—to be examined, treated, and cared for at the mission hospital.

Third, the work of medical missions is a demonstration of the power of God which is released through faith in Christ. Many times I have remarked that by American standards a patient has no logical or scientific basis for recovery, and yet he walks out of the hospital a new person. It is gratifying to know that most of these patients recognize that they have been healed by God and that the hospital staff are His instruments and servants. However, acts of love and compassion alone are not enough. The witness must combine word and deed. The word and deed of missionary medicine are mutually reinforcing, with either one or the other of itself being weak and incomplete.

The witness of missionary medicine is the supportive and practical demonstration of the love and compassion of Christ and His genuine concern for the wholeness of man. The validity of the witness of missionary medicine cannot be based on the number of decisions for Christ, but rather on the dedication and compassion of each member of the healing team and the extent to which this is demonstrated and communicated to those receiving this ministry.

Introducing Yamade-San

By Ruth Shenk

We first met Masakazu Yamade when he was a Bible school student in Tokyo and we were just beginning our study of the Japanese language. He had already graduated from college with a degree in law and knew English well so we could communicate easily. Language aside, there was also a spiritual communication for we had a similar call to serve the Lord and were equipping ourselves for that service. He contributed to our preparation by helping us understand the customs in Japan and frankly telling us what missionary traits were appreciated and what were not.

Twelve years have passed since then. Yamade-san, serving as church conference chairman, is a central person in the life of the church here. He and his wife also are taking responsibility for the Kaneko family in Ecuador by gathering support for them and sending out reports of their work to the churches here.

Yamade-san was part of the Mennonite Church here from its very beginning. He was in the first group to be baptized in 1951 in Obihiro. After graduating from Bible school he sold and distributed Christian literature in Kushiro, and also served as assistant pastor for one year.

One day he was introduced to a pleasant, good-looking girl who was working in a department store. She was a member of the church but had drifted from the fellowship because she had to work on Sundays. He urged her to come back and through his interest and concern led her and other members to renewal. Sometime later she was asked about marrying Yamade-san but at first she turned down the proposal because he was more in earnest about his faith than she was. Later she accepted and feels because of her marriage to him, she has been able to grow in her faith.

The Yamades planned and built their own home about five years ago. It is furnished tastefully and shows their love of beauty and order. They enjoy gardening. Mrs. Yamade likes flower arranging and provides a new arrangement for the church each Sunday. Since their marriage, Mrs. Yamade has also studied and received her qualification as a kindergarten teacher. Recently she has begun teaching at a church kindergarten.

The church has priority for the Yamades even though Mr. Yamade earns his living as a High School English teacher. He also teaches church history and Christian education at the Bible school in the evenings.

The Yamades are open to new leading from the Lord although he is serving effectively as a layman now. They know the excitement and joy of daily walking with Jesus.

We Can't Escape Politics

An editorial in Christian Century raises some uncomfortable questions for the Christian regarding his relationship to politics. Traditionally Mennonites have separated themselves from active participation in politics by a gulf greater than the Grand Canyon on the grounds that church and state should be kept apart.

The editorial places some current attitudes to politics on a continuum: (1) Christians believe it is a good thing if an active politician is a Christian; (2) they are less happy to admit that the church should prepare individuals to actively participate in politics; (3) they find less acceptable the idea that the church should involve itself directly in politics; and (4) they are least ready to admit that politics plays a part in the community of believers itself.

Like many citizens, I can’t completely rid myself of the idea that “politics and political language is designed to make lies sound truthful and murder respectable, and to give an appearance of solidarity to the wind.” Politics, like Victorian sex, seems to be necessary, but evil. Yet I have to admit, even as the editorial suggests, that I like to know that a political leader is a Christian. Maybe he shouldn’t be in politics, but I’m glad he is. I fear less what he will do if I know his basic commitments.

Also, like some Christians, I am not quite ready to suggest that the church should openly encourage individuals to participate in politics. It’s almost the same as asking a person to deliberately become a movie star. It’s OK for an actor to continue in his career if he was one before he became a Christian, but to deliberately aim for a movie career? Our traditional stance has been that energetic, Spirit-filled men should be steered away from the political arena to the mission field. I can’t quite imagine what it would be like to have an altar call for young men to heed the call of the Lord to politics.

It seems to me that we have convinced ourselves that politics is really not the Christian’s concern, so everything belonging to politics has been put into a carefully partitioned compartment in our lives where it won’t overflow to other areas. Yet when political fever hits a person, it affects all of him.

Over the years I have noticed that there is no subject which causes temperatures to rise higher and faster than do political issues. Our religious periodicals may carry many articles about missions and evangelism, but the letters to the editor which are most vehement are about socio-political affairs. Criticism of a political party, or the president, or the nation, strikes fire faster than any “death of God” theology. Though the church may not advocate involvement in politics, people seem more bothered by such matters. And is it because politics have been compartmentalized, they feel they have the right to get irritated and offensive? Who then is god in such a person’s life?

A few weeks ago I listened to Dr. Robert Lindner, professor at Kansas University, clarify some of these issues at the annual Tabor College alumni dinner. He spoke as an “evangelical Christian.” (Sometimes it seems necessary to indicate what stripe of Christians we belong to.)

He cleared the air by stating that most political issues today are spiritual issues because both are concerned with people. Though it is possible to separate church and state, it is impossible to separate church and politics, he said. Spiritual concerns and political issues cannot be divided. People always must have some view of the state. Most political issues have moral or spiritual dimensions which cannot be ignored by the Christian such as war, racism, justice, birth control, and abortion.

He pointed to the need for men with ethical principles in government. Who should have stronger principles than a Christian? He pointed to the fact that the Anabaptists, the present-day Christians in Russia, and others could not or cannot participate in politics. Today’s Christians can.

He warned that if good men stand by and do nothing, we can get a repetition of Nazi Germany, where the intellectual community at the university and the church remained silent and avoided responsibility in political affairs.

I was glad to hear what he said in view of the fact that today’s dissatisfied college students are being urged to work toward electing men of their choice to government. Has the church a responsibility here also? It can continue to keep politics at arm’s length even while its members must decide on political issues almost daily. To escape it is impossible.

By Katie Funk Wiebe

Gospel Herald, September 1, 1970
Observing that the church not only should be poor, but “should be seen as poor,” Pope Paul VI announced that reforms were under way to give the church "an image of poverty" more in keeping with the gospel.

Speaking at his weekly general audience in St. Peter’s Basilica, the Pope stressed the “immense importance” of Pope John’s vision of the church as “the church of the poor.”

After recalling the value of evangelical poverty as a personal virtue demanded of Christians, Pope Paul VI underscored Vatican II’s call for “another kind of poverty — ecclesiastical poverty — which should be practiced by the church as a collective body meeting in Christ.”

The pontiff frankly admitted that in the course of history the church has presented different “aspects,” such as that of “a great property owner” or “a civil power.” She also, he said, presented the “aspect” of great wealth, “by decorating her cell — her worship — with magnificent temples and rich vestments,” in an endeavor to express “its sacred character and spiritual inspiration.”

But, he went on, people today, “especially those who look at the church from the outside,” rightly demand that she not show herself as “an economic power,” nor as “given over to financial concerns,” and “insensitive to the needs of peoples and nations.”

The growing affluence of Americans and religion’s involvement — or lack of involvement — in social action were cited as major reasons for an overall decline of religion in America.

However, a sociology professor pointed out that a decline in membership did not necessarily indicate a decline in religious influence. And an upward trend in church membership among the “authoritarian” and “fundamentalist” churches was noted.

Religious leaders surveyed by the Philadelphia Inquirer said that the decline in church membership and attendance was largely due to the growing affluence of Americans which enables them to afford diversions they never had before.

The Church of the Brethren has revised its Statement on War, placing its support behind young men who refuse to cooperate with the draft as well as those who elect alternate service to combat.

Delegates to the historic “peace churches” annual meeting in Lincoln, Neb., made the change.

“The church will seek to use its influence to abolish or radically restructure the system which conscripts persons for military purposes,” said an amendment to the statement.

Long supportive of conscientious objection to war, the Church of the Brethren had previously cooperated with the alternative service clause in draft laws. Young men from the denomination were almost automatically exempted from combat duty.

Some advocates of selective objection, that is those who oppose particular wars, and persons totally opposed to conscription have argued that the current laws favor the “peace churches” and discriminate against antiwar members in those churches not teaching total pacifism.

The new Brethren policy, in effect, puts the church on record for the first time in support of those who disagree with draft laws. More emphasis is thereby placed on the conscience of the individual and less on the policies which the denomination had recommended.

An amendment added on the convention floor urged members to divorce themselves, as far as possible, from “employment and investment” related to defense industries.

It further stated that the recruitment by the armed forces on a Brethren college campus is “inconsistent” with the church’s position.

Between the Lines reports that Arnold Toynbee states that our spiritual disintegration as a people has caused the U.S. to replace Russia as the most feared world power. The horribly indiscriminate destructiveness of our technological weaponry in Vietnam and the obnoxiously corrupt and tyrannical government we have created and support in Saigon have caused more resentment and fear than the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia or any other recent communist action.

We have observed for ourselves that the foreign press is full of such reflections — papers from Canada, Britain, France, Italy, India, and Japan. Friends have sent us newspapers from Ankara and Istanbul which exhibit rabid anti-Americanism in their editorials and cartoons. Yet Turkey is our ally, standing on the Soviet’s menacing borders.

The conflict between concerned scientists and the military technicians and industrialists was intensified some months ago when radiation physicist, Dr. Ernest J. Sternglass of the University of Pittsburgh, released the results of extensive studies indicating that fallout from the U.S. nuclear tests had probably caused about 400,000 prenatal or infant deaths in this country since the early 1950’s. Though the public has heard relatively little about this, the Sternglass report shook the AEC and stirred vigorous debate in scientific circles.

Two eminent scientists of the famed AEC Lawrence Radiation Laboratories in Livermore, California, Dr. John Gofman, medical director and nuclear chemist, and biophysicist Dr. Arthur Tamplin, have charged that the new reactors and the underground blasts will create radioactivity approaching dangerous levels. Since Gofman and Tamplin have long been highly respected scientists and officials within the AEC and nuclear industries, the controversy takes on added dimensions. Gofman and Tamplin warn that even in view of the “permissible levels of radiation” now set by the AEC, there would be at least 32,000 extra cancer deaths yearly if the above plans are carried out.

Both previously estimated that 16,000 cancer deaths might be caused if the entire U.S. population were exposed to the maximum dose now ruled as permissible by the AEC. After further study they doubled their estimates to 32,000. Then more recently, Dr. Gofman released to Congress further "highly confidential" studies in which the fear was expressed that if all present projects were carried out, the fatalities from atomic exposure might be closer to 250,000 deaths annually, all of which gives added substance to the Sternglass thesis and verifies the suspicion many have had that the AEC still seriously underestimates the danger of radiation.

U.S. Air Force planes have sprayed enough chemicals in South Vietnam since 1962 to defoliate 3.8 million acres of forest and bush, as well as 500 acres of cropland, according to recent U.S. Defense Department figures. In addition, millions of large holes — many 35 ft. deep and 45 ft. wide, caused by U.S. bombings — have rendered much valuable cropland permanently useless.
Anabaptism: Evangelical Thrust for '70s?

If Mennonites succeed in a bold new move to explore their place in evangelism, Anabaptist influence will achieve new eminence among Protestants. An all-Mennonite consultation on evangelism in April 1972 will lay the groundwork for cooperation in evangelism similar to successful — and influential — all-Mennonite cooperatives such as Mennonite General Committee and Mennonite Disaster Service.

Anabaptist-Mennonite distinctive are certain to play a new role in evangelism in the next decade, states Myron Augsburger, named by Time magazine as one of America's foremost evangelists, and currently president of Eastern Mennonite College in Harrisonburg, Va. Augsburger heads up the steering committee of the mammoth all-Mennonite Consultation on Evangelism, scheduled for Chicago's Conrad Hilton Hotel, April 13-16, 1972.

"Mennonites have been saying for years that evangelism reaches across national boundaries, affects every area of human life, calls for reconciliation, and builds for peace," asserts Augsburger. "Many thoughtful evangelicals are urging us to speak up, to share our concepts of discipleship in a world where reconciliation is so desperately needed, between man and God and man and his neighbor.

"The great commandment of Christ," Augsburger affirms, "to love God with heart, mind, and soul, and to express this love in concern for our fellowman, our 'neighbor' — this commandment is ours to follow daily in all our lives. This is total-man evangelism, Anabaptist-Mennonite evangelism. Our world needs it as never before."

The 1972 all-Mennonite congress has been in planning since the U.S. Congress on Evangelism in Minneapolis in September 1969. The roster of men on the steering committee reads like a Mennonite Who's Who. Members of the executive committee include, in addition to chairman Augsburger: Vice-Chairman Roy Just, Secretary Paul M. Miller, Henry Ginder, J. B. Toews, Palmer Becker, Reuben Short, and John Powell.

Part of the Mennonite approach to a witness for Christ has been their concept of brotherhood. Clergy and laity distinctions are seen only as differing functions of brothers in Christ. Thus evangelism is not seen as a part-time specialty of pastors and congregational leadership, but of all Christians, all of the time.

For Mennonites, evangelism has meant winning people to an all-out commitment to Jesus Christ, in a combination of spiritually responsive faith and responsible social action. It isn't an easy commitment.

It has been easier for liberal churches to emphasize social action without pressing for evangelical commitment to Jesus Christ. On the other hand, it has been easier for fundamentalist-evangelical churches to preach a salvation message without calling for commitment to social service.

The various Mennonite groups — from conservative Old Order Mennonites to progressive-wing General Conference churches — have long cooperated on vigorous social and humanitarian services. Mennonite Central Committee represents all Mennonites in relief work around the world, providing both material goods and Voluntary Service workers "in the name of Christ." Men of all groups jump into action in rescue, clean-up, and rebuilding work through Mennonite Disaster Service. MDS was cited recently by the Red Cross for long hours of dedicated service "in the name of Christ," working in the devastated areas of Mississippi and Virginia after Hurricane Camille.

"We need now to explore ways together of becoming increasingly effective in communicating the gospel, and in winning men and women to an active commitment to Jesus Christ," declares Augsburger.

The April 1972 all-Mennonite consultation anticipates the Mennonite World Conference being held later in midsummer 1972 in South America and the inter-denominational Key Bridge Conference in Washington in 1973. Planners hope that the Chicago consultation on evangelism will deepen convictions for evangelism and explore ways Anabaptist-Mennonite emphases can be used to the full in reaching modern men and women with the gospel.

Compassion Funds Activate Camping Program

Compassion Funds have made it possible for approximately 80 youth to experience a week at a Christian camp in northern Virginia during the period August 10-21. The campers, ages 12-14, came to Highland Retreat from Newport News, Harrisonburg, and Chesapeake, Va.; and Durham and Winston-Salem, N.C. The Virginia Mennonite Board of Missions, Harrisonburg, initiated the idea, while Mennonite churches in these five cities were responsible to invite local youth.

Camp Friendship is one of four projects sponsored by the Virginia Board that is approved by the Minority Ministries Council of Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, Ind. Half of the Compassion Fund contributions may be retained by Mennonite district conferences for projects within their respective districts upon approval of the Minority Ministries Council.

In Virginia Conference, the council has also named Northeast Community Project in Harrisonburg and two projects in Durham, N.C., as being eligible for Compassion Funds. All these activities are designed to bring a Christian witness to inner-city youth.

Robert Friedmann, Anabaptist Scholar, Dies

Robert Friedmann, Anabaptist scholar and close brother to many throughout the Mennonite Church, died on July 29, 1970, at his home in Kalamazoo, Mich., following an illness of several months.

Born into a Jewish home, Friedmann became interested in Christianity through the study of Leo Tolstoi. After a careful study of Anabaptist history during the early 1920s, he became a convinced Christian. For a half-century Friedmann immersed himself in Anabaptist-Mennonite research and published literally hundreds of articles in the Mennonite Encyclopedia, the Mennonite Quarterly Review, and other scholarly journals.

According to Friedmann, Anabaptism was the apotheosis of New Testament Christianity, a level never before — or since (we might pause to reflect) — reached within history. He saw himself as an Anabaptist, and was one in heart and understanding with the era and men responsible for the rediscovery of the Anabaptist vision, men such as H. S. Bender and Guy Hershberger. In fact, he was one among several who together attempted to understand Anabaptist beginnings in the sixteenth century.

Friedmann was a "universal" Anabaptist, equally at home with (Old) Mennonites and "CGs"; with Hutterites and European Mennonites. He had a warm word for the Amish, considered himself akin to the Society of Brothers and Reba Place, and carried on an extensive correspondence with Quakers and members of the Church of the Brethren. But Friedmann's horizons were still broader. He understood and respected a whole spectrum of theological positions held by scholars and churchmen of other faiths.

Robert Friedmann himself was a convinced Anabaptist, however, and remained so until his death in his eightieth year of life. It is fitting that his family and friends have set up a "Robert Friedmann Memorial Fund," the proceeds to go to the Mennonite Historical Library at Goshen, Ind.

Virginia Mennonites Confront Housing Needs

They call themselves the "Mennonite Volunteer Building Assistance Association." In the past six months this group in southeast Virginia has renovated five homes and a long list of homeowners are awaiting their help.

The organization is composed of a representative from each of the four Mennonite churches in Newport News, Va. Vaseo Boyd represents the Calvary church; Nevin Steiner, the Warwick congregation; Gerald Showalter, Tidingsdon Avenue; and Raymond Smoker, the Providence congregation.

The project was initiated when the local Office of Economic Opportunity ran out of funds and a representative came to Nelson Burkholder, pastor at Calvary, and requested volunteer labor. He knew Mennonites were noted for their skill and ability to work—a syndrome not to be despised.

Since the Newport News Mennonites did have a mind to work, an organization was started as volunteers began to repair homes that failed to meet the standards of the city building inspector. Volunteers contribute Saturday labor while the four cooperating congregations provide financial backing. The group anticipates repairing 12 houses a year unless more churches become involved and the project mushrooms.

The volunteers are finding the program to be a rewarding experience. Gerald Showalter says, "You don't find time; you make time." The workers are inspired to see homeowners join in the repair work, and most of all, neighbors are beginning to repair their homes on their own initiative when they see what can be done.

What do the homeowners think? Mrs. Heath on 24th Street was overwhelmed when three men came to evaluate the needs of her house. She said, "In 76 years I've never seen anything like this, that men pray about repairing my house before doing anything else." A widow of 29 years and the only white person in the black community, she has lived 46 years in what used to be the nicest section of Newport News. She plans to stay.

The Mennonite Volunteer Building Assistance Association executive committee is ready to evaluate the work to date and project the future. Perhaps their organization will qualify for Compassion Funds through the Minority Ministries Council. They are very much aware, however, that funds are more readily available than labor.

Youth Consider Faith at Weekend Camp

Youth exploring the meaning of faith was a major thrust during a three-day church camp experience held July 31 to Aug. 2 at Onneto on the island of Hokkaido, Japan. Mennonite congregations in Eastern Hokkaido cooperatively planned the annual Bible study centered session. Onneto Youth Center is a wooded lakeside retreat within view of steam-spouting Me-Akan in scenic Akan National Park. This year more than 60 persons ranging from toddler to adult were involved, the largest group being upper teens.

Rain changed plans for climbing Me-Akan, broke up volleyball games, drove bikers indoors, and provided more time for informal sharing. It was a time when two Kamishihoro high school sisters could ask the missionary wife, "Did you believe in God when you were a child?" "Was your marriage arranged?" "Do you think a woman's happiness is in the home?"

It was a time when Taiki and Kushiro and Obihiro young people, including the missionary daughter, could ask and share: "What are American schools like?" "How can I stop worrying about college entrance exams?" "When did you become a Christian and how is your life different now?" "Does prayer mean?" All these were opportunities for older Christians to guide young seekers a step toward Christian faith.

Reiji Asai, lay pastor at Furano, testified: "Most campers were seekers or new believers, but practicing hymns together, and fellowship in the Lord in this beauty spot of nature was a great experience."

The camp theme was "Life's Oasis ... whoever is thirsty should come to Me and drink." In the Sunday worship service pastor Hiroshi Mori of Kushiro presented Jesus' invitation to all thirsty ones. Camp was a time for realizing our thirst and reaching again for living water.

New Audiovisuals Treat Social Concerns

Communication between the generations, war, and drug abuse are three contemporary social concerns treated in two films and a filmstrip now being offered to congregations and other groups from the Mennonite Board of Missions audiovisual library.

A deceptively simple allegory, The Magician starts with a group of children playing. They chance upon the magician, who entices them with his tricks and gallery of "magie" that includes a toy gun for everyone. The magician has a gun with which he fires at targets. Now a child is urged to shoot the gun at targets which progress in form from inanimate objects to animals, to an "enemy" man, to that of a mother holding a child. Still lined up, the children are eventually given real guns and are marched off over a hill—and there is heard the sound of loud gunfire. Another group of children arrives, and the whole sequence begins to repeat itself.

The Magician, a black-and-white 18-minute production from Sterling Educational Films of New York City, is a visual story. Only background music and the unintelligible words of military commands are heard. An antiwar classic recommended for junior high through adult audiences, The Magician is available on a rent-free basis.

I Just Don't Dig Him concerns Ken, a 14-year-old youth, and his relationship with his father. As the film opens, conflict between father and son comes to a head over Ken's staying out until 2:00 a.m. Charges and countercharges fly back and forth. The following day both father and son compare their opinions with a peer who has a more objective view. After obtaining a different perspective both father and son begin to suspect that they haven't seen each other in a true light.

Produced by the Connecticut State Department of Mental Health, I Just Don't Dig Him will serve as an excellent discussion starter in the area of juvenile-parent relationships. The 11-minute color film includes a leader's guide.

Marijuana: What Can You Believe?, a two-part filmstrip from Guidance Associates, presents an objective discussion of marijuana designed to alert parents and teens.

NELSON BURKHOLDER (left) is chairman and Nevin Steiner is treasurer of the Mennonite Volunteer Building Assistance Association. to the dangers associated with this drug. In Part One, a doctor working in the HeightAshbury district of San Francisco discusses marijuana from a cultural, social, and clinical point of view. Part Two expresses the views of various young people who testify to their varying experiences with the drug. The two-part filmstrip includes a 30-minute narrative on record and a leader’s guide.

All three of these free-on-loan audio-visual resources, in addition to more than 250 other previously acquired film and filmstrip titles, are available from Mennonite Board of Missions, Box 370, Elkhart, Ind. 46514. A complete catalog listing may be obtained from the same address.

14 Enter Voluntary Service

The first of two Voluntary Service orientation schools being held during August at Mennonite Board of Missions saw 14 persons accepting the following one- or two-year assignments:

First row: Susan Pensinger, Portland, Ind., child care worker for one year at Kansas City (Kan.) Children’s Home; Iva Steverson, Goshen, Ind., teacher of missionary children for one year in Ahome, Mexico; Rachel Yoder, Shipshewana, Ind., teacher in Robstown, Tex., for one year; and Loree Davis, Biddleton, Idaho, unit hostess for one year in Albuquerque, N.M.

Second row: Joan Stahl, Millford, Neb., one year as child care worker with the Winston-Salem, N.C., unit; Diane Block, Louisville, Ohio, nurse aide at Maple Lawn Homes, Eureka, Ill., for one year; Susan Bender, Hubbard, Ore., secretary for one year at Mennonite Hospital, La Junta, Colo.; and Judy Bontrager, Scott City, Kan., one year as a girls’ club leader with the Buckeye, Ariz., unit.

Back row: Brenda and Ralph King, teacher and community service worker, respectively, for two years in Robstown, Tex.; Kenneth and Marie (absent from picture) Stevanus, Peru, Ind., program directors with the Los Angeles, Calif., unit for two years; Rollin Ulrich, Eureka, Ill., two years as orderly at Mennonite Hospital, La Junta, Colo.; and Adele Koch, Listowel, Ont., girls’ club leader for one year with the Northwest Portland, Ore., unit.

The Aug. 24-Sept. 6 orientation will find 28 volunteers in attendance, with 28 participants anticipated to date for Sept. 14-24. Currently 322 youth through senior adults are stationed at 55 different VS locations in the United States, Canada, Mexico, and Puerto Rico with Mennonite Board of Missions.

VS Personnel Openings Listed

“The summer months always find an increase in the number of persons entering Voluntary Service in the wake of high school and college graduations,” Clare Schumm, placement counselor at Mennonite Board of Missions, said in Elkhart on Aug. 13. “If we could only keep the momentum going toward the end of each year, closing VS personnel gaps would cease to be an ongoing problem. As it is, our present personnel situation could be rated fair to good, depending on which unit location one speaks of.”

Schumm pointed out that securing married couples to direct unit activities continues to be a primary task. The priority item right now, he said, is to find a mature couple to serve as host and hostess of the Voluntary Service Center located on the Mission Board grounds. Responsibilities include planning and preparing meals for orientation groups, providing lodging for VS-ers, housecleaning, and some headquarters maintenance between orientation schools.

The following VS units have an immediate need for married couples to coordinate activities: Cleveland, Ohio; Carlsbad, N.M.; Adriel School at West Liberty, Ohio; Durham, N.C. (a proposed new unit); St. Louis, Mo.; and Frontier Boys Village, Colorado Springs, Colo.

Current openings for nurse aides, LPNs, and RNs include Appalachian Regional Hospital, Arg, Ky.; Maple Lawn Homes, Eureka, Ill.; Mennonite Hospital, Aibonito, P.R.; Mennonite Medical Center, La Junta, Colo.; and Hattie Larllam Foundation for retarded children, Mantua, Ohio. Schumm also indicated the need for an orderly at Queens Avenue Manor in London, Ont.

Persons with social work training will find immediate openings with the Mennonite Friendship Center, Northwest Portland, Ore.; or the Kansas City (Mo.) Teen Center concentrating in the area of delinquent youth.

Construction work, especially related to Mennonite Disaster Service and in Pass Christian, Miss., as well as rehabilitation of urban housing for reselling to disadvantaged families, is a more recent addition to Voluntary Service assignments. Pittsburgh and Philadelphia are two units of this type opened in 1969, with Pittsburgh presently calling for additional personnel with construction skills.

Upcoming VS orientations at Mennonite Board of Missions are slated for Sept. 14-24, Oct. 12-22, and November 9-19. For more information on current Voluntary Service openings write directly to John Lehman, Director of Personnel Recruitment, Box 370, Elkhart, Ind. 46514.

Seven Elected as Trustees for EMC

The Virginia Mennonite Conference, which has primary responsibility for the operation of Eastern Mennonite College, elected two new trustees and reelected two others to the 32-member group during their annual meeting in July.

Elected to their first four-year terms were James R. Brunk of 2011 Woodcrest Circle in Harrisonburg and Isaac M. Risser of R. 5, Harrisonburg.

Virginia Conference reelected Earl R. Delp of 1558 College Ave. in Harrisonburg and Clayton D. Showalter of Broadway, Va.

LaMarr Kopp, assistant dean of resident instruction in the college of liberal arts at Pennsylvania State University, State College, was elected to a one-year term.

Reelected to a one-year term was Richard C. Debes, rector of the Franconia Mennonite Conference and pastor of the Souderton (Pa.) Mennonite Church. He is a 1949 EMC graduate.

Also reelected to a one-year term was Charles Longenecker, a faculty member at Lancaster (Pa.) Mennonite High School. He graduated from EMC in 1957 with a BA in biology.

Reelected chairman of the trustees by acclamation was Dewitt Heatwole, a dairyman from R. 4, Harrisonburg.

Churches Will Observe MCC’s 50th Anniversary

Plans are under way in the Lancaster and Akron, Pa., areas for the observance of MCC’s 50th Anniversary. An ad hoc committee composed of Mahlon Hess, Landis Hershey, Floyd Bartel, and Peter Dyck reports that the program will begin on Sat., Sept. 26, at 7:30 P.M., in Lancaster. It will feature contemporary music and a keynote speaker. Many young people are expected to attend.

Guest speakers will represent MCC in the local churches on Sunday morning, Sept. 27. Sunday afternoon there will be an open house at MCC headquarters, Akron, complete with films, refreshments, and tours of the offices. Further announcements will be forthcoming.

Other observances of MCC’s 50th Anniversary are being held. In Washington state, Walter Reimer, Homer Andres, and Milton J. Harder announce a reunion of former and present MCC workers at Camp
Camrec in the Cascade Mountains on Sept. 11 and 12. The program has not been finalized, but those who have slides, photos, or movies are requested to bring them and a projector. The emphasis will be on informal fellowship and sharing. For further information on the Washington reunion, write Milton J. Harder, 20355 34th Avenue South, Seattle, Wash. 98188.

Eastern CPS Reunion Held at EMC

The 25th Anniversary Reunion of World War II Civilian Public Service workers was held at Eastern Mennonite College, Aug. 1 and 2.

The reunion was for all former CPS men who had served in camps and units in the Eastern United States. A total of 763 persons registered for the reunion. This figure represents 263 men, their wives, and 250 teenagers and children. Thirteen states, including California, Florida, and New York, were represented.

Activities for the two-day reunion included planetarium demonstrations in the science center, tours of the campus, tours to the sites of the Grottoes and Luray CPS camps, and tours to nearby caverns and the Shenandoah National Park.

Saturday evening the group was welcomed to EMC by Dewitt Heatwole, chairman of the Board of Trustees of EMC. The "Salt of the Earth," a group of teenagers from Lancaster, Pa., provided special music for the program. After this, the women met together for a "Reminiscences" and "Dear Abby" session, with Mrs. Ruth Stoltzfus leading the discussion. The men held a short business meeting and then broke up into camp and unit meetings.

During the business meeting officers were elected for the 1971 meeting to be held at Camp Tel-Hai, Honey Brook, Pa. Those elected were: president, Harold D. Lehman, Harrisonburg, Va.; vice-president, Robert Benner, Akron, Pa.; secretary, Warren Good, Ephrata, Pa.; treasurer, Chester B. Nolt, Bareville, Pa.; and trustee, Charles Martin, Ephrata, Pa.

Changes Demand New Broadcast Approach

"I heard one of your messages concerning the Word of God. . . . I am a drunkard and a marijuana addict. . . . pray for me to see if I can become the man I was before I lost my wife."

This was one listener's response to a La Vida Verdad broadcast from Puerto Rico. The speaker on the program was Lester T. Hershey, director of Mennonite Broadcasts' Spanish programming.

This response is just one example of the problems a radio speaker faces, and the changing situation in Latin America increases the complexity of the problem. Hershey is trying to instill in his messages the relevance of Christ for the problems of twenty-first-century men and women.

An important current development in Latin America is the rapid growth of a middle class. The centuries-old gap between the aristocracy and the poor is being filled by an active class of people demanding a better life. They are demanding—and getting—better education, and education brings a desire for better jobs and living conditions.

Another frequent result of education is an individual's growing need to examine new ideas before he decides to accept them. He wants to be sure that a new principle applies to himself before he adopts it. In other words, it must be relevant. This changing situation has many implications for missions in Latin America and for the Mennonite Church's use of radio and television there. The traditional evangelical approach to gospel preaching is losing its appeal to many listeners in the face of increasing financial and occupational security.

This trend in Latin America is a real challenge to Christians who are called to the mass media ministry. Hershey says of his radio talks, "I make an application to let the listener know that the answer is Christ, His Word, and the Christian life." In an effort to present relevant messages he has chosen themes dealing with loneliness in the midst of a population explosion, fear of a meaningless life, social guilt, etc.

Of course, this trend is not limited to radio nor to Latin America. It serves to remind everyone that, whoever the neighbor is, he is most likely to be convinced that Christianity is worthwhile when he sees proof of its relevance in the life of a professing Christian.

Atlee Beechy on Special MCC Assignment

Atlee Beechy, member of the Mennonite Central Committee Executive Committee and Professor of Education and Psychology at Goshen College, left the United States for Europe and Asia on a special seven-month assignment for MCC.

Beechy will be visiting representatives of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam (DRVN) and Provisional Revolutionary Government (PRG) to express again MCC's interest in providing assistance to civilian war sufferers. He will seek an invitation to have a North American Mennonite visit North Vietnam.

A second aspect of the assignment is to further the projected longer-term program of MCC in South and Southeast Asia. Beechy will be spending approximately one month in India and Indonesia respectively for this purpose.

A similar mission was undertaken by Dr. Beechy in July 1968 when he visited DRVN and National Liberation Front (NLF) representatives in Paris, Algiers, Prague, New Delhi, and Phnom Penh.

Beechy has been invited as a participant in the International Peace Academy seminar being held Aug. 22 through Sept. 10, 1970, in Vienna. He is one of four United States citizens selected. The seminar will bring together approximately 50 international al participants to study peace theory, international control of violence, and peaceful social change.

In India, Beechy will be giving six weeks of his time lecturing and conducting seminars under the direction of the Fulbright program. Dr. Beechy served as a Fulbright lecturer at the University of Allahabad in 1960-61.

While in Europe and Asia, Beechy will be consulting with various local Mennonite peace committees and Mennonite Church leaders. Mrs. Beechy will accompany Atlee on most of this travel.

Beechy is on sabbatical leave from Goshen College, Goshen, Ind., and is volunteering his time to MCC for this assignment.

Hershey Fills
Personnel Gaps

Lester T. Hershey, speaker on the Luz y Verdad radio program originating in Aibonito, Puerto Rico, has been asked to assume the leadership of the Cayey congregation, one of 17 Mennonite churches in the Puerto Rico Conference. Sergio Rosario, former pastor at Cayey, is accepting temporary his role for the Mennonite bookstore in Ponce.

In explaining his temporary responsibility, Hershey said, "This means that I will try to coordinate the work, rather than act as pastor. It may mean that I will attend the Cayey church more regularly and preach more often there. I had been attending the Guavate congregation Sunday nights giving a Bible study, since Guavate doesn't have a pastor."

Although not the ideal situation, it does provide opportunity for Hershey to keep in touch with the people, which is important for his work as radio speaker. But the fact that he is not assuming full responsibility for a congregation indicates the changing role of the missionary. The modern mission worker is seen as a helper rather than a leader of national churches.

Lebanon Adds
Medical Center

A $180,000 medical center addition to the Lebanon (Ore.) Community Hospital has been completed and is in operation with two general practitioners, two staff members, and a one-day-a-week psychiatrist.

The addition, located east of the present hospital and connected by a covered walkway, provides 7,500 square feet of working space. It includes a business area, waiting room, and medical rooms for six doctors.

The medical center concept has been in the planning for three years, according to Gene Kanagy, hospital administrator. Convenience and efficiency are two objectives of the medical center's proximity to the hospital.

Lebanon Community Hospital Corporation, a nonprofit agency under contract to the Health and Welfare Division of Mennonite Board of Missions, manages the hospital and the new medical center.
The 54-bed hospital has been expanded three times since its construction in 1952.
It is a fully accredited institution.

FIELD NOTES

Ralph Palmer, 307 Lucas Creek Road,
Denbigh, Va. 23602, has recently received a large order of tracts from Herald Press. He plans to distribute these tracts in the Southern states this fall and winter using his new camper for traveling and for living quarters.

Pray for this work.

Paul Lantz was installed as pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Meadville, Pa., and the Sunnyside Mennonite Church,
Conneaut Lake, Pa., on Aug. 15. Allen Ebersole was bishop in charge of the service.

Winston J. Martin, Stratford, Ont., was ordained to the ministry at Avon Mennonite Church on July 19. Orland Gingrich officiated and Newton Gingrich brought the message.

Norman C. Shertzer, R. 2, Lancaster,
Pa., was ordained minister for the Slack-water congregation on Aug. 15. Ivan D.
Leaman was the officiating bishop, with the sermon given by Sanford G. Shetler.

Women's Retreat, Sept. 17-19, at Camp Hebron, with Catharine Leatherman on the theme, "Life in the Blood." Reservations or information may be secured by contacting Mrs. Röhner Hershey, R. 3, Lititz, Pa. 17543.

Don and Anna Ruth Jacobs were scheduled to arrive in Nairobi, Kenya, on
Aug. 26 for a term of service under Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions. Their address is P.O. Box 7586, Nairobi, Kenya.

J. Paul and Erma Lehman began a term of service in Ethiopia on Aug. 23. Their address is P.O. Box 2660, Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

Jere Brubaker began a three-year term as a teacher at Rosslyn Academy, Kenya, on Aug. 26. His address is P.O. Box 14146, Westlands, Nairobi, Kenya. A commissioning service was held on July 26 at the Willow Street Mennonite Church. Dan Sensenig was the speaker. Clayton Keener conducted the commissioning.

Paul and Esther Bucher began a three-year term in Saigon, Vietnam, on Aug. 20.
Their address is Box 991, Saigon, Vietnam.
A commissioning service was held for the Buchers on Aug. 2 at the Stony Brook Mennonite Church. Lester Hoover was the speaker; Raymond Charles conducted the commissioning.

Alice Hess will begin a three-year term as a teacher at the Rosslyn Academy,
Kenya. Her address will be P.O. Box
14146, Westlands, Nairobi, Kenya. A commisioning service was held for Alice at Halbecker Mennonite Church, Aug. 9.
Leon Stauffer and Chester Wenger were the speakers; Ivan Leaman conducted the commissioning.

New members by baptism: twenty-one at Marlboro, Alliance, Ohio; five at Fairview, Surrey, N.D.; four at Bethel, Gettysburg, Pa.

Change of address: Ross T. Bender from Goshen, Ind., to 2550 Ball Rd., Willow Grove, Pa. 19090.

Masami Yoshino, member of the Tsurgadai Church in Kushiro, arrived in the U.S. on Aug. 13 to participate in the MCC Trainee program. She had been working as an assistant laboratory technician in the city hospital since high school graduation.
For several years she has taught Sunday school and attended the Eastern Hokkaido
Bible School. She has interest in observing Christian homes and Sunday schools in North America.

Fumio Fukushima, a grade school teacher, was baptized in his home at Sahoro near Shintono, Hokkaido, on Aug.
7 by Pastor Ishimoto of Ashoro congregation and missionary Lee Kanagy. Mr.
Fukushima's growth in Christian faith and his decision to follow Christ came through his wife's prayers and his sense of responsibility for his two small children. Mrs.
Fukushima was baptized at the Bikubetsu
Mennonite Church prior to her marriage.
Communion among the five Christians present followed the baptism. Two nursery school teachers show interest in the monthly
Bible study held in the Fukushima home.

Groundbreaking ceremonies for the Tottori congregation in suburban Kushiro, Japan, were held on July 26, 1970. Three women who were the first to be baptized at Tottori turned the first shovelful of dirt, followed by Pastor Mimoto and missionary Charles Shenk. A year's planning and prayer had preceded the event as well as an extra three-month waiting period while the owner processed the deed and granted permission to build.

Dawn Buckwalter, daughter of missionary Ralph Buckwalter, left her home in Obihiro, Japan, on Aug. 10 with plans to attend Hesston (Kan.) College this fall. Gloria Shenk, Kushiro, Japan, and Ruth Kanagy, Ashoro, left home on Aug. 13 to enroll at Eastern Mennonite College. Dan Kanagy, a Hesston graduate, was among the 40 Intermennonite Trainees leaving New York on Aug. 18 for a year of work experience in Europe. His assignment is in the Netherlands.

After seven years of serving the Tokachi churches while living in Obihiro, Japan, Ralph and Genevieve Buckwalter and family moved on Aug. 19 to share in the life and nurture of the church in Asahigawa, which Hiroshi Kaneko, now in Quito, Ecuador, had begun. Prayer is requested for Spirit-led growth in Asahigawa, as well as strong leadership by the lay team of three brethren in Obihiro.

Pastor Kawano of Nakashibetsu and teacher Sawatari of Obihiro were delegates from the Hokkaido Mennonite churches to the International Work Camp sponsored by MCC in Asia. Beginning Aug 8 and lasting for two weeks, Asian and American delegates worked at landscaping a school for refugee children.

One thousand representatives from various women’s groups in eastern Hokkaido heard Charles Shenk speak on his view of the Japanese woman and the importance of the home based on the Bible. There was good interest and response from the primarily non-Christian audience.

Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, Ind., has received a $3,000 bequest from the estate of the late Mrs. Mary (Borneman) Berkv of Boyertown, Pa. Two thousand dollars was designated for the general mission program and $1,000 for the Yeotmal Theological Seminary, Berar, M.P., India. An additional $500 was sent directly to Mennonite Broadcasts, Inc., in Harrisonburg, Va., the mass communications division of the Mission Board.

Election results at the General Church Council meeting of the Meserete Kristos Church in Ethiopia held at the Bible Academy on July 31 and Aug. 1 are as follows: MKC Chairman, Beyene Mulatu; Secretary, Negash Kebede; Treasurer, Million Belete; Assistant Secretary, Asrat Gebre; additional Executive Committee members, Teferi Orjino and Michael Alemayahu.

In other business the council approved a budget of $110,000 for 1971. This includes $12,500 for evangelism. A constitution for an evangelism board yet to be organized was ratified. Until such a Board is set up, Robert Garber and Paul Yoder will serve as co-secretaries for evangelism.

Readers Say

Submissions to Readers Say column should comment on printed articles.

The comments on the peace symbol by Gerald C. Studer were only partially helpful. He states rightly enough, "symbols mean what they are worn to mean. Thus to call 'unamnifactory' the explanation that the symbol means nuclear disarmament, is to make a wrong judgment. If this is what it meant for the group in England who were using the symbol, this is what it meant to them."

One cannot find out the current meaning of a symbol by looking it up in an old book. There may not have been such a symbol or it did not mean in the past, I know of no one who wears the symbol who takes it to mean "the man dies." They wear it to say they are for peace. For some it means nuclear disarmament and for others it means "end the war in Vietnam." The title of the article is right. It is a "peace symbol," and by now that is an internationally recognized meaning. Any author writing of the meaning of symbols today would have to say this is the standard meaning today.—David Habecker, Elkhart, Ind.

Praise be to the Lord Jesus Christ. Just wanted to let you know how very much I appreciated your editorial "Not by Intellect — But by My Spirit." In fact I read it to our congregation this morning and asked them to go home and read it out. Oh, brother, keep printing everything you can lay your hands on concerning the work of the Spirit (New Testament truth) for if the Mennonite Church or any other is going to see a growth of the Lord's work by His power and in His way, not man's. So much of what is being tried is in the energy of the flesh and I'm one who is sick and tired of it all. I'm praying that the people will open up and yield to the outpouring of the Spirit which is taking place today so that we will not miss out on the blessings and will be used of God to help evangelize our loved ones, neighbors, and the world. We are praying for you.—Willard Hershberger, Shreve, Ohio.

I want to express my appreciation for the article "As I See It," by Helen Good Bremneman in the Aug. 4 issue of the Gospel Herald. The article and the way she has written it expresses a lot of good Christian common sense. Too many of the articles in the recent past show the influence of the polarization, the confusion, and the selfishness of our present society. We seem to take pleasure in dissecting and pointing out the wrongs, and there are many and always will be because we are human, and fail to work or propose constructive ideas that would help to heal instead of aggravate our ills. I would recommend for study two books by Dr. Elton Trueblood, One is A Place to Stand, in which he shows that in Jesus Christ there is a common place or ground of meeting for the liberal and the conservative. The other is The New Man for Our Times, where he shows that the divisions arising from social concerns are not necessary, that the activist is in danger of losing the redemptive gospel of Jesus Christ, and that the Pietist has lost his concern for others. He contends that the true Christian is both and that each should learn from the other. We should not fall into the trap of saying that our own concerns are of much more value than the other person down. Luke 6:41, 42. I think that Dr. Trueblood has done a real service to the Christian church in these two books.—Ralph Noziger, Archbold, Ohio.

Despite James D. Lehman's letter in the "Readers Say" column (Aug. 4) Dennis Byler's "Letter to the Draft Board" (June 50) is not an affront to the Mennonite Church. But as his letter shows, is taken as a personal affront. I refer him to the resolution of the General Conference at Turner, Oregon, last year which recognized the validity of conscientious noncooperation with the draft, and which pledged the support of the Mennonite Church for young men who took this position. I also refer him to the MCC Peace Sections' "Message on Conscience and Conscription" which offers the same support. Obviously, this type of response to the selective service is not an affront to those who were supposed to be speaking for the rest of the Mennonite Church.

I submit that if Brother Lehman thinks being a good American citizen is synonymous with being a good Christian citizen as his letter infers, then he is not rightfully heir to his Mennonite heritage. The step taken by Dennis Byler will demand of him a greater degree of discipleship than that required of those who choose the easy way out, often diminishing their peace witness in the process. Many of our Mennonite forefathers in this country followed the same path during the Civil War when they could have accepted the provision allowing them to buy their way out of the military for $300. They went underground; they went to jail; they were persecuted, but the church stood behind them.

Have we today in the Mennonite Church come to the point where we identify so closely with nationalistic patriotism, and so unquestioningly accept "Western values," that they become more important than brotherly support for one of us whose discipleship has led him to take a stand adverse to these values?

Have I not decided that our preferred status as a church with the selective service is so valuable that we cannot risk that status for the sake of a brother who will not accept our compromise with his being powers?—Gerald E. Shenk, Washington, D.C.

The Name of the Christian Game

By David Poling

Out on Coney Island, under the roller coaster, is a six-room apartment. In what must be the wildest living arrangement in New York City, lives Fred Moran. At times he admits, it seems like the roller coaster trains "are coming right on through." However, he continues to reside in this uncertain housing with its ear-splitting level of noise because his family owns the roller coaster. We have a way of accommodating extremes, especially if we own it. People who owned slaves got used to it. Slum lords are really used to wretched surroundings when it is their source of income. Accommodation too often precedes corruption.

In the life of the Christian community, we are faced with a generation of young people who no longer accept even the little corruptions of the church and will hardly be satisfied with its accommodations. They want the roller coaster off the living room ceiling. And after a lengthy period of debate and disagreement, it is high time for the people in charge to realize that these taunts for change, reform, and radical upheaval are not going to subside.

On an international level, the institutional church is facing a massive confrontation. The old walls of tradition, prestige, and authority are being scaled in almost every country. The grand old church, with its medieval basement, reformation windows, and nineteenth-century towers is under constant siege. Already the moat that was once filled with a mixture of piety and persuasion has been drained. And to compound the trauma of change and controversy, the critics who are circling the religious establishment are people who were once listed on its honor rolls.

What is it that has brought such an intense, at times, unbearable conflict between Christians who affirm allegiance to one Lord and subscribe to a hope and yearning for unity? Why does Christianity now stand at one of the major intersections of world-history — surely comparable to the struggles of the first-century church, the rise of Constantine, the reformation of Martin Luther?

It is my belief that the Creator of the world, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, is also our contemporary. And everywhere, in the ferment and change, the unsettlement and dishevelment, the straining and shoving, the One who is our contemporary is at work. God is in the revolution to work His will and to stir up every impulse that pounds in the human breast for justice, brotherhood, and love. And wherever the forces of evil, death, despair, and depravity prevail, it is God's will that they shall not abide, and friends, we happen to have around the world a fraternity of young people who want to be on God's side!

And to add one more wild, unqualified statement of faith, I believe that God has raised up these young people in every climate and country and we are privileged to observe (if we can look across the generation Grand Canyon) the most religious grouping of youngsters ever to sprint across the quadrangles of history!

And for those who are held captive by their hang-ups at the wardrobes, beards, and music of this turbulent mass of youth, they have only to miss the signs of the times and, Christians, nothing could be more disastrous or more biblically dishonest.

This is not to say that every participant in reform and change is a teenager. Many within the church have been in their forties (Hans Kung, Charles Davis), others leading the advance for a shockingly relevant faith gently nudge fifty, like Corita Kent. But the wavelength is the same, the heartbeat in time, the strategy coordinated. Whether these yearnings for the best life, the high life (which is drugless but spiritual) with constant "soul" can be felt in the political, social, or religious precincts, the thrust is the same: the pursuit of love in its most Christian meaning and most dangerous and risky applications.

And everywhere. From Czechoslovakia to Morningside Heights, from Paris to Prague, the rule is not to ask the moral question but to live it. And when that happens all the old arrangements, accommodations, illusions that have strangled the life out of the church and the power out of the gospel no longer apply.

We have never had a breed of young people like this. And if a generation gap had not developed a mood of dissent between them and the generals and bishops and university chancellors and Mayor Daleys—they protest would have been a sport and their movement phony.

Consider these specific encounters of the last year which have set youngsters against adults. the revolutionaries against the establishment: Vietnam dissent and draft protests; campus disorders; papacy and birth control. In each of these detonations you have the same ingredients for controversy although the specific issue may reside within the government, the university, the political system, or the church.

1. Vietnam and the Draft. Vietnam became the most unpopular war in American history. Yet it was the young people of draft age, with coaching and support by clergymen like the Berrigan brothers, Bill Coffin of Yale, and Robert Brown of Stanford, who started the protests, took to the streets, and faced down the military-defense establishment that had lied to the American people about Vietnam and our involvement. These same young people needled the church into a more serious questioning of the war and with the catalytic appearance of Senator Eugene McCarthy, pulled down the Johnson administration in one big sickening crash. Before the year was out the concept of selective pacifism gained support not only from the National and World Council of Churches but also the Catholic Bishops of America. Draft reform, as well as a conclusion of the Vietnam conflict, will have the highest priority of the Nixon administration—all because of thousands of young people who would not accept the warfare concepts—and accommodations of their parents!

2. Campus Disorders. Millions of Americans watched the stain and shame erupt at Columbia University last spring. The campus disorders have shaken San Francisco and dozens of other academic communities. The great majority of alumni and parents and angry citizens have been quick to blame the agitators, professional revolutionaries, and part-time "pinks" for all of this raucous. More nightsticks, patrol cars, and tougher deans is the cry of the confused. Yet when the dust settled at Columbia and the distinguished Cox Commission Report published (at the request of the university trustees) the complaint and petitions of the student activists was heavily supported! Not only had the vigorous student minority spoken for thoughtful and rightful change in college life, but was joined swiftly by faculty endorsement as well. The Cox Commission noted that the administration had turned the university into a "business enterprise, with faculty as employees and students as customers." Again, the administration lied to the students when inquiries were made concerning army contracts and Pentagon projects. The trustees at Columbia recently announced a totally new plan for university development that will include the Harlem neighborhood as well as student advisers.

3. The Papacy and Birth Control. The dissension began as a traditional struggle between liberals and conservatives within the Catholic Church and then enlarged into an unresolved power struggle. The authority of the Pope has not only been challenged—it has been taken away! The procedures of discipline of unruly members and disobedient clergy will exist but it is highly improbable that they will be employed. Here again, we see the disarray that comes when the establishment (this instance a branch of the Christian church) seeks to maintain a standard or belief that is finally an individual moral decision. A creaky and celibate and ancient college of cardinals can no longer legislate the dictionary of ethics of millions of Christians. As Francois Hourtart wrote in The Eleventh Hour, we have yet to discover the revolution initiated by John XXIII.

"The real mission of the church as institution is to make every member of the people of God a conscious member of the people of God. It is not to build schools or hospitals, or imposing complexities of religious institutions. It is to build up conscious membership in the people of God enabling them to live in conscious accord with Christian value of faith and love."

All these issues and topics of change have, for the most part, been fueled by the young and encouraged by progressive clergy. It should be no small wonder that bewildered and disenchanted laymen should back away from the confusion and racket, yearn for the nostalgic, predictable programs of other decades, and even threaten a financial boycott. Building projects have suffered. Councils of churches as well as local parishes on the social action front have experienced financial loss and attendance decline.

But our greater alarm and more serious dismay should develop when a Christian community panics in crises and runs to the rest homes of noninvolvement. This is not the counsel of the New Testament. It is not the experience of the best, thrilling hours of Christian witness. This plea for safety, this persuasion of world escapism is a sub-Christian notion promoted by those who fled to the church for security and moral neutrality. They number thousands, tens of thousands, and their extraordinary vocabulary of religious cliches is only surpassed by their flight from the real world that God created and loved. As I have written in The Last Years of the Church, these people are now exposed and although they may succeed in clutching to the institution, they have already lost the faith. They own the roller coaster. . . .

But those who stick together, maybe even praying together and singing together, are going to share in the celebration of a great and good time. For these are good times. How dare we be abusive of a world, a community, a gathering of peoples that God loved so much, so fully that He sent His Son! And all the establishments of generals and bishops and mayors fought Him and slandered Him and crucified Him and yet His people are everywhere with the message.

"In the nineteenth-century the progress of science intimidated us. Theologians sought to provide a safe place for the church within the area of human activity. They said there was an art and science and religion. Religion became a kind of Indian reservation where God and Christ and the Holy Spirit might be cultivated."

The tumult of this hour has blown that concept into a theological dust bowl. We may yet find the church in the wild wood, but it will not be a vital, throbbing Christian experience. And if it is depicted on Rose Bowl floats and in New England commemorations, it is a wave good-bye.

And what shall happen and what can we expect? This new dawning of the faith—for it is fresh every morning—will endure a great deal of creative quarreling (over social issues), a large opening to allies who are very hesitant about creeds and awkward about confessions of faith, and an exuberant belief that God is our contemporary—and if not, our contestant!
The Worst Heresy

I have an ax to grind. If you don't like the grinding of an ax, go away. I know that ax grinding is considered a bit boorish, but I am going to grind it anyway. If you get sparks in your eyes, you are responsible. I told you to go away.

My ax is the nonuse of our Mennonite curriculum materials in some congregations. How in the world does a Mennonite congregation think it can turn out Anabaptists without teaching the stuff out of which Anabaptists are made? Why are there whole congregations who try to get by with the sort of tokenism that buys from the Mennonite Publishing House a story paper or two while leaving the basic teaching materials — Sunday school quarterlies, mission study texts, leadership training materials — wholly unordered? What kind of loyalty is that, and what sort of commitment to the believers' church tradition is it?

I know the argument. It is cheaper, say some, to buy materials from the independent publishers. I don't doubt that. But since when are we ready to trade what our fathers died for — the concept of an adult believers' church, brotherhood and equality of all members, peace, separation of church and state — for something a few pennies cheaper? Whether it is cheaper is surely less important than whether it is right.

The worst heresy, I am sure, is the one which tells the truth but not all of it. So the materials from the independent publishers appear to be biblical, yet they are not. They are not biblical because they avoid, for example, the hard line on peace. I believe that when Jesus said, "Love your enemies," He meant the people in North Vietnam; the communists, the Black Panthers, the Red Chinese. Our Mennonite curriculum writers believe Jesus meant just that. Now if an independent publisher would print that, he would hardly expect to sell his materials to the people who never believed in nonresistance in the first place.

The independent publisher is in business. His job is to develop a product that is broadly acceptable. He must offend as few as possible so he can sell as much as he can.

Isn't it odd then that that product is good enough for some of our churches? Wouldn't Blaurock and Manz and Grebel be horrified to know that now, 450 years after they gave their lives for what they knew was the whole gospel, many Mennonites can't tell the difference or don't care enough to put Anabaptist materials into the hands of teachers and pupils?

What besides cost influences a congregation to sell out to the heretical half gospel stuff? Must I admit that we are compelled by color, by pictures, by sporty illustrations, and by the claims of high-powered advertising?

I said I had an ax to grind. I have ground it because I feel deeply about the importance of using materials consistent with our faith if we are to have a next generation of people who believe what the Anabaptists believed. I feel deeply about this because I see the evidence in our brotherhood already of a God-and-country gospel which is completely foreign to our faith.

I think it is time for a new surge of interest for our Mennonite curriculum materials. We can begin by helping every congregation in the brotherhood to get a supply of the new kindergarten materials. Beyond that there is the nursery course, the graded, the youth, and adult studies. Which of these are missing when your Sunday school order arrives?

Drugs and Spiritual Vacuums

Although there are certainly many reasons why persons turn to drugs not enough is being said about the relation of drug use and the meaninglessness and emptiness of their spiritual experience. Studies show, according to the testimony of numerous persons who turned to drugs, the use of drugs is simply another attempt to satisfy an inward spiritual emptiness.

In writing about Exploring Inner Space: Personal Experiences Under LSD-25 Jane Dunlap quotes a girl who explicitly gives the reason why she and others she knows become drug users. After discussing today's emphasis on the intellectual, physical, and material and the underdevelopment of the emotional and spiritual she points out that spiritually she sometimes felt consumed with an empty yearning. She describes her need in an insightful way.

"Although growth means constant change and development, my belief in God and feeling about Him stayed much the same year after year except that I discarded my concepts of heaven and hell. In short, I was in a spiritual rut; furthermore I had no idea how to get out of it. Frankly I feel that I had a great deal of company and that my rut was really quite crowded. For these reasons, when filling out a questionnaire which asked, 'Why do you wish to take lysergic acid?' I wrote 'In hope of overcoming spiritual poverty.' Another time I filled the blank with: 'To get chemical Christianity.'"

Among a growing number of specialists on human behavior there is increasing conviction that spiritual poverty and lack of meaning in life pervades the condition of people in Western culture and that drugs are turned to in an effort to fill this spiritual void.

In Life magazine, December 8, 1967, the noted English historian Arnold Toynbee wrote an appraisal of American culture. He stated that one of our American weaknesses is that we have lost the "art of contemplation" and "the inward spiritual form of religion."

An editorial in Christianity Today, commenting on Toynbee's statement, said, "Partly because of our churches' neglect of this aspect of Christianity, American young people have turned to drugs to find what they call a significant religious experience. But now many seem to be forsaking drugs and turning back to some of the contemplative religions of the Far East. Let us hope that before long they will discover the authentic mysticism at the heart of the Christian faith."

One thing should be coming clearer. We cannot develop man in certain areas such as the intellectual and the physical without corresponding development in the moral and spiritual and have a whole person. Our age tells us again that restlessness and aimlessness results from loss of spiritual certainties.

Further, we cannot replace the spiritual by scientific and technological materialism. Man still needs the sanctuary of spiritual reality which science, as necessary and good as it is, cannot give. The verities of faith cannot really be replaced by material security, technology, or mere humanness. We can have all else, even win the world, and lose our own souls. Substituting faith in scientific propositions for spiritual postulates will never do.

Therefore the church has a tremendous job and opportunity cut out for it. Not only by divine commission but also out of man's inherent need the church is called to proclaim a gospel and provide a life which can fill the spiritual emptiness today and which will help people develop spiritually even as they develop intellectually, physically, and emotionally. And the church which bemoans the times rather than sees, feels, and meets the inner emptiness of persons is blind to what might well be its primary point of contact today.

Will the church find prayer, meditation, and the understanding of spiritual verities meaningful experiences today? Unless it does, can it blame those who turn to drugs to fill the emptiness only Christ can fill? — D.

We Are Protestants

But we have forgotten it. Strange isn't it that those who were the protesters of the sixteenth century should now by and large be so hard on those who protest. Further, it seems that many have forgotten what the protesting was all about in the Reformation when we received the derogatory name — protestants. Maybe we have succumbed to the place we don't see any points for protest.

But put it down, although the Christian's protest may be drastically different from the world's and even concerned with different issues, when the church sanctions and blesses the actions of the run of society, its witness is nil. One of the sad things about Christendom today is that just about everyone seems surprised and even shocked when the church dares challenge the status quo of its community or country.

Maybe we should simply forget the fact that we are protestants and fit ourselves into the regular run of society which sets its stamp of approval on whatever society does. Unless, of course, we want to be the church. The true church has always protested wrong whenever it is perceived, in its own ranks, in the government, in the community, and world. There is something strikingly biblical and appropriate in being like the prophets and Jesus — protestants. — D.
What the Well-Dressed Woman Isn't Wearing

By Kerry Elliot

It was a birthday party for Harry, a relative of mine who had reached the venerable age of 50. The group was just a small one—the family and a few friends.

Among the gifts was a necktie. Harry admired it, and thanked the giver. Then he turned to his wife. "When I'm finished with it, Hon," he winked, "you can make a bathing suit out of it."

His wisecrack drew a round of laughter and a long, low whistle. But it didn't draw a blush from Hon. She just kept on overflowing the upper limits of her dress and showing the lower limits of her girdle as she refilled coffee cups.

The episode was a small one, granted. But it was revealing—in more ways than one. Harry, you see, is a leading elder in a thriving evangelical church. All the people present were church members, most of them leaders of one kind or another. But, like many Christians, they have adopted a casual, almost indifferent attitude toward immodest dress. Bare midriffs, backless gowns, miniskirts, and beachwear that boggles the eyeballs are all perfectly acceptable to these good church people. The thought of Hon running around in Harry's necktie was a joke, not an embarrassment.

I protest such lack of modesty. To me, today's flesh-displaying fashions make a travesty of the Christian woman's claim to godliness.

"Oh, come, come," you say, struggling with your skintight shorts. "What's so sinful about a miniskirt?"

Well, in my opinion, miniskirts are immodest. They have no more place in the wardrobe of a Christian than bikinis or peek-a-boo dresses.

"Oh, don't be ridiculous," you retort, fingering the plunging neckline of your blouse. "It's just a fashion. It doesn't mean anything."

Doesn't it? Fashion designers don't think so. What a woman wears is an expression of morality, they tell us, a reflection of a woman's attitude. Designer Leo Narducci says that the woman who wears his revealing styles is one who is "sure of herself, who thinks of sex more openly. . . . She's not concerned about nudity. She has a body and she knows it."

"Oh, dear," you say, adjusting your straps to make yourself suddenly shapelier, "but I don't think of sex appeal when I wear my shorts and halter." Maybe you don't. But the fellows do. And I don't mean just the dirty old men either, unless you put most of the male population from puberty to senility in that category.

If you don't believe me, read your ladies' magazines. The fashion writers know the words to use: naughty, daring, seductive, slightly wicked. . . .

And if you still don't believe me, read the men's magazines. You can pick them up at the garbage rack in your local drugstore. They're not edifying, but boy, are they frank. It'll curl your platinum wig to read a few unexpurgated comments about the effect you're having by waving all that skin around.

And fashion is shaping your outlook—maybe more than you realize. Newsweek makes the significant observation that Rudy Gernreich's nude fashions have "changed people's minds and life-styles as well as the way they dress," all of which is one reason why a lot of Christians are no longer shocked at seeing the undraped female form in advertising, on TV, and in the movies. It has become, to a greater or lesser degree, part of their own life-style.

Not that worship of the female form is new, of course. Scanty costumes were all the rage back there in the temples of Baal and Diana.

"But what can I do?" you purr, fluttering your artificial eyelashes. "Do you expect me to look different from the whole world? Everybody wears these styles, you know."

Now there's an argument for you—"Everybody's doing it." Most parents beat that one down a dozen times a day with a reply that says, in effect, "Everybody but you." And if that makes you look different, sweetheart, be thankful. You'll probably look better. The Christian woman isn't in a glamor contest with the dolls from Hollywood, remember? She has higher standards. Her values are not determined for her by Fifth Avenue, or even by the steno pool at the office. Sometimes it's her privilege to be identified as a Christian by looking distinctively different—even if that means wearing clothes.

I can't help but wonder if you have fallen for the hedonistic half-truth that says being feminine means being sexy.

Toothpaste, the ads claim, gives your mouth sex appeal. Soap gives your skin sex appeal. Hair color gives your hair sex appeal. Eye shadow gives your eyes sex appeal. And you believe it. Because you have been brainwashed into equating femininity with sex.
So you disguise yourself with make-up, pack yourself into a shape not even God intended, and waltz around half dressed to make sure we get the message.

Well, cut it out. True femininity may require toothpaste, but it sure enough doesn’t need a see-through blouse. To flaunt your sexuality in public is a betrayal of your femininity, not an endorsement. Not that it is un biblical or unchristian, or unnatural to be aware of your sexuality and to derive from it all the legitimate fulfillment God intended, but to display your sexual credentials in public is like playing the tube on the subway to prove that you’re a musician.

No doubt you’ve heard of the secretary whose skirts became so short and tight that finally the boss couldn’t resist the temptation. He patted her. And before she could slap him he disarmed her with the simple comment, “Miss Shapely, if you’re not selling something, please don’t advertise it.”

To argue that to the pure all things are pure won’t do, either. A man can be provoked into thinking what he doesn’t want to think. It isn’t honest to expose a man to the aroma of steak and apple pie and coffee, and then accuse him of being a glutton because he licks his lips. This is particularly true in regard to our teenage boys and young men. To tantalize them with displays of the delicious young female form, when they are already struggling with the frustrating drives of adolescence and the pressures of a sex-ridden culture, is not only unchristian but downright cruel. Can you blame the boys for trying to spring the trap when it’s loaded with such luscious bait?

Cover Up

But lest you get carried away with the idea that you are all mouth-watering morsels, let me remind you that there are bodies beautiful and bodies otherwise. Some of you need to cover up if for nothing more than your contribution to the Beautiful America campaign. Some of the flesh we see frightening through the supermarkets and basking on the beaches should be shielded from view simply as a service to humanity.

But perhaps you’re still not convinced. You like the freedom of the new styles, all open and slinky and loose. After all, nudity is the natural state, isn’t it? As one wit put it, “If God had intended us to run around nude He’d have made us without clothes.”

Very clever. But the wit overlooks the fact that the nude state is no longer the natural one. It worked only until man disgraced himself. Then, embarrassed and ashamed, he tried to cover up. God showed him how, by making him adequate clothing. Ever since, nudity is a state that has to be learned.

To cover oneself from the gaze of others is instinctive in all but the most degraded (I did not say primitive) cultures. Those who are capable of appearing before others in a state of undress, without embarrassment, have had to learn that condition — and that applies to the stripper as well as to the savage on the banks of the Amazon. The distressing thing is that the women of our culture, including Christians, are learning that condition so well.

This raises an interesting point. Other cultures recognize the impropriety of our current fashions and do not hesitate to condemn them. In Malawi, for example, a violent reaction was triggered when President Banda, coming from church (Martyrs’ Day, Sunday, March 3, 1968), was shocked to see a European girl “indecently clad and looking at him.”

The Malawi News (March 8, ’68) editorialized that “foreign women such as the one seen on Sunday by the President are setting bad examples for our young girls, and we will not tolerate anyone who wants to spoil our nation by importing these diabolic fashions.” Tough official measures were launched against importing such fashions, and bands of young men literally unfrocked girls who appeared in public wearing miniskirts.

Observers in the sophisticated West laughed. “You object to miniskirts?” they ridiculed. “Your own tribal women run around almost naked!” The fact is, however, that most African governments are taking steps to eradicate tribal nudity (which, incidentally, is quite divorced from sexuality) because it is considered a reproach.

The extent to which American Christians have lost their sense of modesty hits home when leaders of African churches appeal to mission leaders to do something about the apparel of their lady missionaries. “How can a woman who displays herself help our women improve themselves?” they ask.

Well, where are we? How high should the hemline be? Can we draw a line on the leg and say this high and no higher? Can we formulate an equation that gives us so many square inches of bare midriff to so many pounds of woman? Not likely. So, as Christians, we turn to the Scriptures for guidance. What specifics does the Bible lay down?

Fortunately, none. In this, as in many other areas of life, girls, you’re free to make your own decisions. But the Scriptures do lay down some very clear principles. One of them is that God’s standards for His women are high ones. He expects them to be modest.

In 1 Timothy 2:9, 10 women are exhorted to “adorn themselves in modest apparel” and to make themselves attractive not by the use of fashion’s devices but by good works and high character, “which becometh women professing godliness.” In Today’s English Version that reads, “I also want women to be modest and sensible about their clothes, and to dress properly.”

In Titus 2:5 it says that Christian women should be “sensible and chaste . . . , a good advertisement for the Christian faith.”

All this, of course, has to be worked out in relation to the culture in which we live. In your case, girls, that gives you lots of scope. You can wear a potato sack and still be in style. But in our culture, with its emphasis on sex, one thing is certain — clothing that over-focusses on the female form, instead of enhancing your feminine grace must be classed as unacceptable. And if the Christian woman has any doubt about the acceptability of any style, she will follow the scriptural injunction to forego it rather than risk the possibility of giving offense.

So cover up, girls. Please. Harry’s necktie is not for you unless, of course, you’d rather be chased than chaste.

That Short Term Abroad
By Arlene Hege

“The day of the career missionary is fast coming to an end.” “Leadership in overseas churches cannot emerge as long as strong personalities of missionaries are present.” “The need today is for short-term personnel trained for a special job.” This sort of missions philosophy has appeared in recent years.

These concepts, true or false, welcome or ominous, are influencing today’s missionaries. They have reverberated to the older missionaries, making them question the validity of their work. “Shall we retool and enter other work?” “Does our presence cramp the church in its growth and exercise of responsibility?” they ask.

But the effect of these concepts is more evident in the increasing number of short-term missionaries going overseas. These short-term people are well-trained to do a specific job, and they are doing it. But often they do it at great cost and frustration. Why should the short-term overseas assignment be such a draining and disillusioning experience?

The short-term worker goes with a great deal of energy and idealism. He is sensitive to the inequalities of the world, to the suffering, to the hurt and angry feelings of those who have been wronged; and he wants to help. He will likely not have the same vision of missionary service that his 20-year-old colleague has. In fact he probably will not even like the name, missionary. But he has heard the call of Christ to go and serve and he has responded. His going is based upon this sense of call, upon the need overseas, upon his own spiritual qualifications, and upon his special ability or training. He has not gone as an evangelist. He wants simply to serve as a Christian brother, to be a Christian presence in the form of a trained, secular servant.

Closed In

But when the overseas worker gets into his assignment, he finds that he has entered a sort of capsule. Life becomes closed in by the limitations of the English language, by the daily place of work, by the fewness of friends and acquaintances, by the traditions and patterns set up by former and older workers, and by the discomfort of being a foreigner. He soon finds that his skills and services are needed, perhaps desperately, but the impression slowly grows that one is useful only as a tool, a cog in some vast machine, wanted as long as he is in working order, but to be discarded and replaced if one doesn’t quite fit or does not produce.

Relationships are often superficial and difficult — after all, this is a short term, and building relationships takes time and effort on both sides. However, these short-term workers, most of them young people, trained as they are, do not consider their work alone as their life. Relationships mean a great deal to them. They had hoped to share Christ as a brother, a sister, a friend, but in this assignment they are shut off from the deeper relationships. Building relationships between two cultures demands trust, interchange of ideas, the ability to understand, and communicate at deep levels. Even though people in other countries may be able to speak English, chances are they do not live and think in English. The short-term worker usually does not have a chance for language study. And so building relationships is a big hurdle.

No Church Life

Another hurdle is that the short-term worker has virtually no church life. In his home church he was likely interested and active. Otherwise he would not have been accepted for an overseas assignment. Teaching Sunday school and Bible school classes, leading in singing, participation in prayer meetings, youth fellowships, discussions, and various projects were possibilities of his church life. Suddenly this has been changed. In the overseas church he cannot even sing the hymns nor understand the sermons. The various church activities in which he used to share responsibility are now, and rightly so, in the hands of national leadership. (Special groups in English can be started, but these are often interpreted as being divisive, or translations can be made into English, but this is cumbersome, and hardly feasible.) Thus the short-term worker feels shut out from active church life.

Strange rumblings sometimes come from the national church concerning the newer missionaries. “Why don’t the new missionaries have the same dedication that the older ones have? They come only for short terms. We don’t know them; they just come and go. They don’t seem concerned about the church. We need missionaries who are prepared to stay as long as they are needed.” Albeit there are also rumblings about not wanting foreign domination or foreign influence to be felt as strongly as it was earlier.

And then, let’s face it, serving overseas is a shock to one’s spiritual system, whether the term be short or long.

Arlene and Nathan Hege are EMBMC missionaries who have served in Ethiopia since 1950.
The overseas church to which the worker is related, which seemed very enterprising and distinct from a distance, suddenly becomes nebulous, and he hardly knows where it is or how to relate to it. In addition, the older missionaries whose pictures have been in the church papers, and whose names have become familiar household words, are now seen to have feet of clay.

A Host of Questions

And what of one’s own faith and call? "Is it real? Do I really know what I believe? Why did I ever come here?" A host of questions like these assail the worker overseas as he struggles for spiritual breath. He realizes with dismay that while others look to him—fresh from his Christian upbringing and concerned church—for spiritual leadership, he desperately needs a steadying hand himself, and likely there is none. He realizes that this assignment involves not only the desire to help others for Christ’s sake, but the sink or swim struggle of knowing Christ for himself, and being able by faith to stand in Him.

I think that often as we go as missionaries — though our term is short or long — we feel that in leaving our homeland we have done the ultimate. We are all consecrated, all dedicated; we belong 100 percent to the Lord, and are setting out to do His work — perhaps, we think, more completely than ever before. Ahead of us lies the path of blessing and of bringing glory to God.

And what do we find? That we are not completed products, but people whom God is still making.

The new situation, we often find, was cut out for a bigger person than we are. It’s like living in the house of a giant, in which nothing fits our size. We can’t reach what we want to, and the ordinary affairs of living take extraordinary effort. We find ourselves coming out short in so many areas (perhaps in relationships with our fellow workers, or in physical strength, or financially, or in ability to communicate the gospel, or in faith, or in love), the very areas in which we had felt so qualified. And we ask, "God, why did You get me into this, when You knew I was inadequate?" But as we listen quietly for an answer, we’ll probably be reminded that God is interested in the life and growth not only of the people we came to serve, but of ourselves as well.

The point of this article is not to discourage short-term workers. Their work is significant; their lives are appreciated, and the need for short-term as well as long-term workers will continue.

But we should not think of the short term as an easy assignment. The short-termer as well as long-termer should go, as Paul said to Timothy, ready to endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. He should go armed with the knowledge that he will be called on to live the Christian life in a capsule, seemingly closed out of the mainstream of life, that meaningful relationships will be difficult, that he may feel misunderstood and unappreciated except for the work he does, that his own faith will be challenged, and that he will need to find his own spiritual nourishment in Christ.

Preparation and Orientation

Just as the preparation for a short talk needs to be carefully done, I believe the orientation of short-term workers should be given carefully. It is not fair to expect the short-term worker to step from his home community into his overseas job without any introduction to the new culture, to the workings of the overseas church, and to his own work in relation to the existing mission program.

His orientation should include a few weeks or months of language study. Obviously he will not become proficient in this time, but he will have at least a few windows into the thoughts of the people and be able to speak a bit to those whom English will not reach. This does not contradict the fact that a warmhearted person can communicate love far better than a cold heart with a big vocabulary. But it is a reminder that we feel much more at home, much more a part of things, if we know even a little of the language of the country in which we are living.

Must the short term be a time of defeat, frustration, and disillusion? Perhaps it cannot be avoided by either short- or long-term people. However, even though the assignment is difficult, should it not be a time of satisfaction as well? When a man tries to climb Mount Everest or fly to the moon, he knows he will face difficulties, but the difficulties add zest to the enterprise. Both long- and short-termers can know the satisfaction of being a part of God’s difficult project in the world.

To be a short-term worker does not mean being a short-term, or in any way inferior, Christian. Actually, the isolation and temporariness of the short-term worker’s situation call for a particularly rugged personal faith in Christ.

The short term tends to look like a simple answer to a big problem — that of how the home church should relate to the overseas churches. Likely it is not so much a question of short- versus longer-term service as of the kind of overseas service that is needed at the present time. With better understanding of what is involved in overseas service, clarification of the church’s goals, and a greater sense of teamwork in aiming for these goals, I believe the short-term worker can enjoy being a valid part of the answer, without carrying the burden of being the whole answer to home church-oversight church relationships.

SCCO—Coming or Going?

By Paul Kraybill

Following a recent SCCO presentation, a listener rose to inquire whether we are coming or going! The answer probably is a matter of opinion. It may well be that we are doing both.

In 1969 the Report of the Study Commission on Church Organization was submitted to the sponsoring agencies (General Conference, Mission Board, Board of Education, and Publication Board). The reaction was mixed with acceptance in principle accompanied by numerous concerns.

It was these concerns and the evident hesitation of the brotherhood that led the SCCO to employ an executive secretary to devote major time to further work on the proposed model. At that point the most appropriate next step seemed to be a listening process which would enable greater understanding of the church’s reservations and concerns about the model. Out of this response it was hoped that a clear sense of direction could emerge which would enable revision of the model into a more acceptable document.

During the past eight months the writer has been engaged in numerous meetings and discussions throughout the church seeking counsel and reaction to the proposals for Mennonite Church reorganization.

This experience of listening and sharing has been an affirmation of the reality of brotherhood. A number of observations might be made.

a. The brotherhood cares: There is an impressive amount of concern throughout the church. Whether in the form of support or vigorous dissent, there is a broad awareness of issues and an eagerness to be involved in discussion. Particularly there was a concern about the implications of the model for church reorganization. On numerous occasions there was evidenced significant insights and understanding. The criticism was constructive and purposeful, not simply a negative response to something new.

b. There is a credibility gap: This credibility gap grows out of a new desire for involvement in decision making. Too many denominational programs seem to be too far removed from the average congregation or church member. People are less satisfied supporting programs without participation.

Conversely, there are evidences of growing vitality and renewal at the local congregation, district, and conference level. In many cases this has resulted from stimulation by churchwide agencies. In other cases it is diverting interest which once was directed to denominational programs.

This kind of local involvement and awareness is healthy and must continue. However, churchwide programs must plan with this in mind, providing supplementary and complementary services without being competitive.

On the face of it, this gap could be very discouraging. Combined with a mood of concern and caring it can be surrounded if listening, patience, and mutual respect can be practiced.

e. There is a growing diversity: Whether for good or ill, the pattern of our brotherhood has seldom been so varied. The simpler traditional differences have been compounded by a series of groupings each with its own special interest.

Age, color, politics, economics, education, life-style, and theological orientation have resulted in this ecclesiologica! rainbow. But then we have emphasized personal conviction and voluntary discipleship which must leave room for variation. On the other hand, we may have overplayed the concern for uniformity and are reaping in vengeance a revolt against enforced uniformity and centralization by liberal and conservative alike, with a resultant strain on the real basis for unity and common purpose.

It is clear that our brotherhood cannot be forced into one style or organization too highly centralized. There will need to be tolerance for differing viewpoints and mutual respect for varied forms of interpretation and application. Those who dissent, whether to right or left, must be understood and accepted as brethren without bureaucratic or authoritarian intolerance.

d. We are enjoying the problems of obedience: The fruits of obedience and discipleship are bringing about a revolution in our brotherhood. Programs of mission and service are producing alumni who are caught up in a new vision of world need. Youth are rejecting the established order in a revolt against a militaristic, impersonal society. Laymen are becoming alert and concerned, women are searching for new involvement.

But more than that, the church is suddenly confronted with new congregations, new names, new leaders, new races, and new styles of church life.

These are the signs of a vital fellowship. It is a rapidly changing brotherhood, but the dynamics of change can be a hopeful portent for new life and reality.

f. We must employ strategy for mission: The life of the church finds vitality and meaning in mission. New organization for the future must be designed in terms of mobilizing the brotherhood for effective witness. Strategic areas, urbanization, new frontiers, and opportunity for service must all be considered as the church plans its structure and strategy for the days ahead.

The SCCO is seeking to take seriously all that it has heard as it rewrites the model for Mennonite Church organization in preparation for the Joint Conference on Church Organization to be held at Yellow Creek Mennonite Church, Goshen, Indiana, October 20-22.
"As I See It"

Readers are urged to submit material on any issue for this column. Maximum of 400 words.

Shouldn’t we praise the Lord with psaltery, cymbals, tambourines, and the high sounding drums? Amen! Are the docile and reserved praising the Lord? They believe that they are. This difference between praising God according to the psalmist’s formula (Psalm 150, for example) and praising the Lord in a silent inhibited fashion is a schism whose resolution will lead to a real thoroughgoing Christian.

Both in the case of an uninhibited Holy Roller, and in the case of the ultraquiet Protestant churchman, a scriptural teaching is being obeyed.

If both types of praise are scriptural, which is correct or how do we know when we are doing the right thing? I believe that both types of praise are “kosher” formats in the light of our one guideline, the Holy Bible.

Suppose we look closely at the praise format as expressed by some of our louder Christian brethren; say the Pentecostals. Is there a forthright teaching from the Word for shouting, dancing in the Spirit, exercising tongues (see tongues in 1 Cor. 12, 13 and 14), clapping hands, prophesying, and stomping feet? Yea, yea, there is scriptural backup for all such practices. Citing a few general areas we will look to Josh. 6; Pss. 149 and 150; 2 Chron. 5:13; 1 Cor. 12 — 14.

Now we are interested in seeing if there is scriptural sanction for quiet, solemn, reverent worship, and praise. Rejoice, we again turn to the Holy Bible for our guide. Exactly what we see is in part referred to here. Check Mt. 5; Gal. 5; Eph. 5, and the Book of Psalms. Here we cite the Pastoral Psalms, the Beatitudes, and the Fruit of the Spirit.

Devotees of these schools of thought should be quick to realize that they are not in full swing with the Christian teachings. If we pursue one of the above-mentioned forms of praise to the exclusion of the others then we are in error. We earnestly long to be in close communion with the Lord Jesus Christ and His teachings.

Well, bless my soul, which is the way to go? Aha, this is great to tell. We draw our formula for worship from God’s own Word. Well, how do we shout down the walls (Jericho) at one time and seek the God of love with a meek and contrite heart the next?

No, I won’t draw any conclusions from experience. All shall come from the recipe for a godly life, the Holy Bible, God’s Word to His creation.

The Scripture reveals that God can teach us all things through His Holy Spirit who dwells in us and knows all things. Where, you say? How about 1 John 2:20, 27; Jeremiah 33:3, and others? Through His Holy Spirit we can learn all things including the proper methods for our praise and worship.

Brethren, I beseech you, come, let us walk so with God that we lack no thing. — J. Mike Lilge, Silver Spring, Md.

God With Us

God gave to man the greatest gift
The night the Savior came.
A newborn child, yet “God with us” —
Emmanuel, His name!

The world is dark, yet shining stars
Reflect the glory of that night;
And humble hearts who give His love
Still shed abroad His truth and light.

The right thing at the wrong time is a devil’s delight.
This is some of my best ammunition on the home front. For example, a wife who would ordinarily jump at the chance to have dinner out may be totally unenthusiastic if her spouse suggests it at the end of a day of washing and ironing when her hair is a mess and the very thought of stuffing her aching feet into dress shoes makes her cringe. Or, on a day when she’s done very little manual labor, she decides to invite in friends for dinner, her husband walks in at 6:15 with a king-size headache and an overwhelming desire to go right to bed. Now on the right days, both of these un-routine activities would be pleasant surprises that would endear one spouse to the other, but on the wrong days they can bring complete alienation of convivial affection.

Children have a built-in knack of mistiming. A cherubic hug and kiss can be very welcome — unless the cherub has sneaked into the chocolates before planting little brown fingers on a white dress shirt or sticky lips on a freshly made-up cheek. And mothers who say, “Bring your little friends home with you to play,” don’t expect junior to do so on club day when the living room is filled with pink-tea drinkers and junior’s friends are grubby youngsters in smelly sneakers. And when fathers say they’ll take the kids to the zoo the first good Saturday that comes along, they don’t expect it to be the Saturday that the fellows from the office are looking for someone to complete a foursome on the links.

But the home is only one front where poor timing can lead to interpersonal conflict. It can happen anywhere — even in church. When the man in the pew has his bills paid and is feeling magnanimous, an appeal for extra funds will probably result in his complying — and with a warm glow. But if the insurance is due and he has overspent on a fishing trip, he’s apt to become very upset about the “church always asking for money.”

This is all very helpful to me. In promoting dissention I find that few techniques work better than getting people to do good things at inopportune moments. It’s not only effective — it’s often very entertaining.
A Positive Attitude

By Norris Mennonite Church

The subject of sex is given entirely too much wrong emphasis in our world today. We need a biblical and Christian understanding of sex.

Sex was God's good and wholesome idea, and it still is good and wholesome today. "Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, and said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife; and they twain shall be one flesh" (Mt. 19:4, 5)?

God made us sexually different on purpose. It was a part of His plan which He pronounced very good.

We need to take a positive attitude toward sex. People spoiled a lot of the good things God made, and this is the reason we have a lot of hush-hush atmosphere, but then some rebel at this and go to the other extreme of over-emphasizing, exaggerating, and flaunting sex.

Current attitudes in America today include the puritanical view which holds that sex is ugly and unmentionable. There is also the Freudian view suggesting that neurosis is the result of repressed sexual impulses. Another view exalts sex until it almost deifies it. The Playboy view says that sex is a bodily function like eating and drinking which is merely a physical demand that must be satisfied.

The traditional Christian view holds that sex is good but can be abused.

While there are many different views and attitudes toward sex, there also prevails several different standards today. One of these standards is abstinence for the unmarried. Another standard is the double standard which insists that premarital sex is wrong for women but excusable for men. More recently there is a third permissive standard allowing anything provided no one gets hurt.

I believe there are several causes that we can see for this break away from pure moral standards today. There has been a loss in respect for religious authority. Our society also is embracing a rugged individualism which states that "what one does is his own business."

Another contributing factor would be the easily secured methods for the prevention of pregnancy. Employment in industry and business away from home strains the close relationship once known within household family relationships. Then too there are the flagrant suggestive advertisements used to help sell anything today.

There is also the so-called "new morality" concept which insists that morals are a private affair reflecting again on this spirit of individualism. This concept suggests that being in love justifies sex before or outside marriage and gives the impression that nothing is wrong if nobody gets hurt.

The Playboy view which makes it only a physical thing is purely self-interest and fails to consider what happens to the other person. It carries no high value on personal worth and assumes no deep sense of responsibility. It reduces something very beautiful to something momentary as a reflex action. This philosophy destroys the foundation of fidelity in marriage.

Whatever the contributing factors, these American standards and changing views are currently yielding 250,000 babies born each year out of wedlock in spite of widespread knowledge of birth control. There are also over 200,000 cases of venereal disease reported annually in the United States. The number of illegal abortions annually is probably over 200,000 with some estimating that the number might exceed one million annually.

If the advocates of the new morality have the capacity to love deeply enough, then one would respect a person far too much to use her or to take liberties with her. Chastity would be the expression of charity, and this would be caring enough to control your sexual behavior. If you say you love someone, you care for her body, mind, and spirit. You do not treat her as simply the instrument of your own desires.

But the advocates of the new morality, while suggesting agape love, attempt this without any other principles and without claiming the power of the Holy Spirit within to enable such a holy and deep love. Unless we have Christ within to teach us how to love unselfishly, there can be no idealistic view of sex lifting one above a selfish interest.

The Bible view of sex is clearly stated in both the Old and New Testament. "Thou shalt not commit adultery." Smith tells us that this word, "adultery," appears thirty-five times in the New Testament with the accompanying word, "fornication," appearing forty-four times. The Bible says, "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." From the beginning God said, "Therefore a man leaves his father and his mother and cleaves to his wife, and they become one flesh" (Gen. 2:24).

God expects this to be a permanent union. He never intended this partnership union to be a temporary one-night affair. There is no satisfying sexual experience apart from a life partnership of one man and one woman. The physical urge might be satisfied by brief contact, but people crave much more than the immediate physical relief. We want to know all there is to know about the person and to share our most personal secrets by being indissolubly one with another. This word, "know," has a bit of significance in the Hebrew and in the King James English. When the patriarch "knew" her and she bare a child, he was expressing this kind of union that lets us become one flesh.

To enjoy all that God intends for us, we must then be absolutely pure in all human relationships. Premarital and extramarital sex experience is not satisfactory, and it is wrong. Whenever one indulges in the ungodly use of sex, he lessens his ability to use it in a holy way.

The Bible says, "Thou shalt not commit adultery." The New Testament is just as clear, "Do not be deceived; neither the immoral [fornicators who commit sexual sin before marriage] nor idolaters, nor adulterers [those who commit sexual sin after marriage] nor homosexuals, nor thieves, nor the greedy, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor robbers will inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Cor. 6:9, 10).

At the judgment bar of God, it will do no good to say, "But others were doing it too." The one-flesh idea involves a complete union. This unity of experience is more than a physical one. It is a mutual self-giving. It is a surrender of the depth of one’s being. It involves and affects the whole person. The Apostle Paul says there is nothing casual about the promiscuous intercourse for he says, "Do you not know that he who joins himself to a prostitute becomes one body with her? For, as it is written, 'The two shall become one'" (1 Cor. 6:16).

Biblical love (agape) is existence for the other person. The way Christ cares for and has concern for the church is the model of husband-wife relationships in Ephesians 5:21-33. Christ loves and sacrifices for His bride, the church. Paul says, now you husbands "love like that."

Chastity or purity and faithfulness is the Bible standard. Sexuality is accepted as a gift of God. God gave many restrictions to protect this gift from misuse. Jesus takes us deeper than just avoiding the act of immorality. He was talking about adultery and said, "Whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." Just because these words were not written in a day like ours when daily street scenes flash before us in abbreviated dress styles does not limit the power of God’s Word to bring us up short. It is true that Satan throws us into circumstances and into situations far different than past generations. Perhaps a word of warning to Christian women is also appropriate here. It is hard for Christian men to believe that a Christian woman would want to present her physical form as a display to ensnare or attract the attention of men to lustful thought.

At the same time, God will not let us excuse ourselves or refuse to take Jesus’ words direct from the shoulder. I believe Luther said we can’t prevent birds from flying overhead, but we can prevent them from building nests on our heads. Likewise, evil thoughts may come when we are exposed to the beauty of the female form, but we need not take a second or a third look, and we need not and dare not begin to play with little mental imaginations of lustful thoughts.

Now let’s not feel guilty about being human. God made us that way, but let’s love Him enough to let Him have control of our thoughts in all purity.

Chastity before and after marriage is God’s standard. Many sins can be undone and forgiven through restitution. But sexual sin leaves a mark which cannot be undone even though forgiven. Purity in sex life is a witness to the Christian’s loyalty to the model of love Christ demonstrates in His love for the church. In the Old Testament Israel’s turning away to other gods was called both idolatry and adultery. Hosea tells us this breaking away from the covenant with God is like breaking the marriage vows.

The New Testament is just as clear in this that true love accepts the whole person and true love feels the intrusion of a third person intolerable. True human love focuses upon the one beloved to the exclusion of all others. That is why God is a jealous God; He loves us so deeply.

Today youth ask what about after we are engaged. Jesus wants us to love without fear. Such love demands a complete trust. Where there is lack of trust, there is fear. Premarital relations destroy trust. When the moral fence of purity is jumped once, how can one be sure it will not be jumped again? Mutual trust is one that will not be diluted. Premarital relations violate that confidence. Fear wounds and breaks love.

Jesus wants us to understand and trust ourselves. When we break moral rules before marriage, something happens to our own self-trust. We just can’t trust ourselves, and marriage is not going to add any moral fiber to us. Premarital relations cheat you out of trust in your own self. We don’t love our marriage partners any more than we love ourselves. If we can’t trust ourselves, we won’t love ourselves and we will not be able to love our true partner.

Jesus wants us to be free from guilt. There is nothing that tears away from the maximum in marital relations as does a sense of guilt. Fear frustrates love. Lack of self-trust frustrates love. Guilt complicates this regardless how we may seal our conscience. Any violation of God’s standard of purity destroys the happiness and satisfaction God intends.

God wants us to be happy. He loves us. He never intended that anyone should have less than the best. God planned that man should live a full and abundant life. For some this does not include marriage. For many it is part of God’s plan, and it was His idea to include sex. The purpose was to give people maximum relationship as a part of maximum happiness. If we break the rules God gives, we suffer. Falling short of His best use of this relationship is sin. Any sexual relationship outside of marriage is sin. Many today have robbed themselves by sin that they cannot know the depth of God’s best for them apart from His gracious forgiveness.

Fear, lack of trust, and sense of guilt can spoil happiness. But there is still hope. If we look at Jesus in the eighth chapter of John, we see no stoning of a very guilty person. Something can be done about it. One can get a new clean start.

God is in the business of forgiving. No matter what you have done or how often, God will forgive you completely. He is eager to forgive if you are willing to admit sin and trust Him. If we truly confess and are willing to turn from sin, God is ready to forgive. His forgiveness restores the potential for a happy home. He not only forgives, but He destroys the record. Beyond all this, He also completely remakes us down inside. He knows that we could not stand the pressures of repeat temptation without His help. His Holy Spirit is right there on guard enabling us to overcome if we will but let Him have control of our lives.

The answer to the sex question today is not likely to be found in more rules but rather in an exciting new relationship to Jesus Christ. If we give ourselves completely to Him, there will be some noticeable changes without legislation and rules.

I am glad that today we have committed youth who are discovering that divine principles are being internalized. These principles are becoming a very real part within youth themselves. They are then free not to selfish enslavement to their own homespun rules, but they are free and not bound to outside man-made rules. They are released and free to give themselves to the whole will of God according to the divine principles He is writing upon the depths of their hearts.

God is not limited in what He can do for our generation if we will open ourselves completely to do His will. We live in a society which is approaching the sexual license typical of Roman civilization during the period of its decay. Never before in this nation’s history could the committed youth stand in so bright contrast to the immoral society around us with inner control and sexual purity. Let’s pray that God will give us more youth who know what they believe and how to live. Let’s also pray that our own attitudes and standards will not deteriorate along with a decaying society about us.

Shadows

By Elvin Snyder

How thick are shadows? Logically a thick wall should cast a thicker shadow than a thin one. Fortunately the shadows of the electric poles across the pavement do not cause a bumpy ride.

About the only thing that varies in shadows is their lengths depending on the elevation of the source of light. When the sun is low, children play shadow tag. When the sun is high, everyone seems ridiculously insignificant. A delightful game for small children—and some not so small—is to throw animal-head shadows on the wall, on a long winter’s evening.

But shadows are also very gray. They do not change according to the color of the object. A red house does not cast a red shadow. If it did, a white person should have a whitefaced shadow.

But the shadows of history, religion, and life do have thickness. The several cold and hot wars during the lifetime of some of us are thrusting foreboding shadows across our paths right now. The shadows of the religious life of England, France, Spain, America portray a density or alarming shallowness for all the world to see. The shadows of our own individual lives no doubt are more prophetic than we would wish to admit. Racism, for example, is the shadow of an ugly monster called hate.

If you are looking at the ground and see a shadow of an octopus somehow coming down toward you, you had better take the hint.

Shadows, though “nothing” in themselves, can never be the shadows of nothing.

Take the New Testament Epistle to the Hebrews for example. Its whole purpose is to explain what the Old Testament shadows mean. And some of the shadows were thick and made of wood or stone or curtains. The tabernacle had linear, square, and cubic dimensions. But it was only the “nothing” pointing to the “something.” The substances though real were not the “reality” to which they pointed.

Which is it: the illusions and orthodoxies that are tooled up, or the profound spiritual reality of life in Christ?
Loneliness
Will Not Possess Her Heart

With twilight time of life enfolding her,
She sees her good friends, one by one, depart
And bears, I know, the pain of vacant places —
But loneliness will not possess her heart.

Remembering the best of yesterdays,
She walks today with grace. Her quiet mind
And gentle heart give thanks for ties long known
And for the rest of sharing yet to find.

There will be give and take of goodness still
And challenge until earthly day is past,
The fellowship of faith, the more of life
That waits a new unveiling at the last.

Wit and Wisdom

Radar spelled backwards is radar; they get you coming and going.

The nicest thing about an egoist is that he never goes around talking about other people.

Success is relative. The more success, the more relatives.

Don’t spend all your time trying to love your enemies. Treat your friends better too.

It was a Jew who brought the gospel to Rome; a Roman who took it to France; a Frenchman who took it to the Scandinavian countries; a Scandinavian who took it to Scotland; a Scotchman who evangelized Ireland; an Irishman in turn made conquest of Scotland. No people ever received the gospel except at the hands of an alien.

“Thank goodness, I’m finally 11,” said Jerry jubilantly on his birthday.

“Why is that so important to you?” asked his father.

“Because when a grown-up does something silly, people say he’s acting like a ten-year-old.”

He who sacrifices his conscience to ambition burns a picture to obtain the ashes.

English is the only language that capitalizes “I” in writing. Many languages capitalize “You.”

When a man forgets himself, he usually does something that everyone else remembers.

There is no better test for a man’s ultimate integrity than his behavior when he is wrong.

If you see someone who doesn’t have a smile, share one of yours.

A man has no more character than he can command in time of crisis.—Sockman.

A boy was asked by his teacher to write an essay on anatomy and this is what he wrote: “Your head is kind of hard and your brains are in it and your hair is on it. Your face is in front of your head where you eat. Your neck is what keeps your head off your shoulders, which are sort of shelves where you hook your overall straps. Your arms you got to have to pitch with and so you can reach the biscuits. Your fingers stick out of your hands so you can scratch, throw a curve, and add arithmetic. Your legs is what you got to have to get to first base, your feet are what you run on, your toes are what gets stubbed. And that is all there is of you except what is inside, and I ain’t seen that.”

“Thank You Joe”

Joe was a patient at the hospital when I first met him. For years he was resident of the community; an artist in his chosen field. He was overcome by a stroke which left him paralyzed in the right side. Life for him meant the opportunity and privilege of doing things for other people. Now he was almost completely incapacitated.

I had opportunity to share deeply with Joe that day. I had asked him about his relationship to the church. He was Catholic. He told me how he faithfully attended Mass, paid his dues, and was well acquainted with the priest. But today I asked him, “Joe, do you know Jesus the Savior of the world?” With tears streaming down his cheeks, and between the sobs of joy in his soul, he said, “Yes, oh yes, I know Him.”

Somehow I was too choked with emotion to say more. I simply bowed my head and whispered a prayer in his ear, thanking God for sending our Jesus into the world to save us both. Joe shook his head, for he understood.

When I left that day, I somehow understood the variations of the Catholic Church, and that there are people in all branches who have a personal relationship to Jesus. I was at peace in my soul. — Waldo E. Miller, Maple Grove Mennonite Church, Belleville, Pa.
A gradually increasing number of middle-income families in the U.S. are becoming overweight. The U.S. Public Health Service estimates that 10 to 12 percent of these families—those with annual incomes of $12,000 or more—are overweight to a point that jeopardizes their health and ruins their appearance.

"The Jesus Freaks" are a group of young people who are receiving a thorough training in the Bible and evangelism in a remote mountain retreat at Garland Hot Springs, Wash., in preparation for witnessing in Seattle, Wash., and large cities in Oregon. Many of the youth are former drug users. Director of the "Jesus Camp" is Rod McDougal, an associate leader of the Youth Speaks movement of the Puget Sound area.

The rising cost of a business letter and the lowering of the long distance telephone rates cause an increasing number of U.S. firms to conduct their business orally. According to the Dartnell Corporation of Chicago the expense of a three-minute station-to-station daytime call from Mansfield, Ohio, to Los Angeles, Calif., is $1.35, while the average letter costs $3.07—steno- graphic expense, 96 cents; overhead, 76 cents; lost motion, 17 cents; mailing, 26 cents; filing, 12 cents; materials, 08 cents; and dietation time, 72 cents.

Cancellation of its tax exemption by the Internal Revenue Service has resulted in a lawsuit filed by Americans United for Separation of Church and State, charging IRS with using its power of canceling tax exemptions to silence and drive out of business small organizations with whose position it disagrees.

Glen L. Archer, executive director of Americans United, in an accompanying statement, said: "The arbitrary and capricious enforcement of the ban on politicking of tax-exempt groups has become a scandal even to IRS officials themselves. The practical effect of it is that vast, wealthy nonprofit groups can do all the lobbying they choose while small organizations like ours can do none at all. The dioceses of the Roman Catholic Church, as well as the United States Catholic Conference are presently engaged in all-out political campaigns in 35 states. They have just completed the process of ramming a special interest bill through the Michigan Legislature and another through the Louisiana Legislature.

"In New York three years ago, Catholic dioceses and other organizations spent over $2 million in one political campaign to try to change the state constitution in their favor. The IRS has never raised the slightest question about the tax exemption of these organizations. Yet when Americans United sought to counter these designs, its tax exemption was promptly canceled."

A federal drug expert warned that unless the staggering rate of drug abuse in America is checked, "Western civilization as we know it will cease in three decades."

Michael J. Costello, a special agent in the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs, Department of Justice, addressed the Institute on Drug Dependence and Abuse sponsored by the College of Saint Elizabeth.

"We have a brain drain in this country, but it is not alcoholism, sex, communism, or other exploitation—it is primarily drug abuse," Mr. Costello told some 250 parents and educators.

He noted that drug abuse is making such severe inroads in modern society that President Nixon recently placed the problem second only to the Southeast Asian war in his concern.

"What will happen to this country when drug addicted youth assume the jobs of teachers, lawyers, clergymen, doctors, and others?" Mr. Costello asked. He said it is "impossible to count the number of addicts—they are like the fish in the sea."

The federal agent warned that "this country is drowning in amphetamines and barbiturates." The family medicine cabinet has become a source of supply of the latter for young drug abusers, he said.

Efforts to enact laws to control the production and "loose prescription" of amphetamines and barbiturates, as well as the sale of codeine cough syrups have met with heavy resistance from the drug industry, Mr. Costello said.

Japan may be one of the countries in which the "day of the missionary is past," according to a veteran of Baptist mission work in Tokyo.

Mr. Worth C. Grant, who returned to the U.S. in August after 20 years as a Southern Baptist missionary in Japan, said the general movement of history as well as the race problem in America has reduced the effectiveness of the foreign missionary.

"I'm not saying we should stop trying to send the gospel," he said in an interview, "but we should examine the means. Because one half of all the money we spend for missions throughout the world must be spent on the missionary himself—his food, clothing, family, and housing. What we can do in the mission field is limited."

He applied the changes he foresees to Japan. "I would suggest using more mass media techniques like radio, television, and literature. For instance, the Japanese people are the "reading(est)" in the world. They are a bunch of bookworms and yet there is no Christian literature that can be bought at a Japanese book stand. Then too, so much of our literature is for Christians. We need more for non-Christians."

Mr. Grant estimated that 75 percent of all Japanese oppose the U.S.-Japan security treaty. He said that included Buddhist leaders who are afraid the treaty will drag the country into another war or increase militarism.

"At present, Japan spends less than 1 percent of its gross national product on the military," he stated, "and the people don't like getting under our (U.S.) nuclear umbrella."

The reason the human race has increased its technology a millionfold but still lives in a primitive social system," according to Columnist Sydney J. Harris, is that we are negatively motivated.

"We unite only in the face of a common enemy," he wrote in the San Francisco Chronicle. "We unite out of fear or anger or despair. As soon as the danger has passed, and the enemy has faded, we resume our narrow, selfish, shortsighted behavior."

This is where religion should help, he says. "Religion ought to be the force that moves individuals to lift societies and governments from a power base to a people base. But religion," he laments, "also has succumbed to negative motivation."

"This ecclesiastical drive for position and prestige has driven millions out of the churches and into profound disillusion with religious institutions," he said.

"How do we switch the current so that we no longer need a crisis or a catastrophe or a common enemy to act in brotherhood before it is too late?" the newspaperman asked.

"If we can do this, our form of government won't matter. And if we can't, it won't matter whose revolution wins, everyone will lose."

Public Affairs Pamphlet No. 448 on Drug Abuse and Your Child is available for 25 cents from the Public Affairs Committee, 381 Park Avenue South, New York, N.Y. 10016. This pamphlet points out danger signs and an abundance of information about drugs themselves.

Forty-Six Join TAP Program in Africa

The 46 new Teachers Abroad Program (TAP) volunteers to Africa represent the Mennonite Central Committee's continuing commitment to the new African nations to help fight ignorance, poverty, and disease. The volunteers recently completed two weeks of orientation. Some of the time was spent at the Franklin and Marshall College campus, the Akron headquarters, and New York City.

This is the seventh year MCC has sent out TAP volunteers. The new teachers bring the number of TAP personnel in Africa alone to 187. Resource persons for the orientation included: Don Jacobs, missionary to Tanzania under the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions; Charles Bauman, Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions assistant overseas director; Jan S. F. van Hoogstraten, Church World Service director for Africa; Elmer Neufeld, professor at Bluffton College; and David Ritter, a returning TAP-er from the Congo.

The Congo will receive the most new volunteers with a total of 18 and Nigeria will receive 15. Other TAP-ers were assigned to Algeria, Kenya, Malawi, Sierra Leone, and Zambia.

Members from the Mennonite Church:

Ronald Denlinger, Lancaster, Pa., will spend the next year in language study in Grenoble, France, before going on for a two-year teaching assignment in Algeria. Ronald is a graduate of Eastern Mennonite College with a BS in mathematics. He is a member of the Landis Valley Mennonite Church, Lancaster.

David and Carolyn Emmert, Elkhart, Ind., have volunteered for a three-year teaching assignment at the Njaluahuon Methodist Girls' School in Segbwema, Sierra Leone. David is a graduate of Ball State University where he received a BS in education. His wife is a graduate of Goshen College and received her MA in English from Indiana University. Both have had experience in teaching. They are members of the Metamora Mennonite Church, Metamora, Ill.

John and Kathryn Fairfield, Harrisonburg, Va., are spending one year in Brussels in language study before proceeding to the Congo to teach for two years. Both are graduates of Eastern Mennonite College where he received a BA in natural science and her wife received a BA in natural science and German. John is a member of the Lindale Mennonite Church, Linville, Va., and Kathryn is a member of the Park View Mennonite Church, Harrisonburg.

Donald and Ruth Holsinger, Hesston, Kan., will spend a year in French language study in Grenoble, France, before going on to teach in Algeria for two years. The Holsingers are both graduates of Bethel College where he received a BA in history and she received a BS in elementary education. Donald is a member of the Hesston Mennonite Church and Ruth is a member of the Bethel College Mennonite Church, Newton, Kan.

James Herschberger, Hatfield, Pa., will spend a year in Grenoble, France, in language study before going on to teach in Algeria for two years. He is a graduate of Goshen College with a BA in physics. James is a member of the Lansdale Mennonite Church, Lansdale, Pa.

Barbara Jantzi, Archbold, Ohio, has volunteered for a three-year teaching assignment at a Teacher Training College in Gindiri, Nigeria. Barbara is a graduate of Goshen College where she received a BS in elementary education. She is a member of First Mennonite Church, New Bremen, N.Y.

John and Jan Kennel, New Holland, Pa., will study in Brussels for the next year before beginning a two-year teaching assignment in the Congo. John is a graduate of Goshen College with a BA in history. Jan attended Freeman Junior College and Goshen College. He is a member of the New Holland Mennonite Church and his wife is a member of the Salem Zion Mennonite Church, Freeman, S.D.

J. Michael Klaus, Eureka, Ill., will spend a year in Brussels in French language study before proceeding to the Congo to teach for two years. Michael is a graduate of Goshen College where he received a BA in chemistry. He has also studied for a year at the University of Edinburgh.

James Myers, Blountstown, Fla., has volunteered for a three-year teaching assignment in Oturko, Nigeria. James holds a BA in biology from Florida State University and had taught for one year prior to volunteering for this term of service. He is a member of the Bethel Mennonite Church, Blountstown.

Joan Gerig, Wayland, Iowa, has volunteered for a three-year teaching assignment at a Teacher Training College in Numan, Nigeria. Joan is a graduate of Goshen College with a BA in English and for the past two years she had taught in St. Louis, Mo. She is a member of the Sugar Creek Mennonite Church, Wayland.

Victor and Nancy Myers, Evanston, Ill., are spending one year in language school in Brussels before going on to the Congo for a two-year teaching assignment. Victor attended Eastern Mennonite College and was graduated from Goshen College with a BA in chemistry. He is presently completing requirements for his PhD in chemistry from Northwestern University. Nancy is also a graduate of Goshen College with a BA in English and received her MA from Northwestern University. Both are members of the Evanston Mennonite Church, Evanston, Ill.

Bruce Stahly, Nappanee, Ind., will be teaching science in Kenya for the next three years. He is a graduate of Goshen College with a BA in chemistry. He has also done additional graduate study at the University of Wisconsin. Bruce is a member of the Holdeman Mennonite Church, Wakarusa, Ind.

John and Barbara Lehman, Souderton, Pa., have volunteered for a three-year teaching assignment in Kenya. The Lehmans are graduates of Bluffton College where he received a BA in mathematics and his wife received a BA in social work. John is a member of the Blooming Glen Mennonite Church, Blooming Glen, Pa.

Nelson Rejoins Board Staff

Boyd Nelson, Secretary for Information Services at Mennonite Board of Missions, returned to his Elkhart, Ind., office on Aug. 19 following a 14-month leave of absence. He was granted a sabbatical for graduate study at Iowa University in Iowa City to work toward a master's degree in journalism.

In Nelson's absence, Ivan Kauffman of Hopedale, Ill., served as acting secretary for the Division. The Hopedale Mennonite Church, which Kauffman has pastored for 20 years, granted him a 13-month leave for the interim assignment. Kauffman resumed pastoral responsibilities at Hopedale on Aug. 1.

In addition to coordinating overall operations for the Information Services Division, Nelson plans to specialize in field services to strengthen Board relationships with Mennonite congregations. This will involve increasing field personnel and Board staff contacts with congregations and planning mission forums and report teams (similar to those operative at Mission '70). Other responsibilities include missionary education and representing Board interests to the Mission '71 program planning committee.

Nelson and his wife, Welma, have three children: Ben, 21, and Paul, 19, students at Goshen (Ind.) College; and Barbara, 16, a junior at Bethany Christian High, Goshen. The family resides at 233 Woodridge Drive, Elkhart.

Nelson joined the Mennonite Board of Missions staff as secretary for Relief and Service in 1952. He assumed his present position as Information Services administrative head in 1959.

"I see two major benefits from my year of study in Iowa City," he said. "I received some formal training in journalism and communications theory and worked at sharpening technical skills necessary for public relations work. I am grateful to the Mission Board for granting me this privilege to receive many insights and valuable experiences."

Muted Anticipation

Urban Peachey has accepted a two-year term of service with MCC as director for Jordan and representative available for special assignments in the Middle East.

Peachey accepts this position at a time when tensions are strong in the political structure of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan. Palestinian commandos fighting for liberation of their homeland occupied by Israeli forces feel betrayed by Egyptian President Nasser who has agreed to peace discussions with Israel as proposed by the United States Secretary of State William Rogers. The Commandos oppose any political settlement that denies them their homeland, preferring a secular state in which Christian, Muslim, and Jew could live together in peace.

"We look forward to our assignment with muted anticipation," said Peachey. His wife, Gwendolyn, and their children will establish residence first in Beirut. Here the children will be enrolled in the American School. It is felt that in view of the continuing unrest in Jordan, Peachey will be able to more effectively evaluate MCC's role in the Middle East from Beirut. Later he plans to move to Amman.

Urban graduated from Eastern Mennonite College in 1958 with a BA in sociology. He taught at Lancaster Mennonite School for one year and attended Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary in Pittsburgh, Pa., from 1959-60. In 1960 he began service with MCC as Secretary of Personnel Services and stayed on in this position until 1969. In 1969-70 school year he studied in the Graduate School of Public and International Affairs at the University of Pittsburgh.

In Jordan, the needlework program on East Bank, as well as the child sponsorship and self-help programs, have been temporarily suspended. The only expatriate MCC worker currently in Jordan is Margrit Schommann of Swiss nationality who is working with the Palestinian Christian Hospital, as well as helping hold MCC programs together.

However, the MCC kindergartens and the Marka activity center continue to operate. The mother-child centers in Marka and Jebel Nadif are being staffed by local workers. MCC material aid continues to flow into Jordan. Some 80,000 pounds of bedding, clothing, and school supplies were shipped there from Philadelphia in August. The sewing centers are also in operation.

Orientation for Latin America

Nineteen persons attended the special orientation for Latin-American personnel July 23-31, at Mennonite Central Committee headquarters, Akron, Pa. Twelve of the volunteers will be serving in Bolivia and seven will pioneer the first TAP program in Jamaica. Those serving in Bolivia also attended an orientation in San Jose, Costa Rica, before going on to their respective assignments.

From the Mennonite Church:
Ray and Mary Kratz, Telford, Pa., have accepted a 30-month term of service in Bolivia. Ray will be teaching under MCC's TAP program and Mary will be involved in nursing. Both are graduates of Goshen College where he received a BA in elementary education and his wife a BS in nursing. Both are members of the Perkasie Mennonite Church, Perkasie, Pa.

Paul Lauer, Howe, Ind., has volunteered for a 27-month Pax term of service in Bolivia. He will be involved in community development work and agriculture extension. He is a graduate of Lakeland High School and attended Goshen College. Paul is a member of the Marion Mennonite Church, Howe, Ind.

Carlton and Sandra Miller, York, Pa., have accepted a 27-month term of service in Santa Cruz, Bolivia. Carlton will be serving as assistant director for MCC in Bolivia. He is a graduate of Pennsylvania State University with a BS in accounting and his wife attended Thompson Business College. Both are members of the Stony Brook Mennonite Church, York, Pa.

John Nice, Morrison, Ill., has begun a 27-month term of Pax service in Bolivia. He will be involved in agriculture and community development work. John is a graduate of Iowa Mennonite School and Hesston College. He is a member of the Morrison Mennonite Church.

Arley Sommers, Louisville, Ohio, has begun a 27-month term of Pax service in Bolivia. He will be involved in agriculture and community development work. Arley is a graduate of Central Christian High School and had been employed on his father's farm prior to beginning his term of service. He is a member of the Storrs Heights Mennonite Church, Louisville, Ohio.

Mary Helen Weaver, Apple Creek, Ohio, has accepted a three-year TAP assignment in Jamaica. Mary Helen is a graduate of Central Christian High School and Eastern Mennonite College, where she received a BA in elementary education. Prior to her assignment in Jamaica, she had taught school in the Edinburg, Va., school system. She is a member of the Salem Mennonite Church, Wooster, Ohio.

Holy Land Tours Offered

Menno Travel Service has just announced the first segment of its new 1970-71 winter tour program.

"Holy Land Highlights" offers a low-cost, unforgettable tour of the Holy Land with ten days of travel and a choice of three separate departure dates—November 21, 1970; December 26, 1970; and March 6, 1971.

Since these tours are exceptional in their coverage of the Holy Land and yet extreme-
High-Aim Enrolls Nine Students

Nine black youth from urban areas have begun the 1970 term in three Mennonite secondary schools through the assistance of a program that seeks to provide educational advancement for young people from minority groups.

The program, called High-Aim, was developed in 1967 by Lee Roy Berry, then a Voluntary Service teacher in the Cleveland, Ohio, public school system. He is now a graduate student and part-time instructor at Goshen (Ind.) College.

Berry considers the High-Aim program one answer to the problem of inferior education that most city and ghetto area public schools offer. "At the high school level young people begin to make serious decisions that determine their destinies," he said. "Our Mennonite high schools have the ability to assist urban youth with their decisions while also helping them discover personal fulfillment and sensitivity to others. This can occur in an atmosphere whereby the environment will not mitigate against the learning process."

The High-Aim program officially began in the fall of 1968 with three students enrolled in two church schools. In 1969 that number increased to seven students. A committee is responsible to set operating policies, receive and screen applicants, and coordinate schooling and lodging arrangements. Members in addition to Berry include Laban Peachey, Heston, Kan.; John Krall, Harrisonburg, Va.; Wilbur Yoder, Cleveland, Ohio; and Doris Nolly, New York City.

The nine applicants selected by the High-Aim Committee for 1970 spent Aug. 25-27 at Prairie Street Mennonite Church in Elkhart for orientation prior to their school experience. Sessions were directed by Berry and Gene Yoder, VS administrator assisting with program coordination.

The High-Aim students and their assigned schools are: Lamortto Wofford, Chicago, III.; Venesse Taylor, South Bend, Ind.; and Theodore Ballanger, Chicago, to Bethany Christian High, Goshen; Lenelle Webb, Omaha, Neb.; George Johnson, Omaha, Leamon Sowell, Jr., and Paul Scott, both of Chicago, to Iowa Mennonite School, Kalona; Virgil Hawthorne, Sarasota, and Jennie Berry, Lake Placid, Fla., to Central Christian High, Kidron, Ohio. All will be staying in Mennonite homes.

High-Aim tuitions and other operating expenses are being covered by Mennonite Board of Missions through its Relief and Service Committee until sufficient special contributions are received from other sources. More information on the program and philosophy of High-Aim is available by writing Box 370, Elkhart, Indiana 46514.

Disaster Strikes St. Louis

A disaster has struck a part of St. Louis. The area known as the Jeff-Vander-Lou community has been devastated by poor housing and living conditions and a lack of employment opportunity.

While it has taken longer than a tornado or flood, the disaster is just as damaging to property and even more damaging to the people caught in its path.

A community nonprofit corporation has been at work since 1966 to rehabilitate the area. While its efforts have succeeded in getting 75 living units rehabilitated, a doctor's office established, a new shoe factory in the area, and a program in education and recreation started, only fringes of the disaster have been touched.

Jeff-Vander-Lou, Inc., has a current commitment with the Federal Housing Authority to work on another 21 houses, but it can only successfully complete these units if it has the labor to do eight of them at no cost.

Jeff-Vander-Lou, Inc., has asked the Mennonite Disaster Service to provide this labor. If you feel you can contribute in this construction work, Jeff-Vander-Lou needs your help. All the basic construction skills are needed. Arrangements have been made with a reputable general contractor to handle the purchasing of materials and coordination of the building. Board and room will be provided. These units are to be completed by January 1. Your help is earnestly sought.

For more information, or to volunteer, get in touch with your MDS contact man or call Cecil Miller (314-535-0962) at 2832 Dayton, St. Louis, Mo. 63106. A filmstrip "The Jeff-Vander-Lou Story" is available.

Nurses Meet

The 28th annual meeting of the Mennonite Nurses' Association met at Eastern Mennonite College, Harrisonburg, Va., Aug. 7-9, 1970. The theme was "The Christian's Obligation to Poverty." Mr. John Honeycutt, of Harrisonburg, Va., spoke to us on "Discovering the Need." Response to the need in the urban area was given by Susan Esh, Department of Public Health in Pittsburgh, Pa., and in the rural area by Mrs. Samuel Bucher, Director of the Mountain Clinic in Harman, W.Va.

David Steinman was guest speaker for the joint banquet of the Mennonite Medical Association and the Mennonite Nurses' Association. Our worship service was joint, as was our recreation, which included a tour by D. Ralph Hostetter of EMC's museum.

Any nurse desiring further information of the Mennonite Nurses' Association joining the Mennonite Medical Association and sharing their publication, please contact Rachel Fisher, 739 Janet Ave., Lancaster, Pa. 17601.

Edith, Lori, and Jonathan Kanagy

Karagys Appointed to Jamaica

In its July meeting, the Virginia Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, Harrisonburg, Va., appointed Jonathan and Edith Kanagy to a four-year term as missionaries to Jamaica. Jonathan comes from Belleville, Pa., and is a graduate of Eastern Mennonite College. Edith comes from Goshen, Ind. They have a daughter, Lori, one year old.

The Kanagys will go to the north coast of Jamaica in September to work in a new area called Ocho Rios, where a new housing development appears to be an open door for a church in Jamaica. A commissioning service is planned for the evening of Sept. 13 at Weavers Church near Harrisonburg.

Missionaries reappointed to Jamaica are: Willard and Melba Heatwole, four years; Doreen Kauffman, two years; Hazel Kniely, two years; and Wilma Lee Showalter, two years.
Crusade Crossed All Lines

Considered by many as a milestone for the Tidewater Area of Virginia Crusade 70 under Myron Augsburger, Harrisonburg, Va., and Tom Skinner, Harlem, New York, crossed color lines and captured the enthusiasm and response of many denominations.

The attractive 11,000-seat coliseum a Hampton, Va., was the setting for Tidewater's big evangelistic effort Aug. 2-9. Planned for the Newport News-Hampton, Va., areas, attenders came from as far away as Harrisonburg, Washington, D.C., Richmond and Chesapeake, Va. In all, approximately 50,000 people attended the week-long effort and 450 decisions were made for Christ.

The crusade was a “first” on the peninsula as a joint effort of black and white Christians. Two years of careful planning preceded and helped break down racial and denominational differences and barriers which have separated for so long. The local newspapers gave good coverage to the crusade. The committee which planned Crusade 70 was of mixed races and denominations. Youth were present in large numbers and responded to the invitation.

German Objectors Serve in Program

Four young German men have come to the United States under the auspices of the Mennonite Central Committee Trainee Program and the German organization called Operation Reconciliation (Aktion Sühnezeichen) to serve in VS-type assignments in lieu of doing military service in their own country. The German law states that no one can be compelled against his conscience to do active military service with arms, but those who refuse to bear arms must do an alternative civilian service.

Klaus Flick, 20, from Sinn, will be working in Sunshine Children's Home for mentally retarded children in Maumee, Ohio.

Heinrich Bröskamp is assigned to maintenance duties at Reba Place in Chicago. Heinrich, 20, is from Steinbeck.

Wendelin Ahlgrimm, from Stuttgart, will work at Landis Homes, a nursing care and senior citizen institution in Littitz, Pa. Wendelin is 20 years old.

Ernst Wilhelm von der Recke, 19, from Beiert, will work as an orderly at Mennonite Deaconess Hospital in Beatrice, Neb.

Operation Reconciliation is an organization founded in Germany in 1958. Since then over 4,000 young Germans have served in 12 European countries, Israel, and the United States. They build or rebuild, till the land, bring in crops, and help in homes for children, the aged, and disabled, without salary.

Why does Operation Reconciliation exist? Its goals are to seek new friendships between Germans and the people who suffered most during World War II and to do away with the poison, hatred, and distrust that have not yet been forgotten.

"We are of the opinion," stated a spokesman for the program, "that the construction of peace must become an alternative to military service. We can work for peace only if we have understood the reasons for the lack of peace. This working for peace is a difficult but urgently needed task for young people over and above national and confessional boundaries."

Because the alternative service requirement in Germany is 18 months, Flick, Bröskamp, Ahlgrimm, and Recke will stay in the U.S. longer than the usual one-year term for trainees.

The 39 other trainees from 14 countries are on their way to their homes for the next six months in various parts of the United States and Canada.

They will be engaged in a wide variety of work and experiences. After the first six months, they will be reassigned to other homes. This gives them more than one perspective on life in America.

Management Seminar at Lakewood Retreat

Plans have been announced for a management seminar to be held at Lakewood Retreat, Brooksville, Fla., on Sat., Sept. 26, 1970.

Details of the seminar have been announced by Eugene R. Witmer, Seminar Director for Inter-Church, Inc., New Holland, Pa., and Pastor Elvin Martin, Program Director of Lakewood Retreat. The Host Committee for the event will be Ammon Schrock, Earl Alderfer, Fred Swartzendruber, Atlee Schlabaeh, and Al Kurtz.

The Inter-Church organization has conducted a number of such seminars in the past several years, and those who have attended register a high degree of enthusiasm and appreciation for material received.

The seminar leader will be Thomas G. Harrison of West Chester, Pa. Harrison is Assistant Director of Training for ARA Services in Philadelphia and is also a Baptist minister. He will deal with such pertinent subjects as planning, organization, delegation, training, communication, motivation, and productivity.

The seminar registration fee is $17 per person, which includes instruction and materials. Persons who desire to register for the seminar should contact Inter-Church, Inc., Box 127, New Holland, Pa. 17557, and inquiries regarding accommodations should be addressed to Lakewood Retreat, Route 3, Box 156 K, Brooksville, Fl. 33512.

MCC Financial Support Reviewed

The Mennonite Central Committee Executive Committee meeting on July 24, 25, in Elkhart, Ind., received the report of the assistant treasurer. The report indicated that though income from sources outside the constituency are on schedule and relief sales incomes are slightly higher than last year, the one source of MCC income that has dropped considerably is constituency contributions.

Emergencies always elicit the strong concern and support of the brotherhood. However, it was recognized that MCC does not respond to emergencies only, but has an ongoing program with continuing responsibilities. MCC continues to have the role of a servant.

MCC spending was reduced by 10 percent in May as a result of reduced income. It was moved and passed that in submitting 1971 program budget proposals, the MCC field directors be asked to project two budgets—one on the level of the currently reduced budget, and one on the level previous to the 10 percent reduction, in case constituency giving permits a return to that level of operation.
The Executive Committee decided that discussions would need to be planned with each of the constituent bodies of MCC to share these circumstances and see how MCC can best relate to them in reviewing the present financial structure of MCC, the pattern of channeling funds, the projections of contributions and support, and the methods of channeling funds, as well as ways of cooperating in promotion.

Peace Section Issues
Statement on Draft

In anticipation of hearings by the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives Armed Services Committees, the Mennonite Central Committee Peace Section, in a meeting on June 5, 1970, prepared a paper stating its position to be presented to those groups. When it became apparent that no hearings would be held, the Section decided to publish the statement to encourage the brotherhood to support movements to end the draft and to encourage public officials to work toward this goal. The Peace Section is sending each member of Congress, the Executive Branch, and the Selective System a copy of this statement.

The statement, "The Draft Should Be Abolished," is an argument based on what the draft is and how the draft is operated.

Congregational study groups are encouraged to study the statement and perhaps formulate their own. Copies of the statement are available from the MCC Peace Section, 21 South 12th Street, Akron, Pa., 17501. Single copies are free. Quantities are available at five cents each.

Dick Submits Resignation

Nickolas W. Dick has submitted his resignation as director of the Toronto Service Program of MCC in order to accept a position with the recently established Research and Planning Branch of the Ontario Department of Social and Family Services, effective Sept. 1, 1970.

Doug Snyder, Executive Director of MCC (Ontario) will serve as part-time interim coordinator until a permanent replacement is found, with Nick Dick continuing in a consultative capacity.

The Toronto Service Program will have 13 to 15 Voluntary Service workers serving in the inner-city and public housing projects, in the areas of child care, day care, casework, group work, draft immigration assistance, housing repair for low-income families, and community work.

David Janzen, currently pastor of the Niagara United Mennonite Church in Ontario, will serve at Eastern Mennonite College 1970-71 as visiting professor of philosophy.

Born in the Ukraine, Mr. Janzen immigrated to Mexico as an infant. He moved to Alberta at the age of seven and attended the schools there.

Ross T. Bender, Dean of Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries of Elkhart, Ind., will be on sabbatical leave during the 1970-71 academic year. He will be a post-doctoral fellow at the University of Pennsylvania in the Division of Family Study, Department of Psychiatry of the School of Medicine. Dean Bender was awarded a National Institute of Mental Health Fellowship by the university.

Millard C. Lind will serve as Acting Dean of the Associated Seminaries for the 1970-71 school year.

Chester Raber, Elkhart, Ind., will serve as guest speaker at a retreat for Allegheny and Ohio and Eastern conference ministers and wives at Laurelville Mennonite Church Center, Mt. Pleasant, Pa., Sept. 18, 19. The theme is: "The Pastor's Role in Resolving Conflict."

Community development will be the goal of a new voluntary Service unit in Zellwood, Fla. Following a report and recommendation by VS area administrator Raymon Martin, Eastern Mission Board's VSCP Committee took action in their Aug. 4 meeting to participate in this new project.

Zellwood is a small community about 60 miles north of Lakeland, Fla. The Zellwood unit will operate as an extension of the Laurelville VS unit.

Harold Davenport was ordained on Aug. 2 as a minister at the Seventh Avenue Mennonite Church, New York City. Paul G. Landis officiated at the ordination. Davenport had served as licensed minister at Seventh Avenue Mennonite Church for about a year.

Donald and Esther Lauver of Oakland Mills, Pa., are making fraternal visits to national churches and Eastern Board missionaries in Africa and Europe from Aug. 24 to Sept. 24.

Representing the Missions Council of the Lancaster Mennonite Conference, Lauvers are counseling with national church leaders and missionaries on matters of church polity and structure. Lauver will visit Musoma, Tanzania; Nairobi, Kenya; Addis Ababa, Ethiopia; Frankfurt, Germany; and Luxembourg City, Luxembourg.

Dorothy Sauder of Manheim, Pa., returned to Pine Grove Academy, Tegucigalpa, Honduras, on Aug. 21. She will serve as a cook there for two to three years under the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities. A commissioning service was held on Aug. 16 at the East Petersburg (Pa.) Mennonite Church. Miss Sauder's address is Apartado 143-C, Tegucigalpa, Honduras.

The Good Shepherd Mennonite Church at 214 West King Street in Lancaster, Pa., conducted evangelistic meetings from Aug. 24-30. The evangelist was Samuel Santos from Chicago, Ill.

Jason Denlinger was ordained on Aug. 16 as minister at the Penn Street Mennonite Church, Williamsport, Pa. Paul G. Landis officiated. The ordination message was delivered by David N. Thomas, moderator of the Lancaster Mennonite Conference.

New members by baptism: two at Waldo, Flanagan, Ill.; three at Landisville, Pa.; two at East Chestnut St. four at Laurel Street, eleven at Vine Street, one at Christian Street, and three at Lyndan, Lancaster, Pa.

Readers Say

Submissions to Readers Say column should comment on printed articles.

The articles written by David W. Mann (July 20), and Norma H. Archbold (July 21) were quite true, and there should be more like them. When it comes to fighting and killing there should be less silence and more speaking out. Parents and ministers should be more open on this subject, encouraging our young men to hear what Jesus said in His Sermon on the Mount. He not only taught that we are to do unto others as we would have done unto us, but that we are to love our enemies. Jesus was not ashamed to tell Peter to put up the sword; for those who use the sword shall perish by the sword. We are to confess Jesus and His teachings to people if we want to be remembered by God. We must let our light shine.

God’s “Ten Commandments” are the foundation of Christian living. Jesus came not to destroy, but to fulfill them. If we love God and believe in His Son Jesus we will do as He wants us to do. We have never been able to be a set of laws more just and loving than those that God gave the people so many years ago. He sent His beloved Son and told the people, “Hear ye Him.” Jesus gave His Sermon on the Mount in Matthew 5, 6, 7 and 8 and all His teachings which can be summed up in love for one another. If these words were taught constantly and each one tried to obey them we would have much more pleasant living today. Man does not want to accept God’s way of living, he wants to live his own selfish, greedy way which is leading him to self-destruction. If there is to be any flesh spared God will have to take a hand.

Everyone must become more informative on matters that are important or it will be the blind leading the blind and all will go in the ditch together. — Bernice Venhoven, Henderson, Colo.

Every so often there is a wave of chain letters. A person participating in such a chain theoretically can get fabulous returns for only a nominal investment. A current chain letter works like this: Upon receiving a letter you are asked to donate $1.00 to the first four names listed at the conclusion of the letter. Then you are to make twenty copies of the letter, placing your name in the fourth position and moving the other names up one place. By the time your name reaches the number one position, there will be $8,000 (in this case, ministers) to send you a $1.00 gift for your ministry.

In the letter you are assured there is no fraud on the part of the participant, who “honest,” it is claimed, used three times. In fact, however, chain letters are illegal, and the U.S. Postal Service does regard the chain letter as a kind of fraud or lottery, “the collection of money without the sale of merchandise” (Post Office Circular No. 888).

This current letter which has been widely circulated among Mennonite ministers is just one of many get-rich-quick schemes. In reality only a portion of those signing such letters are allowed to keep the money, and a good portion that are allowed to keep the money never do. The letter is also false in that the chain letter is not only unlawful, but dishonest. Furthermore, the chain letter is contrary to the spirit of Biblical teaching (2 Thess. 3:10). — Arthur McPhee, Johnstown, Pa.

I want to endorse the article, “Was the Lord Jesus a Revolutionary?” by Marcus Lind in the August 1970, issue of the Gospel Herald. The first paragraph should be studied and analyzed for all its piquant suggestions of the meaning of words, especially when we compare Jesus Christ. We are to feel fair to Jesus when we compare Him to Patrick Henry or George Washington in the American Revolution, to Robespierre or Napoleon in the French Revolution, to Karl Marx in the social revolution of the nineteenth century, to Trotsky of the Russian Revolution, or to the less intellectual but probably more emotional modern revolutionaries of the not clearly defined but generally referred to as the Establishment Revolution.

Brother Lind wisely calls attention to Christ’s method. This method is so effectively dramatized in the martyr Anabaptist movement told in Tielemann van Brummelen’s Mirror. Clearly the weapons of Jesus’ warfare were “not carnal, but mighty through God” (2 Cor. 10:4).

When Roman universal colonialism sent Jesus’ mother to Bethlehem, His power did not rise in protest, when political envy drove a cruel Herod to seize the babies of Bethlehem and murder them Jesus traveled meekly as a refugee to Egypt. But Herod revealed in a drunken licentious brawl and beheaded John the Baptist. Jesus traveled to Galilee and preached and healed, when Pilate at the trial declared he had power to either crucify or release Jesus. He remitted Pilate’s power of his power but suffered himself to be crucified.

By the power of God He rose from the dead and raised a new creation. His church. This church did not produce a revolution but a vital movement to spread the Gospel not with power but with the power of God. It produced a new and distinct body. This body proved to be the “salt of the earth.” — Allen Erb, Herston, Kan.

This is a series of eight short stories about Americans in Africa. In this book the reader will be faced with the Muslim-Christian encounter, the Afro-American encounter, the belief-practice encounter, and the secular-sacred encounter.

The author has drawn upon his experiences as a missionary teacher. His stories range from the subtle-simple to the intensely dramatic. Eby's intense love of the land and the Somali people is reflected in every story. Earlier books by this author are SENSE AND INCENSE AND A HOUSE IN HUE.

The Secular City: Alternative to Despair

By Mary Lou Walden

The letter began, "It's always good to be in Nashville and I'm afraid that's where my heart really is! The church problem in this metropolitan area is just too big to be overcome, and I fear the children are growing up not really knowing what church is."

This was part of the content of a recent letter from a lifelong friend, mother of three, and wife of a rising industrial executive. She had grown to adulthood in a city of active churches and had been surrounded from youth by numerous Christian friends. Her permanent move after marriage to a different section of the country, to a blatantly secular society, brought on problems that seem to increase as the children grow older. Two are now in junior high. Listen to more of her letter:

"Phil was baptized almost a year ago and Joan is talking about it now. The sad thing to me, though, is there is nothing to offer them. It's entirely too obvious to them that children their age (at church) aren't even as nice as friends they have in school who have little or no religious background. They are from families who have not had the opportunity we've had — really a very bad situation."

Another friend, equally concerned, said to me not long ago, "I want us to be out of New York by the time David starts to school, for few, if any, of the teachers I have known (she has taught in city schools for several years) have anything but material, opportunistic values."

These are representative comments and feelings, as many of you well know. Perhaps they reflect your own views. Certainly all of us who stand committed to Christian values can understand such sentiments.

But I wonder, as I contemplate the implications of these attitudes, if this reaction is realistic. If taken to its logical conclusion, it amounts to the notion that only two or three cities are safe harbors in which to anchor children during their fleeting, impressionable years. Despite negative influences present in all cities — secularism, materialism, graft — in these few ports the ship of childhood is secured because of the large accumulation of churches and nominal Christian neighborhoods, the reasoning goes. School friends and church friends are one and the same; neighborhood mores and church culture are complementary, not contradictory forces. This is the strength of numbers. At least this seems to be so, especially if you view the scene from a distance.

While we are not primarily concerned here with problems inherited by many children who have grown to maturity in church-oriented environments, it must be noted in passing that growing up in a city in which there are more than a hundred active congregations is no guarantee of emergence as a full-grown Christian. Some of the most tragic situations I know involve people who were — to all appearances — anchored safe in one of these harbors of refuge. But that’s material for another article, yea a book!

In all culture — urban, suburban, rural — strong forces clash with Christian value: in street play kids learn the power of brute strength and crude words; in suburban comfort they experience the seasonal pleasures of things; in rural areas they get exposed to provincial thought and limited learning. And if these negative values happen not to be absorbed, surely their potential to saturate youth cannot be contested. The active presence of evil, both subtle and obtrusive, is ubiquitous, a fact Jesus recognized when He urged followers to be in but not of the world.

In view of this awesome reality, what must we do — if we live in areas indifferent to Christ? If our children have only “nonchurch” friends? If we discover they are growing up “not really knowing what church is”?

There are at least a couple of approaches we must avoid. We must stop longing for the illusion of security which certain places connote. If children of first-century Christians could grow into mature manhood while living in the clutches of the worldly Roman Empire, then surely children of the twentieth century can do the same in Chicago or Boston or San Francisco or Westchester County or even Cat Creek, Texas. To be sure, we parents will encounter considerable difficulty as we seek to instill Christian commitment in our children in such cultures; but if we ourselves are committed, then God will help our task. Perhaps more fervent prayer is part of the solution.

And a second avoidance route is that of refusing to be even in the world — to live in a large city, for example, but to limit social contacts to those church people who live ten or perhaps forty miles away, all the while ignoring next-door neighbors with whom we think we have “nothing in common.” Don’t misunderstand: this is no argument against Christians getting together with others of like minds — we need more, not less of that; but we need also to remember that Jesus called His followers the “light of the world,” the “salt of the earth,” and that world and earth are geographically inclusive, moon flights notwithstanding.

But back to the positive — to consider some alternatives to frustration. One very positive approach to the problem of secularization is to make home a greater center of Christian community. I don’t mean that we should all suddenly initiate a program of planned compulsory daily devotions; while such rituals may be useful, they can also be rather superficial. Mothers perhaps should stop feeling guilty when these do not work out as we’d like and look for other creative ways to infuse Christ into ordinary living.

We can make home a microcosm of church by using our time and things to “entertain strangers,” to care for neighbor children when mothers get sick or have new babies or just need time away from the kids, to apply Christian teaching in day-to-day experience, to talk to children about our own needs and faults, to encourage them to pray with us for specific people and about specific problems. The list goes on and on and each suggestion merits careful elaboration, but perhaps enough is here to clarify the point. Children, like sponges, absorb freely.

Second, we can communicate to our children the philosophy of family solidarity: the idea that “each family has its own way of doing things and this is the way we operate in our family.” If the kids aren’t too fiery at age three or so, you can apply this rule of thumb to everything from bedtime routine to church attendance to observance of special holidays and celebrations, allowing, of course, for each child to have some voice in policymaking as he matures and for flexibility on special occasions when no higher principle conflicts. This attitude, it seems, if conveyed through love and concern, not through dogmatism, can build the framework of a very solid platform of security on which children can stand as they grow.

And finally, we can actively combat aggressive worldly forces by constant personal involvement with those outside our family who need attention. If our children see us seriously engaged in meeting human needs and especially if we share as many of these experiences with them as possible (this means take little Bobby with you when you take food to a sick person — even if he must sit in the car while you go in), then we can teach them lasting lessons in Christian service that is perhaps nowhere needed more, and neglected, than in large cities which frighten some of us so fiercely.

Fortunate indeed are parents who can take their children with them for a summer to work in a camp for ghetto children. Blessed is the father who can take his little son along when he goes to shovel snow for a neighbor too old to work. These settings provide excellent pulpits for sermons on service to and for Jesus.

A Nice Word for the "Establishment"

There are good establishments and bad ones. Maybe more bad than good. If all have the potential for being demonic, as some say, they don't all use that potential.

I want to congratulate the establishment that planned, coordinated, and conducted a most significant youth convention for the young people of the Mennonite Church. The convention is just over, but I have talked to a number of persons and from all I can gather, the event was a smashing success. By success, I mean many things: fulfilling spiritual objectives, helping youth to have faith in Christ and the church, depth learning on questions youth face, building new convictions, operating within a tight budget, substantial offerings for a significant mission, life-related discussions, commitments to Christ, and rededications. All of this and much more happened, all without any major fiascoes, which is a considerable something in today's world.

I think this is a success for the establishment. You may use any term you like, but it takes what I'll call "establishment" to pull off a convention of the magnitude of the one at Lake Junaluska. Think of the weeks of coordination to get 1,737 persons preregistered, to make travel arrangements, to tighten and retighten the budget, to get the right speakers, Talk-It-Over and seminar leaders committed, to arrange for housing, recreation, counseling, and a dozen etcs.

The "establishment"—that's persons like Art and Nova Smoker, J. J. Hostetler, John and June Yoder, Don Kraybill, Evon Wolfer, Jerry Weaver, Del Glick, Ray Horst, J. Lorne Peachey, and others—deserve credit not so much because they succeeded in running a convention, but because they ran a convention that met young people with Christ where young people are. In less sophisticated words, kids liked it. That is success. The theme "Share Your Christ-You" came through at every turn and young people liked it. That is a programming success for the "establishment."

How did the establishment do it? The first thing to say is that God isn't as antiestablishment as some people are. The leadership team asked for God's help and got it. Hard work was another factor. Finally, the planning team was in touch with youth. They understood the pressure for some harmless forms of the youth culture in music, dress, hairstyles.

What happened? Mostly, a great many youth, besides making immediate personal commitments, have seen several sides of the issues of race, poverty, nationalism, the draft. A comment by J. C. Wenger helps. "It was worth it," he said, "to make the trip just to hear about the plight of the Indians." The evangelism seminar was crowded. So were many others. Some youth said they now have second thoughts about the God and country talk they hear at home.

By Still Waters

"They looked unto him, and were lightened: and their faces were not ashamed" (Ps. 34:5).

Robert E. Speer, on his return to India, said he could pick out the Christians from the light on their faces. G. Campbell Morgan related a story of a girl he knew. She was a factory girl of England. After giving herself to Christ she was walking down the platform of a railroad station, waiting for her train, when a lady of wealth called her from the window of the train and asked, "What makes you look so happy?" Unashamedly the girl told her story. The result of this brief conversation was that the lady was led to seek and find the Savior.

Something happens when we look to the Savior. When we take our eyes off pleasing self to please Christ, we find a new joy which radiates from our faces. The Scripture speaks of the joy which Christ Himself had in fulfilling the Father's will. So joy for us always follows on the heels of obedience. The joy of the Lord is our strength. And those who find this joy in looking to Him cannot contain the joy. It must show on the countenance.

To Enjoy

You walk and see,
Yet do not see
All of nature's rarity.

Observe it!
God made it for you to enjoy!
—Winston J. Martin

That's a good thing to have second thoughts about.
So, three cheers for the establishment which helped all this to happen.

Point of Contact

"Henceforth know we no man after the flesh" (2 Cor. 5:16).

One way we judge others according to the flesh is when we see them as strangers who must meet our standards of race, education, religion, politics, class, or possessions before we can accept and love them. "But," says the apostle, "we no longer judge that way. The love of Christ impels us to judge differently."

Jesus became involved with persons as human beings, persons loved by God. All the barriers and standards of today were present then. Yet His love was so strong it could surmount the deepest and sharpest differences of even a Jew and Samaritan.

So the Spirit of Christ first sees others as human beings, those for whom Christ died and now longs to save. The Christian sees God as Creator of all and therefore he accepts all His creation. He sees the importance of receiving others for what they are; to receive them and then give them what they need and not what they deserve. For finally it is only in receiving others as they are that we really see them. It is only as we love others that we understand them.

Because we set our standards of rejection or acceptance we so often see only the unacceptable and turn away. For the Christian the unacceptable in another is the signal for action and love. The unacceptable is the point of contact.

Jesus received the nonreceiveables. How often this very thing became His point of contact. Christ lived in the creative tension of accepting the unacceptable. "The heathen," He said, "love those who love them." His call is to love even the unlovely, the unacceptable, the rejected.

Finally there is only one way those who are unacceptable, unlovely, and rejected can be won. In the words of J. B. Phillips, "People can only be loved into the kingdom." And those who are unlovely are people who feel unloved and do not love themselves. Those who feel rejected are persons who have rejected themselves. And there is no more painful suffering than pain which comes from the lack of love and acceptance. The Christian accepts the unacceptable, the unlovely, the rejected, then, in order that the unacceptable, the unlovely, the rejected may accept himself and realize the acceptance and love of God. For it is doubtful if anyone can understand the love of God who does not know the love and acceptance of one of God's children. When this happens the one transformed goes forth to accept and love whoever is unacceptable and unloving to him.

The Spirit of Christ we need and must remember in all our work in the world, in the church, and in our families. Remember Jesus saw the unacceptable in another as the signal for action. It was His point of contact. May we make it ours. — D.

Christians in the Arena

Harry J. Cargas of St. Louis, a TV critic and former professional athlete, claims that sports programs on TV "are making a significant contribution to the Great American Crimetime."

Writing in the June 6 issue of America magazine, a national weekly published by the Jesuits, Cargas points out that today's youngsters are absorbing and copying all the meanness and cruelty displayed in sports. "Meanness is meanness," he points out, "whether on 'Gunsmoke' or in the Super Bowl, whether in the NBC studio or in Candlestick Park."

After pointing out things in baseball, basketball, and hockey which illustrate his contention, he stated that "boxing is in no sense respectable. . . . It not only doesn't belong on TV; it ought to be banished from the earth." He described wrestling as "contemptible" and "totally fake." Cargas says that our sport viewing centers around brutality. He concluded by pointing out that "soon it will be time to bring the Christians into the arena."

This is what some have been saying for a number of years. History illustrates that a sports craze is followed by a growing cruelty in sports and then comes persecution of those who irritate society in its sin. The love of seeing cruelty in sports is only one step away from open slaughter of persons with the only excuse for doing so being a difference of religious opinion and a desire for more thrilling and sadistic entertainment.

When people can sit through a movie or a so-called sport such as football, boxing, wrestling, or any other in which one wins by hurting another; when the viewers can watch this without deep inner feelings of reaction and hurt against such doings, we are only one step from throwing Christians into the arena for a release of hostility and final reach for excitement. — D.

The Spirit of the Lord in Japan

By Charles Shenk

In the Church

In the face of "losing" two crucial church leaders (Takio Tanase to Goshen and Hiroshi Kaneko to Ecuador) and the retiring of the elder leader Eiichiro Hatano, the Spirit has raised up capable successors. Masakazu Yamade, the new chairman of the Japan Mennonite Conference executive committee, has directed the year's activities with enthusiasm and good order. At the annual conference session in February 1970 Noboru Aratani, assistant professor of architecture at Hokkaido University, moderated the proceedings and Yoshiaki Tamura, a hatter who is attending Bible school, served as secretary.

One was impressed again at this conference with the increased maturity of our church leaders and their readiness to take initiative formerly assumed by missionaries. Other measures of growth: two new congregations recognized by conference; over 20 new believers added during the year; and substantial increase in giving, which more than replaces the withdrawal of Mennonite Board of Missions subsidy.

In the Congregations

The Spirit has given His blessing in number, group awareness, and vision to two small assemblies which have been developing during the past two or three years. The freshness and spiritual warmth of these groups gives sufficient evidence as to who is at work. One group is in Furano (counted before but now officially recognized) and the other in Tottori in Kushiro. Also noteworthy is the fact that during the year both groups have acquired good land and facilities for their work. Mission Board assistance, without which neither project would be possible, is much appreciated by these brethren.

In Sapporo, the Spirit's action in the life of Reiko Yaguchi brought spiritual deepening to the congregations as they shared in her experience. (Reiko-san died of cancer on April 5, 1970.)

The three congregations in the Ashoro area are feeling a burden for members who have separated themselves from the fellowship. With the Lee Kanagys now as co-workers, there is some concrete evidence that their concern and efforts are being rewarded.

In the Lives of Individuals

Pastor Kimura, after several years of study at Eastern Hokkaido Bible School — with his personal warmth, evangelistic spirit, and commitment to spiritual renewal — has been an instrument of the Spirit's action in the church at Kamishihoro. "The congregation has taken on new life and members are involved in an unprecedented way," reports Ralph Buckwalter.

Brother Ukichi Kondo, young pastor at Shibeecha, has faced many discouragements in his two years of service there resulting from his dealings with two noncooperative but influential members. He was sorely tempted to seek another location. But recently he received the victory and assurance of the Spirit that Shibecha is the Lord's place for him and without reservation rededicated himself to that work.

Charles Shenk has served as a missionary to Japan with Mennonite Board of Missions since 1957 and is currently assisting in the pastoral work at the Tottori congregation in the suburbs of Kushiro.

On a postcard early last September, paper mill engineer Sentaro Oishi wrote: "I'm tired. I want to believe in Jesus Christ. As a child I attended Sunday school. Now I have no courage to open the door of the church. But I want a place of spiritual rest. Please lead me." Another believer in the same mill was contacted who brought Oishi-san to church the next Sunday. He's hardly missed a service since.

In March 1970 Oishi-san was baptized at Tottori. So was Miss Noda, who has a "Spirit's leading" story of her own. At the close of the ceremony, these two announced their plans to be married in June.

Arleta Selzer, "working with young lives (missionary children) in formation process," writes from Hokkaido International School in Sapporo: "I have experienced God's Spirit at work in my heart. He has enabled me to overcome feelings of anger, frustration, and discouragement; to serve as a listener to friends needing someone to talk over problems; to know how to deal with rebellious and misunderstood students and see changes from defiance to cooperation and belonging; to ask forgiveness for my own shortcomings and inconsistencies in daily relationships with students and teachers; and to accept God's forgiveness for my own sins or lack of trust in filling the place He has called me to serve."

Marvin Yoder reports: "Ichikawa-san, of Yuai Church in Sapporo, felt a call to Vietnam service. But his non-Christian father disapproved vigorously. Also, his physical examination revealed a chronic kidney disorder. The possibility seemed dim, but conviction and prayer continued. The father then recalled his own experience in foreign countries during the war and the friends he had made. As he softened because of this, it was also found that Ichikawa's physical problem could be properly treated in Vietnam and he was accepted and sent by Mennonite Central Committee. The Yuai Church keeps informed of his good service and prays faithfully. Now two other young men are seriously interested in joining him in Vietnam or some similar service."

In Special Service Areas

Establishing Christian homes — gaining the knowledge for it and finding a Christian companion with which to begin — is an important problem in the Japan church. The Japan Mennonite Conference asked the Charles Shenks to conduct local studies on the Christian home. This was carried out in six areas last fall with good interest and participation in each place. Another conference-sponsored plan is for a Youth Work Camp this fall, where young people may get acquainted while working and studying together for several days.

Obihiro is reporting church growth through radio response. Hokkaido Radio and Mass Communications Organization (HOREMCO) is using Mennonite funds for a series of TV witnesses this spring. The Hokkaido church is endeavoring to increase its radio support amount.

The Spirit is evidently blessing the Kanekos' work at HCJB, Quito, Ecuador, and rallying good support within the Japan churches. If the trend continues, Yamade-san may soon be able to increase the periodic share of support funds from Japan.

Both graduate and current students of Eastern Hokkaido Bible School continue to serve the church significantly. The number of class hours are cut by nearly half in Takio Tanase's absence, but good interest exists for expanding the program as is possible, not only in Kushiro and Obihiro, but in other areas as well.

Almost all mission personnel are involved in some English teaching and are experiencing varying degrees of satisfaction and excitement. An increasing number of nationals are also teaching, often partly for the income it affords.

The effect of this activity in terms of evangelism is sometimes measurable, often not, but always considered important. Ron Guengerich emphasizes the necessity for the church to work closely with the English teacher in receiving contacts that do come to the church via this service.

The new approach in this program which Marvin Miller and Wesley Richard are about to launch into (completely self-supporting, long-term, university employment following linguistic studies) is unique and commands the interest and support of the church. Ruth and Rhoda Ressler are engaged in a similar approach in Osaka as well. Their deep conviction and commitment to this way is certainly more evidence of the Spirit's action.

The Spirit has also been laying burdens on the hearts of local congregations and leaders for outreach in their own areas. Lee Kanagy writes of the "joy of making new contacts in our neighborhood, and going along with the pastor on two circuits of evangelism beyond our present borders." Pastor Ishimoto has been pushing at these "borders" for some time and with the missionary's help is able to be more mobile in this activity again.

Where and how the Spirit will make Himself felt among us is not known, but that He will continue to be upon us is not doubted. This is the joy and excitement of existing for the cause of the gospel.

History Says

Arnold Toynbee, in his ten-volume history of civilization, says that you can measure civilization by studying the responses of the people of history to the great challenges they have had to face; that history is only the record of how they faced one crisis after another. We live in the most challenging era of history, yet man's efforts and ambitions are channeled into physical progress much more than into spiritual progress. World leadership comes from national character, which in turn, inspires trust and confidence on the part of other peoples. When national character deteriorates, leadership wanes.
A Senator's Message to Evangelicals

By Mark Hatfield

This commencement address was presented by Senator Mark Hatfield at Fuller Theological Seminary, Pasadena, California, on June 2. We commend it to our constituency for its timely message to all evangelical Christians. Because of its length, some passages have been omitted.

— Delton Franz, MCC Peace Section Washington Office

During the past few weeks I have received some of the most remarkable and surprising, and also disturbing mail of my entire life. Much of this mail represents a theological silent majority in our land who wrap their Bibles in the American flag; who believe that conservative politics is the necessary by-product of orthodox Christianity; who equate patriotism with the belief in national self-righteousness; and who regard political dissent as a mark of infidelity to the faith.

Letters from these people are the most difficult for me to answer. For they are calling into question the legitimacy of my Christian beliefs on the basis of my political positions.

Extend Responsibility

I believe the evangelical community has as its most urgent task the developing of a responsible social and political ethic that takes with equal seriousness the truth of Christ's life and God's revelation of Himself to man as well as the critical state of our world's social and political institutions.

When Fuller Theological Seminary was founded some twenty-three years ago, it was the hope of its founders that it would provide the stimulus for a renewed and freshly articulated theological apologetic for orthodox Christianity. At that time, conservative Protestantism was caught between the hyperfundamentalists of the theological right and the social gospel liberals of the theological left. Fuller Seminary was founded with the intention of regaining credibility for that crucial middle ground of classical theological conservatism—a conservatism which recognized the responsibility of those who confess the name of Christ to serve their fellowman as instruments of God's reconciliation in the world.

Your seminary has gone beyond the essentially negative and defensive psyche that characterized much of the fundamentalist movement of a bygone era. It has, indeed, rearticulated a positive defense for the revolutionist and supranaturalist basis of the Christian faith. Having achieved this task, it still has some unfinished business—most notable of which is its obligation to demonstrate the implications of that reconciliation between man and his fellowman.

May I suggest that perhaps your task will be to provide social and ethical leadership for the evangelical community in much the same way as you have already provided much of the intellectual leadership for our community.

Evangelicals have lost sight of the fact that the great issues being debated today are no longer those pertaining to organic evolution. Now they are those pertaining to social revolution. We can no longer afford the supposed luxury of social withdrawal, but must find viable means to relate the good news to the turmoil of our era.

Just because many theological liberals have upset the balance between dogma and ethics in one direction is no reason for us as evangelicals to upset it in the other. Insofar as we preach only half of the gospel, we are no less heretical than those who preach only the other half.

I grant, of course, that the evangelical emphasis on man as sinner puts limitations upon what he can hope for in the transformation of society. But let us not forget that Christ came to transform mankind and promised not only a new heaven, but a new earth as well.

Christ gives us the taste of new wine and calls upon us to be His partners in reconciling the entire creation back unto the glory of God the Father. While the fact of the Fall places limitations on all human existence, the fact of redemption and resurrection provides new vistas and possibilities for all human existence.

The Nature of the Presidential Office

Second, we must reevaluate the faith we have placed as a people in the office of the presidency. As our democracy has evolved in a way that has centered increasing power and influence into the hands of the chief executive, we have also intensified the trust, confidence, and faith that we place in whoever holds that office. As evangelicals, it seems, we should be particularly sensitive to the dangers presented by such an all-encompassing trust.
It is not unusual for us to assume that the president is all-powerful, all-knowing, and the chief provider for our welfare. We Americans hesitate to question his judgment in military and diplomatic affairs; we are encouraged by his condemnation of those who displease us; we blame him if our pocketbooks are empty and praise him if they are full.

We find comfort in his pledges to protect us from our enemies both within and without our land, and believe he has a certain sanctity which is somehow defined by those suspect citizens who question his leadership.

It is not about any particular president, but about the nature of the office of the presidency in our day that I am speaking. Evangelicals should be sensitive to the potential of idolatry that exists when such a large part of one's security and trust is placed upon the shoulders of one man. We should remind ourselves that our theological understanding of sin means that excessive power resting with one person will likely be used for self-serving and self-justifying purposes. Power shared by many—the premise of a democratic system—will more often be exercised with justice and wisdom.

Collective Guilt

Third, evangelicals must regain sensitivity to the corporate nature of human life—we must become as sensitive to the issues of social morality as well as to the issues of private morality. We must learn to repent of and respond to collective guilt as well as individual guilt. This becomes increasingly important as the structures of life become more interdependent and interrelated. An ethic which deals solely with personal mores is singularly inadequate if it fails to deal with war, poverty, and racial antagonism as well.

If we begin to rethink some of our traditional postures in the areas of social ethics, we can then begin to respond creatively to the social and political crises facing our nation and our world today—a world divided over wars in Southeast Asia and the Near East—a world divided over drastically differing standards of living and economic attainment—a world divided by race and tribe—a world divided by ideology—and a world divided by the gaps between young and old.

Surely the gospel of reconciliation has something to say to the divisions which characterize life in the modern world. Surely the Christ who befriended the Samaritan woman at the well, who cared for the sick, who fed the hungry, and who blessed the children—surely this Christ has something to say to us in our world of today.

Those of you who have read the recent Harper's Magazine article on the My Lai massacre will be forced to ask some difficult questions. Here we have reports of Americans bayoneting infant children as they suck at the breasts of their dead mothers.

What relation do kill ratios have to our lip service about the value and integrity of human life?

I believe that it is morally indefensible that our involvement in Southeast Asia should be justified on the basis of national pride or to avoid national humiliation. The more we do so, the less we have to be proud about. A nation that can turn from its past ways, admit its error, and truly seek a new path—that nation can discover a true greatness of spirit.

I can understand that others sharing the same convictions may come to different conclusions than do I. But I cannot understand how a Christian community can abide these evils without at least asking the questions which need to be asked, and without at least coming to some rudimentary and tentative responses to these questions.

In the midst of our contemporary cultural upheaval and social turmoil, evangelicals should sense with new relevance how the good news enables both personal and corporate reconciliation. We must realize what we have ignored for so much of our past—that the witness of this life is never credible unless it has also embarked on an outward journey, on mission, and given itself in love to the hurt and pain of the world in order to bring God's peace and His new creation.

There are many ways in which you may choose to express your ministry in the years ahead with tasks and calls impossible to predict which will come upon you. But in them all, I would hope that you would neither feel compelled to be a biblical nationalist or a political messiah. Rather, I hope you will apply the truth of our faith to bring peace to people, to our land, to our world. I trust that you will be an apostolic peacemaker.

Dark and Light

Dark, slate-blue clouds are churning up the dawning, gray-blue sky.
And new-white, blue-white snow
Shrouds sloping fields, and distant hills with woods all indigo.
Atop the sentinel poplar sways a blue-black crow.

But while I gaze,
A touch of pink
Begins to change the monochrome:
Faint light illuminates the dark, presaging dazzling day.

And thus does touch of faith bring light,
remove dark mountains from my soul.

When Is a Church Not a Cathedral?

By Katie Funk Wiebe

Some time ago I mentioned to a friend that I thought I would find it difficult to contribute to some of the larger church building programs. Later, on second thought, I was almost ready to take back my rash statement.

After all, as long as the church is committed to institutional life, it is committed to buildings, budgets, and programs. It needs facilities to carry on its work. To say that God is limited by an institution and a building is to deny His power.

I thought of the spiritual home many church buildings have become to hundreds of seekers and, also, how the act of building a house of worship has frequently unified and strengthened a congregation. There are many reasons for promoting the building of structures.

Yet, whenever I travel into a new community, I look at church edifices—the sprawling ranch-type, the kind that stand solid and reassuring like the rock of Gibraltar, the kind that looks like a bird poised for flight, the kind that looks like a Howard Johnson restaurant, or maybe even an architect’s joke.

I look, and I look again, and I think of what evangelical Protestants have said about the large, ornate cathedrals dotting Europe which shelter an empty spirituality. Is a church less a cathedral if it does not have Gothic architecture and stained-glass windows? What do church buildings reflect about the life style of the congregations which move in and out of their doors and pay for their upkeep?

I have talked to friends about my problem regarding large, prosperous-looking church buildings. Some see it as a problem; others point to Solomon’s temple which was outstanding for its luxuriant beauty. God likes beauty, they say, and beauty promotes worship. They don’t think God would be pleased if we worshiped Him in a building less elaborate than our homes.

Or, they say, the luxury items (that which gives the building the extra flourish) frequently didn’t cost the church budget a cent. One or two members dug into their own pockets to make the items available, so no one can complain about being forced to pay for them. The donations of the rank-and-file Christian still go toward “saving the lost.”

The question I don’t get answered is this: In a period when the world is struggling with poverty issues on a mass scale, with whom does the church identify when it builds expansively and lavishly?

Christ taught voluntary Christian simplicity, yet I wonder whether some preachers find it hard to advocate simple living, sacrifice, even fasting, in churches where everything is soft, where the body wants softness, where stainless steel kitchens, hot food counters and salad centers, bridal rooms and the like cater to every desire.

My earlier statement arose in part out of a growing belief that the ethics of a secular society are permeating the life of the Christian community and becoming visible in its church structures. American ethics spell out very clearly that personal success is rated by the individual’s economic and social success. An underlying belief is that anyone who works hard enough can lift himself out of his hole, whether it is due to poverty or low social standing.

This concept has been unconsciously transferred to the church. In some instances success of a church is determined by the size and efficiency of its plant and how its program attracts people. Because people want to be distinguished by the church they belong to, it is not unusual for some, as they climb the ladder of economic success, to switch to churches with more prestige.

I wish it were possible to prove scientifically that large luxuriant buildings attract non-Christians and become centers of salvation. It seems more accurate to say that the finer the church building we construct, the more protective we become of it, and the more we expect the people who attend to meet our standard of dress and appearance before we fully accept them.

Furthermore, it seems to me that the more elaborate we build our facilities, the more we tend to think of them as existing exclusively for our own use, rather than for people outside the church who have no claim to them other than that they are human beings and that we in the church profess to want to win them to Christ. The concept of the church as a sanctuary from the storms of life, both figuratively and literally has been lost. What church will open its doors wide, say to young people, as a place to gather?

There is nothing wrong with big buildings, nor is poverty an ideal to strive for, nor should shoddy or ugly construction be tolerated. The problem to me is whether the luxuriousness of the buildings suffocates concern for people for whom the facilities were built. When this happens to us, the people in Europe may have reason to talk about our cathedrals.
"Happening in Florida"

By J. Mark Stauffer

My doctor (MD) friend lives in a wheelchair; his wife (his second) says, "When you marry a cripple, you also become a cripple because of your complete and constant identification with him."

When he was in medical services, he was married and the father of two children. Suddenly, he became victim of the dread disease of polio. He lay helpless and paralyzed on his hospital bed. In this condition and at this time, his wife came to his bed and informed him that she was leaving him; she did!

The doctor felt alone—fearfully alone in the world! To begin with, he was not a Christian believer at that time. He sent his children back to his parents. He struggled to continue his medical pursuits, even to the extent of strapping himself to a vertical board so as to get up to his worktable.

He met his present wife, a registered nurse with a specialty in physical therapy, in a New York City hospital. Following a number of years of service in three different university medical centers, they moved to northwest Florida. They built a lovely home overlooking an inland lake. A dedicated Christian couple—they wanted to witness to their friends and neighbors of their belief in Jesus Christ. They asked if we could come to Florida and have a "service of dedication for their new house." We also talked of having a service of holy communion at the close of the dedication.

On the evening of June 16, the guests began to arrive; they were a cosmopolitan group, to be sure. Many came from Eglin Air Force Base nearby, one of the country's largest. A number of young widows were present. I talked at length with a young woman whose husband had recently returned from Vietnam; he was still flying supplies to that war-torn land. She was a German banker who had fled Hitler; she worked in South America before coming to this country. The experiences deriving from Nazi Germany had caused her to lose faith in her native country and in people in general. But she was there and seemed hungry for the love of God and His children.

The communion service was most reverent and impressive; love and Christian empathy seemed to pervade the air. The cupped hands that reached out for the bread and cup seemed like penitents awaiting God's grace. Jesus Christ was in our midst and His Spirit was mightily at work. I may not have approved or understood everything, but to be sure, it was God's work and hour and "who was I that I could withstand God" (Acts 11:17)?

The morning we left Florida, seven of us gathered at the breakfast table for a home service of healing. The doctor read from James 5; we prayed together, laid hands on the suffering one, and anointed her with oil for God's healing in the name of His Son.

Since we have been home, we have gotten two letters and two telephone calls attempting to describe what God is doing in that dedicated house and home. My doctor friend's house has become a house of prayer, Bible study, spiritual counsel, and fellowship to young and older persons—a place where the gifts of the Spirit have become manifest. Our friends are overwhelmed at what God has wrought and the end is not yet!

To Mennonites, the idea of a new house dedication or blessing may be novel; I had only one previous experience, when I asked to dedicate the house of a Baptist doctor friend. We ought to consider this kind of service as a part of our stewardship.

It just might be that this is prophetic of "what is to come" for the church. Could God be leading us to dedicate our homes for the glory of His name and the loving, evangelical outreach to our friends and neighbors? Might He be calling us to open up our homes—to make them centers of Bible study and prayer—to transform them into intersections of love and listening concern for the tired, the lonely, and the distressed? Most of all, I know He wants our homes to be places where lost, seeking people are introduced to Jesus Christ. Let's dedicate our homes; they make good, economical churches and if Christian love be found there, our seeking, searching friends and neighbors will meet us there much more readily than at our larger, more formal places of worship. What is now happening in Florida ought to be happening in our homes, communities, and churches; may God hasten the day!

It costs more now to amuse a child than it did to educate his father.—Carl Yoder.

It's quite a question what today's younger generation will be able to tell their children they had to do without.—Carl Yoder.

What Are My Parents Really Saying?  By Robert L. Zuhl

I know you are talking . . . words . . . words, but I see more than I hear. What do the words mean? What’s that you say . . . ?

Why don’t you talk to us more? You are so quiet. You never tell us your problems. We want to help you.

That’s a laugh. Remember when I started to tell you about the hard time I was having in math? You immediately jumped on me for goofing off too much. I wanted help but you were tuned in for criticism, not conversation. I could tell by your attitude that this was “sermon” night. I dropped it. I was bugged the other night. Dad asked me what was wrong, but he didn’t wait for an answer. He was worked up about the car needing repairs, so I kept quiet.

I don’t hear you and Dad talking. You were upset about Dad watching the ball game last night and not taking you to the store. Did you tell him? You talk about moodiness and I notice that you get quiet when things get to you. I’ve noticed a loud silence when you get peeved.

When would you suggest I talk? Supper, when everyone is eating? Devotions are hurried . . . when we have them. Dad cannot make it to his chair quick enough and you want to get the dishes washed. The TV is always on, or we are running off to church or some kind of meeting.

I’m talking . . . in fact I scream inside . . . but no one listens. Please stand still long enough to show me that you really care and want to hear me.

There you go again . . .

Keep yourself pure and find a wonderful mate in life. God wants you to have a happy marriage.

Are you and Mom really happy? You only talk about problems and what the other one should or should not be doing. The only time you seem to enjoy being together is when we have company. Do you ever put your arms around Mom and kiss her like you meant it? Would you marry Mom again if you had the opportunity? I get the impression that marriage is part of life you endure as a responsibility. I never hear a compliment or an expression of admiration between you. I hear a lot of other things that are far from this.

Is marriage all you say it is? I know all that stuff about sharing life . . . working together, etc., but does it have to get dull and become a drag? I wish you and Mom were more pleased with each other. I would feel more excited about reserving myself for the wonderful venture you call marriage.

Yes . . . I’ve heard it over and over again . . .

Pray about it. The Lord will help you. The most important decision in your life is to give yourself to Christ, and put Him first in your life.

Is Christ first . . . really first . . . in your life. Dad? We pray when we find time. Anyone could recite the ritual of thanks before our meals. My Catholic friends have a rosary to help them go over the same prayer. We do it without one.

I don’t remember you personally telling me that you loved Christ. It is more a patriotic duty than a privilege and delight. You’ve never told me about your telling others about Christ. Have you? If He is so wonderful, why not share Him with others? Does Christ speak to you?

It seems that going to church is more of a duty than an enjoyment. I’ve heard you grumble and complain about long services . . . board meetings . . . people . . . and responsibilities. I don’t remember when I have seen you excited about Christ. I wonder if He is as real to you as you say He is. Many people are nice and good without professing to be Christians. What is different about our lives? Do you just follow a belief because of your parents? I know Christ should be first, but saying it doesn’t make it happen.

I know it wasn’t true, but what was I to do?

Yes . . . I hear you . . .

Always tell the truth regardless of the consequences. The Bible says—“Thou shalt not bear false witness.” People who lie cannot be trusted.

OK . . . but what about telling the pastor he had a good sermon and then griping about how dull he was, on the way home? Remember when the meal check at the restaurant was added wrong and you saved a dollar? I remember the time at the zoo when the ticket lady thought my brother was under twelve and you saved another dollar. I haven’t forgotten the ball game we enjoyed when you called in sick at work. When is a person to be honest? Are lies all right if they are for good? What are “white lies”?

I’m not complaining. I’m not asking that you be perfect. I only wish you could listen to what you are saying, and see how you measure up.

Don’t put on a mask for my benefit. If it is good for me, then why not for you? Possibly you are working on these things too. I wish I knew. Maybe we could help each other.

Let's Get Personal

By Donald E. Kraybill

Perhaps there will be another decade of living things — children and green grass, yellow daisies and butterflies, lightning bugs and lollipops — a time when people enjoy the beautiful trivialities of life. Or perhaps it will be a decade of dirtier air and littered asphalt, terrorist street gangs and civil disorder, a time of mental and physical distress, of spiritual degeneration — a decade when people fear to sit in their parks, ride their buses, or walk alone on their own streets.

My mind is saturated with the problems of the inner city. "Who am I; what can I do?" The words of Socrates suggest a beginning: "He that would move the world must first move himself." In Chicago I've discovered that change takes place through personal contact. Also, that love demands personal initiative and action. When Barbra Streisand sings, "People who need people are the luckiest people in the world," it reinforces my realization that there are no satisfying substitutes for human relationships.

When the concept of relating to people on a one-to-one basis was initiated in the city it was considered too idealistic, unrealistic, or just plain crazy. Its proponents were written off as having shortsighted goals. "How do we reach the masses?" seemed to be the priority issue. Then I thought how Jesus spent so much time and energy to train a mere twelve men. Certainly He preached to the multitudes, but He was person-oriented. We become concerned about clarifying theology, planning attractive programs, and doing the paper work to perpetuate the "system" to the extent that we often fail to reach the individual. Man's identity is being crushed in the cogs of organization.

Organization in itself is not wrong, if it is a vehicle for ultimate good, but so often we become snared in its tentacles. What about the church? Christ never got hung up with institutionalism. I believe what really counts are the meaningful relationships that we build where we are communicating the love of Christ. My life is sharing and involvement on a one-to-one basis in the inner city — and it works!

Perhaps there will be another decade of living things — children and green grass, yellow daisies and butterflies — if each one does his part.

"As I See It"

Readers are urged to submit material on any issue for this column. Maximum of 400 words.

As I see it the Mennonite Church has worked to stamp out prejudice against members of other races and ethnic groups, but has allowed scorn and hard-shelled prejudice to develop and prosper against those brethren who seeking deeper spiritual life and discipleship among us have not found it. Because of official parliamentary proceedings and roadblocks, spiritual apathy, and intolerance these brethren have been forced to shake off the dust of their feet against us as a witness, and depart to seek and find a friendly climatic environment in which to be faithful and practice obedience to God and His Word.

These brethren have been ridiculed, discussed, and dismissed as oddities in our Sunday school discussions, before the young people of the church, establishing a warped and prejudiced view for them. Can God place His stamp of approval on these activities on our part? Will God deal less harshly with us because we have overcome racial intolerance, but have fostered and enjoyed prejudice against the elect of our own spiritual household in our hearts?

What the Mennonite Church needs is to be challenged not to intolerance and prejudice by our religious cousins, but to greater discipleship and faithfulness. A quick review of religious history will show that almost all religious reformers and reformation groups were forced to separate existence because of the parent group's apathy. Remember the Waldenses, John Wycliffe, John Huss, Martin Luther, Conrad Grebel, Menno Simons, the Anabaptists, Charles and John Wesley, D. L. Moody, and others. We need to be careful lest the testimony of our cousins through their lives and faithfulness stand as a witness against us on the great day of judgment.

Wit and Wisdom

Socrates once said: "Could I climb to the highest place in Athens, I would lift my voice and proclaim: 'Fellow citizens, why do you turn and scrape every stone to gather wealth, and take so little care of your children to whom one day you must relinquish it all?"

Some people have read so much about the harmful effects of smoking that they have decided to give up reading.

The art of being a good life mate is to make molehills out of domestic mountains.

He who is content to be merely an observer forfeits his right to be a critic.

The Mennonite attitude toward war and military service rests deeply in their obedience to the Jesus' way of life as one of love and reconciliation. A corollary conviction is that this way of life includes separation from the evils of the world, a life conformed to Christ and nonconformed to the patterns of violence and the instruments of carnal warfare. Conscientious objection to evil, to war and militarism is one of the characteristics of a dynamic nonconformity.

The pattern of conscientious objection familiar to modern Mennonites emerged comparatively recently in modern history. With the rise of democratic governments, armies were expanded by the use of various conscription techniques. Democracy and conscription grew up together although there was constant tension between them. The conscientious objector was and is a citizen who for reasons of conscience could not become part of an organization bent on killing—the military. He refuses to serve the military, not out of an irresponsible citizenship, but rather to suggest an alternate and better way of solving human problems.

Since the first conscript armies of the eighteenth century, the character of warfare has changed enormously. In the United States before 1940 the military constituted a very small percentage of the population. Military action consumed an even smaller part of the time in service. Military concerns involved only a small sector of political and economic life. An effective and useful witness against war was to refuse to serve in the military.

Now, however, there are over 3,000,000 Americans in the Armed Forces. Nearly 40 million living American males have served in the Armed Forces. Compulsory service is sometimes extended for draftees to five or six years. Yet in spite of expanded armies fewer and fewer persons are involved in actual combat. War has become a technique fought with tanks, planes, flamethrowers, napalm plus bombs, and chemicals, to kill unseen enemies. War is no longer the playing of the generals nor even of the technologists but of an entire society which provides the know-how and the wherewithal to wage war. We live in an age when war is total; it involves the economic, scientific, political, ideological, educational, and religious resources of the entire society. In the United States we live in what Fred Cook calls a "warfare state" where it is nearly impossible to escape the effects and impact of war.

In such a situation is there any validity to conscientious objection to military service? Or are there other forms of conscientious objection which will symbolically witness to the way of Christ and against the way of war?

Donald Kaufman does not treat the entire problem of militarism, the warfare state, or even conscientious objection. He poses the fundamental question posed by the Pharisees to Jesus in Matthew 22 and then deals with one specific issue—the question of war taxes.

Kaufman has mastered a vast amount of material regarding the history of taxation, the biblical passages involving the tax question, and the arguments and practices of those who do not pay war taxes. Howard Charles of Goshen Biblical Seminary writes a stimulating introduction to the volume. A valuable dimension of this book is the comprehensive bibliography which includes an excellent compilation of periodical articles.

Beginning with the basic issue, Kaufman explores the meaning of taxation in the biblical world. There taxes upheld a vast religious establishment as well as the civil authorities. In the "ancient city," however, it was difficult to distinguish the religious from the civil. For the king was more than a political leader. Caesar was worshiped. Caesar claimed to be lord. Exorbitant taxation was rarely protested save by the Jews who objected to taxes which implied that Caesar was Lord rather than Yahweh.

It is this context which make so difficult the exegesis of biblical passages involving political structures. Kaufman effectively interprets Matthew 17:24-27, Mark 12, Romans 13, and 1 Peter 2. Perhaps the crucial insight of this analysis is that both Jesus and the New Testament writers suggest principles and perimeters, rather than legal dicta with fixed answers in which and by which Christians make decisions. Government and taxes can be good and bad, depending on purposes and motives for taxation. Payment of taxes can be for conscience' sake and nonpayment of taxes can be for conscience' sake.

Arguments against paying war taxes are less well known than arguments for paying war taxes. But arguments against paying war taxes are the same as arguments for not participating in the military. For Christians, these arguments rest on obedience to God rather than man, on the commitment to love rather than hate, on the duty to give rather than to take, on supporting that which makes peace and opposing that which hurts, kills, and destroys.

There have always been tax resisters. There have always been Christians who for conscience' sake have refused to pay certain taxes. Early Christians refused to pay compulsory taxes to Caesar's pagan temples. Medieval monks reduced their income so they would not have to pay taxes to evil kings. The radical sectarians, including some of the early Anabaptists, felt taxes were a moral issue, and that some were not to be paid. The Hutterites criticized their fellow Anabaptists for paying war taxes even though they refused to bear arms. The early Quakers, through William Penn, told the queen of England that their conscience would not allow "a tribute to carry on any war, nor ought true Christians to pay it." The Mennonites in Eastern Pennsylvania split during the Revolutionary War, one reason being the issue of war taxes. They joined, however, with their Dunkard neighbors to petition the Pennsylvania Assembly stating, "We find no freedom in giving, or doing, or assisting in any thing by which men's lives are destroyed or hurt."

Since then, Mennonites have generally paid war taxes. They even hired substitute soldiers so they would not need to fight during the Civil War. However, Mennonites were clear in opposing any voluntary campaigns to sell and buy war bonds. In recent years the war tax question has become more alive in the brotherhood. When President Lyndon Johnson said the telephone excise tax and the Income Surtax were necessary to fight the war in Vietnam, the mask on taxes was removed. Thus some taxes are clearly designated to fight a war without having to analyze the allocations of the national budget.

Donald Kaufman methodically and analytically forces the reader to confront the question, "Can I pray for peace and pay for war?" What really belongs to Caesar? If one believes in the stewardship of money, is the use of money for war good stewardship? Money can destroy life. Money through taxes is without a doubt "the central vital nerve of the military Leviathan." What then do we do with Pastor John Franz who during World War I told his Montana community, "Using our money to make it possible for others to be killed would be just as wrong as going in the army and killing a man ourselves?"

What Belongs to Caesar? introduces a profound ethical question for the Christian church. More study will be necessary by each church agency. It will be easy to "let the sleeping dog lie." But no one concerned about the evil of war and how to love the enemy can afford to ignore this book.

The genius of this little volume of 97 pages is that it does not clutter the arguments over war taxes by focusing on the anxieties of the present moment. Rather Larry Richards speaks to the questions which youth ask about God, the Christian faith, the Bible, and ethical standards. The doubts of a young person are a natural reaction as he thinks seriously about life and its meaning. It's all in the process of breaking out of a secondhand, childhood type of belief and growing into a mature faith of one's own.

Larry Richards discusses the questions in honest fashion, options are offered, and answers are put in experiential terms. The young reader is helped to make up his own mind and bring his own faith into focus. In a theologically sound, appealing, and thoughtful manner, this booklet helps the reader to consider the big issues which really matter in life's spiritual pilgrimage.

An increase in applications for conscientious objector status has been noted around the country since the U.S. Supreme Court ruling of June 15 which broadened the conscientious objector status for other than religious convictions.

The expected increase in conscientious objector status applications was revealed in a nationwide survey by Scripps-Howard newspapers of state and local draft officials, which also showed that responses differ in larger metropolitan areas from those in the inner city and small towns.

In Cleveland, three boards having large registation of men with college deferments reported a 50 percent increase in requests for conscientious objector application forms since the Supreme Court ruling.

"Most of those who apply know exactly what form to ask for and obviously are well informed about the procedures," a Cleveland draft board clerk said.

However, the situation was quite different at a draft board office serving Cleveland ghetto neighborhoods, where no increase was reported. "We've never had any appreciable number of registrants seeking conscientious objector deferments anyhow," a spokesman said.

"Compelling" and "charismatic" national leadership is the missing factor in current efforts to lure young people away from the drug scene, according to Dr. Donald B. Louria.

The chairman of the department of public health and preventative medicine, New Jersey College of Medicine and Dentistry, cited Earth Day as an example of the lack of leadership.

Dr. Louria called Earth Day "the most encouraging thing" that happened on the drug scene and observed that it "came and went without a single national leader speaking out."

"I'm not knocking the president," he added, "but certain past presidents would have taken to television to say, 'This is great. Keep it up.'

"Most of us recognize that leaders must take this kind of initiative. Those of us on the drug scene hoped Earth Day would involve the young. But it failed, it went down the drain with Cambodia."

Adoption of a guaranteed annual income of $5,500 per family of four would move the U.S. down the road toward "the fulfillment of the promises of our forefathers," the national mission executive of the United Church of Christ said.

Dr. Howard E. Spragg, executive vice-president of the United Board of Homeland Ministries, addressed the biennial conference of the National Welfare Rights Organization (NWRO).

The $5,500 minimum income, he said, would be one way to shift national priorities from projects "which promote death to those which promote life." Dr. Spragg's board had formally supported the income figure he mentioned.

He declared that the high proportion of the national budget spent on the military is "insane," adding that it is past time "all of us had the courage to say so."

The State of Massachusetts has petitioned the U.S. Supreme Court to declare the Vietnam War unconstitutional and to order the Pentagon to stop fighting it.

The suit has been awaited since April when the Massachusetts Legislature passed a law stating that the state's inhabitants need not fight abroad unless Congress declared war. Attorney General Robert E. Quinn was instructed to file a complaint directly to the high court.

Although considered by some experts as more a symbolic protest than a serious legal challenge to the administration, the brief argued that the Supreme Court "must take jurisdiction" over the case and would be shirking its duty if it refused.

A United Methodist editor has accused some U.S. Christians of worshiping "our American system of government more than they do the God of Jesus Christ."

Such identification of the Christian religion with America, according to Spurgeon M. Dunnam, editor of The Texas Methodist, is wrong both from constitutional and biblical standpoints.

"No loyal American can properly say "Ours is a Christian nation,"" he asserted, "for if true, this would be a violation of the U.S. Constitution.

"What we can and should do as Christians, who are also loyal citizens, is to exert influence of our faith on the government so that its policies will be as nearly in conformity with the Christian faith as is possible."

Mr. Dunnam cited the scriptural passage, "Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's," as one example from the Bible that "the Christian's first loyalty is to God."

Noting that when a person allirms Christianity he literally recognizes that his life belongs to God, he added:

"When a man offers his most precious possession — his life — to Caesar 'without question,' he may be acting as a patriot, but not as a Christian. A Christian must always ask, 'Is it right?' and 'Is this what God would have me do?'"

A federal judge has rejected a West Point graduate's petition for discharge, ruling that his is a "selective" conscientious objector and thus does not object to all wars.

U.S. District Court Judge Alexander Harvey II said that if he granted First Lt. Louis P. Font's petition the way would be open for further "selective" objections to types of weapons used in wars, "selective" opposition to taxes, and "selective" law-breaking.

Lt. Font, 23, of Kansas City, Kan., and a 1965 West Point honors graduate, was "too candid and too honest," the judge said.

Carl McIntire's effort to maintain control of his Cape May, N.J., based Shelton College is running into heavy flack. Vice-President and academic dean Richard E. Coulter was fired this spring when it developed during the hearings on Shelton's degree-granting capacities, that none of the three degrees Coulter claimed he had were bona fide.

McIntire claimed he was taken in by Coulter, who was previously assistant pastor at McIntire's Bible Presbyterian Church in Collingswood, N.J.
Aurora Associates Project Curtailed

Aurora Associates in Araguacema, Brazil, has reduced its ranching operations and all but discontinued its slaughter and retail-wholesale meat business in this isolated area of north-central Brazil. Aurora Associates was organized in Brazil in 1965 as a non-profit corporation under the initiative and leadership of C. L. Graber, Goshen, Ind., and Richard Kissell, Hollsopple, Pa.

In 1965 a 20,000-acre ranch along with buildings and facilities for a slaughterhouse and meat-packing operation was purchased approximately five miles from the town of Araguacema. The project was initiated to provide economic assistance and a Christian witness to the local people. All earnings were to accrue to the development of a philanthropic program and to support mission efforts in the area. It was also hoped that through just and fair business practices this project would offer a testimony in Christian business ethics. The person who entered the project had a sense of missionary calling to serve the total needs of man.

Much personal energy and sacrifice was invested in this program during the past five years. Unfortunately, some of the early objectives for the Aurora Associates program have not been realized. More recently it became necessary to modify the program. Aurora Associates faced several obstacles to continuing its assistance program.

1. When the Aurora project was begun, there was a degree of assurance that the Brazilian government would make tax funds available to provide a major portion of the capital necessary for the project. The Brazilian government is interested in economic and agricultural development of North Brazil, and had provisions for use of certain tax funds in projects similar to Aurora. Aurora Associates, however, did not receive the expected government funds.

2. Transportation problems also contributed to the difficulty of making the venture economically viable. The location of the ranch and packing plant in relation to the larger consumer market in South Brazil presented a serious disadvantage.

3. It became increasingly clear that it is very difficult to administer a business in Brazil as a profitable operation and at the same time not follow the ethically compromising business practices of competitors.

4. The problems of business and personnel management in another culture have also interfered with the economic success of the project.

The Aurora organization has retained some of its equipment, including meat-packing equipment, in the event that this method of processing and marketing beef becomes feasible in the future. Most of the local Brazilian employees have been released. A few Brazilians, however, have been retained for the ranching operation being managed by Byron Hertzler.

During 1965-69, a number of persons carried short-term assignments in the Aurora program — mostly young men in alternate service. All of these persons have completed their service term. Richard Kissell and family returned to the United States in 1969, after having served in the program from the start. Larry Eisenbeis and family began a self-support ranching and farming operation in the Araguacema community at the time the slaughterhouse operation was discontinued. Byron Hertzler and family are the only North American personnel who remain as resident employees of Aurora Associates at the Araguacema ranch.

The Aurora Associates program has been administered independently by the executive officers of Aurora Associates and the field management personnel appointed by them. Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, has received endowment funds designated for this project, but no contributed funds for Mission Board program have been used in the Aurora Associates project, except on an advance or loan basis. Provision has been made for the repayment of these loans over an agreed period of time.

Mennonite Board of Missions also served the Aurora Associates organization by recruiting and appointing persons to work in Brazil as Overseas Mission Associates. Full financial responsibility for the maintenance of Aurora Associates personnel in Brazil has been assumed by the Aurora Associates organization.

The future of the Aurora program in Araguacema, Brazil, is uncertain. While the original objectives and plans for the project have not been met, the need and concern for a total ministry to north-central Brazil remains.

Black and White Work Together

The countryside around the rural town of Macon, Mississippi, is witnessing some unusual activity this summer. Black farmers, in field after field, are loading hay together behind a John Deere baler, and lush crops of cotton, beans, and corn are being tilled by heavy farm machinery — machinery big enough to till the Mississippi Black Belt soil way down deep.

The hub of all this activity is a new implement cooperative organized under the name of Prairie Cooperative Associates. Financed to the tune of $13,000 from loans made by farmers and businessmen from the Mennonite Church, the cooperative is composed of twelve black farmers who own farms of between 40 and 140 acres.

In a different setting, farms of such sizes might seem to insure healthy incomes. In Noxubee County, however, this is not always the case, especially in the black community. Very often, black farmers simply cannot afford to purchase the kind of machinery which makes successful farming possible. Noxubee County is one of the poorest spots in the United States. Seventy-two percent of the population is Negro, and approximately fifty percent of the families live on less than $1,000 per year.

The cooperative was chartered on May 4, 1970, almost exactly two years after the Conservative Mennonite Board of Missions began working on the project with the local community action agency and the Magnolia Mennonite congregation of Macon. During those two years, attempts were made to finance the co-op through FHA, but in the words of its president, Joseph Wayne, "We were always too poor or too old or too sickly or too small. . . ." This spring it was decided to secure loans through the church.

To date, the cooperative has operated quite successfully, with services rendered on nearly forty farms, much of this being custom work. It is being used as a base for beginning other projects, such as operation of a service station, assembling of silage wagons, and initiating other small businesses.

The cooperative was conceived by several dreamers, chief among them being Otts
Upton, community action agency director and committed Christian; Art Swartz, co-op manager; Elmer Mast, local Mennonite farmer; and Milton Otto, chairman of Agri-Business Mission Associates of the Conservative Conference. White and black are working together in making the dreams reality, and those involved have high hopes that the project can help point the way toward transcending the paternalism and suspicion which have so often marred American interracial relationships.

The present cooperative, significant as it is, is only the first of the projects envisioned for east-central Mississippi by the group associated with Prairie Cooperative Associates. The response of the co-op members has been immediate and enthusiastic, and other similar projects are being planned.

Of course, the co-op represents much more than a few pieces of farm equipment. Its real excitement for the church lies in its meaning for witness and reconciliation, and in the new sense of dignity and self-worth experienced among people who until this decade were held in economic slavery.

Horst Completes Study Leave

On Aug. 1 Ray Horst officially resumed responsibilities as Secretary for Relief and Service with Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, Ind. Horst was granted a one-year sabbatical leave beginning on Aug. 1, 1969, after 15 years of continuous service to the Mission Board. He was appointed Secretary for Relief and Service in 1959.

In Horst's absence, Roy Yoder, a Volunteer Service district director, served as Acting Secretary for the Relief and Service Division. On Sept. 1, Yoder terminated employment with Mennonite Board of Missions to enroll as a junior at the Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Elkhart. During the past year Horst was a full-time student for one semester at the Associated Seminary and also studied black history and culture at Notre Dame in South Bend, Ind. He also visited service programs operated by other Mennonite groups, other denominations, and government agencies, to study their operating philosophies and administrative procedures.

Horst sees the uncertainty of the draft and its effects on the future of Volunteer Service as a priority issue facing his Relief and Service staff. He also feels that the Civilian Peace Service (earning I-W) program needs to be reexamined to determine how the Mennonite Church might more squarely face its responsibilities to CPS men. "The whole area of ministries to Mennonite young adults in urban settings deserves increased attention," he said.

Horst also announced several administrative shifts within the Relief and Service Division. A second regional office was opened on Sept. 1, with the appointment of Elton Nussbaum of Harrisonburg, Va., as district director for Volunteer Service units located in Virginia Mennonite Conference. Nussbaum is Youth Secretary for Virginia Conference.

A move toward decentralized administration of Mennonite Board of Missions' Volunteer Service program was initiated in January 1969 when Paul Landes assumed administrative responsibility for VS units in South Central, Rocky Mountain, Southwest, and Pacific Coast conferences. He is stationed in Phoenix, Ariz.

Gene Yoder and Leonard Garber will continue in full-time unit administration, with Yoder also accepting executive leadership for the High-Aim program. Kenneth Seitz, Jr., will continue to develop training programs for in-service VS personnel and represent Board interests to the churchwide Youth Ministries Cabinet and Mennonite Disaster Service.

Jerry Miller has dropped unit administration to devote more time to directing an increasing number of VS orientation schools that will offer more practical pre-service experiences outside the classroom. He will also direct the Out-Spokin' cross-country bicycling program for high school and college youth sponsored by Relief and Service.

26 Commissioned for Voluntary Service

The second of two Voluntary Service orientation schools held during August at Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, found 26 participants in attendance. The group was commissioned on Sept. 3 for the following assignments:

First row: Richard Miller, Clinton, Okla., child care and maintenance worker for two years at Sunshine Children's Home, Maumee, Ohio; Lester Otto, Shipshewana, Ind., community service worker with the Carlsbad, N.M., unit for two years; John Hostetter, Kalona, Iowa, community service and social worker with the Detroit, Mich., unit for two years; David Rice, Columbiana, Ohio, two years as a boys' club leader with the Surprise, Ariz., unit; Mervin Birky, Fossland, Ill., child care worker for two years at Frontier Boys Village, Colorado Springs, Colo.; and Donald Jewitt, Waterloo, Ont., special one-year assignment with "Cherchez-Vivre" group (nine Canadian youth who will offer service and programs to churches and youth groups on a self-support basis across the United States; see July-August Agape.)

Second row: Charlotte Smoker, Columbus, Kan., staff assistant at London, Ont.; Rescue Mission for one year; Barbara Briskey, Wauseon, Ohio, one year as a nurse aide at Maple Lawn Homes, Eureka, Ill.; Beverly Short, West Unity, Ohio, unit hostess and club leader for one year in La Junta, Colo.; Brenda and David Miller, Canton, Ohio, program director and hostess for two years at the International Guest House, Washington, D.C.; and Richard Martin, Elida, Ohio, community service and social worker with the 18th Street, Chicago, VS unit.

Third row: Floyd and Mary Schrock and son Peter, Harrisonburg, Va., teacher and community service workers in Puebla, Mexico, for 27 months, with the Franconia
Joint Conference on Church Organization to Be Held at Yellow Creek

Plans are being completed for the special meeting at Yellow Creek, Goshen, Ind., to consider a Proposed Plan for Organization of the Mennonite Church. This meeting sponsored by the Study Commission on Church Organization (SCCO) is scheduled to be held 12:00 noon, Tues., Oct. 20, at 12:30 p.m., Thurs., Oct. 22.

This will be a delegate session of Mennonite General Conference and the three Boards, Mission Board, Board of Education, and Publication Board. The agenda will include joint plenary sessions and separate caucus sessions.

Invitations and registration forms have been mailed to all of the delegates. However, the SCCO is inviting interested persons to attend as visitors, but is asking them to register in advance. A registration form is included here for the convenience of those who wish to register as visitors.

The SCCO will be bringing its proposals to this meeting as the next step in the process of restructuring the agencies of the Mennonite Church. The Proposed Plan grows out of the work of the past year, since August 1969, when the SCCO made its report to the Mennonite General Conference meeting at Turner, Ore.

The 1969 Report was approved in principle, but numerous concerns and questions occasioned another year of study and revision. The revised report under the title of Proposed Plan for Organization of the Mennonite Church is an attempt to take seriously the voice of the church in response to the proposals included in last year’s report.

Following the October meeting and depending on the decisions of that meeting, further work will continue on the preparation of bylaws for the new organization. It is tentatively planned that a Constitutional Assembly will be held in connection with the meeting of Mennonite General Conference at Kitchener, Ont., in 1971. If bylaws are approved at that meeting, the new organization can begin functioning immediately afterward.

The prayers of the church are requested on behalf of this important series of meetings concerned with reorganization of our brotherhood.

Lancaster Mennonites Raise $12,300 for Relief

On May 20, Mennonite families throughout the Lancaster Mennonite Conference decided to “try hunger.” They ate an evening meal that cost approximately six cents per person and sent the money saved to the Try Hunger project of the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions.

The $12,345.18 raised this year will be sent to Haiti to finance gardening projects, nutrition centers, school lunch programs, and road-building. These projects not only provide food for the Haitians but also give them opportunities to work to obtain it.

In 1969 those who “tried hunger” provided $11,497.19 to set up classes in sewing, literacy, and public health in South Vietnam.

In Try Hunger, participants seek to empathize with people around the world who are hungry every day. Norman Shenk, assistant treasurer of Eastern Board, reported that the project has raised over $11,000 for relief yearly since its beginning in 1966.

Evangelism Consultation
Moved Back One Year

Previously announced for spring 1971, the All-Mennonite Consultation on Evangelism has now been rescheduled for Chicago, April 13-16, 1972.

Eugene Witmer, recently named Executive Secretary of the Consultation, announced the date change. "We want time enough to get all Mennonite groups vitally involved," asserted Witmer. "This has already been the opportunity for a powerful moving of the Spirit of God among us, drawing men from most Mennonite groups into fellowship around the imperative of the Great Commission."

Witmer pointed out the strategic timing of the consultation just prior to the Key '73 Congress on Evangelism in Washington, D.C., early in 1973, and the Mennonite World Conference in South America in midsummer 1972.

"We have a year and a half to hear from all corners of the Mennonite Church of their concerns for the meeting," Witmer outlined. "This is a consultation among brothers in Christ—and this takes time to bring to fruition. In the best sense of our Anabaptist tradition we want to hear from each other. Let the Holy Spirit speak through the brotherhood about our future in evangelism in the 70s."

Channels of communication are being established to every congregation in every conference in every Mennonite denomination. A new method of feedback has been detailed by Paul M. Miller, Mennonite Biblical Seminary, who has been appointed Secretary of the Executive Committee. The plan will work at the congregational level: a team of several members who are concerned for local evangelism will join together in praying for and evaluating local concerns. The team members will then covenant to work together from now through 1972 and to send at least one member to the consultation. This member relates team concerns to the consultation and reports to the team the ideas, concepts, methods, and inspiration he receives from the consultation. The team members then work together to share their renewal with the congregation as a whole.

"Bold new measures such as this are needed," pointed out Roy Just, Vice-Chairman of the Consultation Executive Committee and President of Tabor College, Hillsboro, Kan. "There is much, much more to evangelism than just preaching to someone. We've got to try to understand where we are in evangelism—and where we ought to be." Consultation planners hope to sharpen up Mennonite evangelistic efforts, deepen evangelical concern.

In facing the turbulent social situation, Executive Committee Chairman Myron Aungsburer stated, "The problems of the 70s are not to be solved by social action, nor by pietistic inivolvimento. Ana-

Mennonite World Conference Location Unchanged

Executive officers of the Mennonite World Conference have received various communications concerning the announced plans for the projected Ninth Mennonite World Conference to be held at Curitiba, Brazil, in July 1972. These communications are being received with sincere appreciation for the concerns which have been expressed as to whether the political situation current in Brazil makes it advisable to hold a world conference gathering in that nation.

The decision of the Lutheran World Federation to change the location of its conference from Porto Alegre, Brazil, to Evian-Les Bains in France during the summer of 1970 has focused more sharply the question as to what Mennonite World Conference should do.

The Presidium of the Ninth Mennonite World Conference held sessions in Kinshasa, Republic of Congo, in early August 1969. Mennonites of South America, Africa, Asia, Europe, and North America were well represented in these sessions which confirmed plans for the Curitiba location, selected the 1972 conference theme, "Jesus Christ Reconciles," and projected program outlines for the 1972 sessions. News releases which suggested that the Presidium decided "not to speak to social issues" are erroneous. Note was taken of the fact that for a Mennonite World Conference to meet anywhere in the "Third World" (South America, Africa, or Asia) meant that political and other conditions would be different from those which generally prevail in Europe or in North America. Such situations were not considered insurmountable.

Those who carry leadership responsibility in the Mennonite World Conference are now making serious studies of the various reports which are coming in concerning the social and political situation in Brazil and of the implications of these for the holding of a Mennonite World Conference there. North American members of the Presidium met at Winnipeg at the North America Bible Congress in July 1970 to discuss developments up to that point and to test responses. C. J. Dyck, Executive Secretary of the Mennonite World Conference, summarizes the discussions by saying that it is not clear that the Ninth Mennonite World Conference should not be held in Curitiba in 1972.

A number of observations concerning the issues in the current discussion may be appropriate:

1. The Presidium of the Mennonite World Conference in scheduling sessions to be held in Curitiba, Brazil, is well aware that political and social conditions in any part of the world could change so drastically in the early 1970s that relocating or rescheduling of its sessions may be necessary. Who can predict accurately what may happen in Brazil or in other nations in the next two years?

2. Various reports concerning the alleged suppression of freedom of speech, press, and assembly in Brazil do not all agree. Further fact-finding appears necessary. The Mennonite World Conference Executive Secretary, C. J. Dyck, as had been planned earlier, is to visit South America in the near future to meet with Mennonite World Conference representatives there and to gather more factual information firsthand. Some reports appearing in the international press seem to have political rather than objective orientation.

3. Even if further fact-finding should reveal that certain kinds of freedom in Brazil are more limited than in other nations, further consideration needs to be given to what constitutes a proper Christian response to those members of our brotherhood who find themselves in such conditions. It is not clear that persons living in such situations are to be deprived of the possible benefits of a session of a Mennonite World Conference.
Moreover, further consideration must also be given to the constitutionally stated purpose of the Mennonite World Conference which is "to bring the Mennonites of the world together in regularly recurring meetings of brotherly fellowship...to strengthen...the awareness of the worldwide brotherhood in which they stand...to deepen the faith and hope, and to stimulate and aid the church in its ministry to the world; that is, in greater obedience to the Lord Jesus Christ, and in the promotion of his kingdom in the world." Some of the discussions on the question of whether the Mennonite World Conference should meet in Brazil would suggest a change of focus or at least an enlargement of the purpose of the Mennonite World Conference from its "brotherhood-oriented" focus to a politically or nationally oriented focus.

5. A fifth consideration is the role of Mennonites in the "Third World" in speaking to these questions and in making decisions for the brotherhood. Current Mennonite World Conference leadership has moved with conviction in the direction of giving "Third World" representatives a stronger voice in the World Conference. To date, aside from the regular Presidium sessions, questions about the projected meeting in Curitiba, Brazil, and the kind of issues to be considered there have come primarily from European and North American Mennonites and not from those living in South America, Africa, or Asia. If we are serious about brotherhood on a worldwide scale, new actions ought not be taken without consideration for the viewpoints of those who live in other parts of our one world.

The next major meeting to deal with Mennonite World Conference planning is scheduled for India, in 1971. However, the problems which have emerged may call for a meeting of the Executive Committee before that time. Meanwhile, the Mennonite brotherhood is encouraged to share in pravferal study of the issues which have surfaced in the planning for the next conference. The announced theme, "Jesus Christ Reconciles," takes on startling relevance for the brotherhood itself. — Erland Walter, President, Mennonite World Conference

Showalter to Assist President

Richard A. Showalter, Plain City, Ohio, became assistant to the President of Eastern Mennonite College, Harrisonburg, Va., Sept. 1.

A recipient of the Master of Theology degree from the University of Chicago, where he was a Rockefeller Fellow in 1968-69, Showalter will assist the President in scheduling public affairs on campus, in administrative relations, and in coordinating campus procedural matters.

Elise Shirk, Hong Kong, submitted to surgery on Aug. 21 to remove bone growth in the neck, a disc, and to fuse two vertebrae. She is making good recovery. A second operation is planned for Sept. 18 for her lower back.

Me or Others is a new 20-minute color slide presentation with a taped sound track describing Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions' Voluntary Service program. Prepared by Don Kraybill, Associate VS-CPS Director, this program portrays the work and goals of Mennonite VS-ers through on-location pictures, sounds, and interviews.

Mary Ellen Shoup, missionary-teacher on furlough from Algeria, left for another service term on Sept. 6 and arrived in Algeria on Sept. 10. Address: 6 rue Brousais, Alger, Algeria.

Gladyes Widmer, missionary from Puerto Rico, will visit Mennonite Board of Missions Sept. 21 to 25. She is planning to return to Puerto Rico soon after mid-October.

Ralph Buckwalter writes from Asahigawa, Japan: "One week here in Asahigawa has given us time to start getting ac-quantized and organize our living situation. Fixing up a run-down apartment is possible on a shoestring budget if one works hard enough. The Obihoro send-off was most heartwarming and the welcome here no less from the heart. We are especially grateful for concrete evidence that the Christians here aren’t turning over the ‘works’ to us. We feel we are not just the Christians in this city of 300,000. But we want to share in the excitement of expectancy to see what God wants to do and is going to do here.

Readers Say

Submissions to Readers Say column should comment on printed articles.

Eagerly I scan each issue of the Gospel Herald for more articles and pictures of Mission ’70, but I just can’t find enough. Friends brought back interesting pictures, but not enough and what was said, whetting my appetite for more.

You see, I was a delegate and GMSA Secretary from the Indiana Michigan district who didn’t get to go last minute. Being a busy farmer’s wife and mother of four seemed more important at that time than leaving them and going to Mission ’70. But I prayed. Down on my knees, picking the last of the strawberries, I prayed that the prayers raised at Mission ’70 be thoroughly bathed and cleansed by the Holy Spirit. As I offered cold refreshing summer drink to the hot, sweaty workers, I prayed that “refreshing drinks” be found at Mission ’70. Through all this I sweated, as one sweats during hot, humid Indiana weather and I prayed that each one at Mission ’70 be warmed by Christian fellowship of seeing and associating with Christians from all over the world.

I appreciated reading the editorial of July 28 concerning the meeting. Such a meaningful and earth-shaking meeting needs more publicity now. Truly the Spirit of the Lord was there at Mission ’70, but He works through those who didn’t get to go. — Ruby E. Hershberger, Millersburg, Ind.

I have read the timely article on “Was the Lord Jesus a Revolutionary?” in the Aug 11 issue of the Gospel Herald. “Revolution” is a militant word and surely does not convey or represent the life or work of our Lord Jesus Christ. Jesus is our Redeemer and His work was and is one of reconciliation, rather than revolution. Communist and left-wing writers write of people coming through revolution, but revolution does not produce peace. The Christian ministry is to be one of reconciliation. 2 Cor. 5:19. After reading a report of a seminar held June 15-26 at a leading institution of learning, I am convinced that Bro. Lind’s article is very timely and pertinent. I would encourage everyone to again read Bro. Lind’s article.

I wish I could be as appreciative of the “Open Letter to the Editors of College Student” as found in the Aug 25 Gospel Herald. We rightly should be concerned for and about our youth and students who are entering or already in adulthood. We need to let those who do and can think but herein also lies a danger. In paragraph four in this open letter we read that students are taught to test ideas and seek their own truth. This is a dangerous statement for those who want to be submissive to the authority of the Word of God. The writer does say in the next sentence that he must have a valid source and proper analysis, but he goes on to say he must ultimately answer to God and if the ministers do not want us to put away our thinking, but desire to show us how to conform our lives to the authority of the Word. I suppose we will never find agreement by honest and well-meaning seekers, but is there not a greater danger in seeking to interpret Scripture according to the preconceived ideas that we want to see in all Scriptures. Or perhaps they may not have considered all Scriptures that would have something to enlighten us on a given subject.

Through paying taxes we know the government is of one purpose for war purposes, we have only to think how our Lord Jesus told Peter to catch a fish and take the coin therein to pay His and Peter’s tax to a government that uses our money to pay our taxes to the Adversary and not to say that our brethren and sisters who signed this letter have given us some thoughts that should awaken our consciences as to how we acquire, and invest our money and as to our standard of living.

While we cannot agree with all the ideas set forth in this open letter, we trust it will stir our thinking and cause us as the Bereans to seek the word of God, whether in print or other form. There are so many. I would very like to say that there are other ways to express our dissatisfaction with war than to be involved in demonstrations with those who believe in the wrong direction. There is great danger that we become involved in our own comforts only and forget our needy brethren. May God bless you for stirring our thinking. — John H. Herr, Holtwood, Pa.

Thank you for printing the practical article by Gerald C. Studer, That Controversial Peace Symbol.” I appreciate despite the research that Bro. Studer did in working on this issue. I believe with him that we Christians must be careful of playing ourselves into the hands of both the antichrist and communism. We have done this by our alarm and screams over the peace symbol. In addition the so-called generation gap has been perpetuated by the furor. Thank you again. — Robert O. Zehr, Covington, La.

I read the news release concerning the all-Mennonite Consultation on Evangelism in April 1972 with interest and support. I concur with Myron Augsburger’s statement that we need to emphasize the need of all Christians, not just Mennonites, in communicating the gospel, and in winning men and women to an active commitment to Jesus Christ.” Hand in hand with this we must also find common ground to the Anne beam all that Jesus commanded. Matthew 28:20.

My main concern is the tenor of the news release. At the heart of evangelism is reconciliation. I am concerned that the publicity and promotion of this conference does not take a stance that tends to alienate brethren either inside or outside Mennonite groups. Within Mennonite groups I feel that our emphasis on conservative Old Order Mennonite to progressive-wings General Conference churches,” is not particularly helpful. Such stereotyping of groups, in my judgment, does not serve to reconcile nor to assure enthusiastic participation in this important endeavor. Outside the Mennonite groups, to state a meaning of Mennonite evangelism and then to compare this with shortcomings of “liberal churches” and “liberals” is not always productive. As one person does not assure a humble reconciling attitude that leads to bridge-building with other Christian communities with which we must communicate and learn. We need to see the whole Church.

Finally, I was struck by the place of meeting. I’m sure Chicago’s Conrad Hilton has given reasonable prices and perhaps it alone has facilities adequate for such a large gathering. We appreciate the C.C. Hosts, Chicago Midland, a much less ostentations hotel, and MDS functions chiefly in the mud and dust of disaster. Will the mirrored, chrome-plated, heavily carpeted, air-conditioned environment actually lend itself to discerning the needs of the world? Or, might Chicago’s south side provide a better site?

Let’s hope and pray that the proposed consultation will be a step forward to the heart of the church’s task and not be an exercise in either group or individual ego-building. — Paul Lederach, Scottsdale, Pa.

Stonerook officiating; interment in the Spring Hope Cemetery.
Will We Conform or Overcome?

By Delton Franz

When great-grandfather Abraham Claassen and some 100 German Mennonite immigrants debarked from their westward bound train, their first opportunity to mingle with the American people came on the morning of their arrival in Mt. Pleasant, Iowa. Astonished by the raucous and lively character of the Americans on Main Street, they learned only later that that was the Fourth of July, 1876 — the centennial of American Independence Day.

They moved on to the prairies of Kansas. The “Quiet People in the Land” wanted more than anything else, the opportunity to live out their lives in peace and quiet. Still painfully aware of the excesses to which nations can turn when obsessed with the call to loyalty as defined by the military, our forefathers were not favorably impressed with patriotic celebrations and displays of nationalism.

Honor America Day

In Washington this morning, on this Fourth of July, a throng of people is gathering to observe “Honor America Day.” I have had to wonder what this means for the Christian people of this nation. I’m not sure if great-grandfather could have felt comfortable this morning in Washington, D.C., just as he could not quite feel comfortable on Main Street, even in little Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, on the Fourth of July in 1876. These, our forefathers, came to this country because they had seen the dangers of too much emphasis on patriotism based on military strength and the power of the sword. The “God and country” emphasis and the sanctification of the Vaterland was something they saw could corrupt the message and the mission of Christ’s church.

I’m concerned because the leadership of the evangelical segment of the Christian church has so strongly backed “Honor America Day.” It’s a very troubling and difficult thing to know how to speak a positive and constructive word here, even more so because I believe so much in the importance of the evangelical mission of the church. Certainly, it is the hope of all of us that this mission should not be tainted or compromised. A large segment of the church may be misled if we too closely identify God’s will with the policy of a nation that has such a large part in bringing death and destruction to so many thousands of people. How can we, if we would take seriously the teachings of our Lord, allow ourselves to place any national ideology above the lives and souls of human beings?

About ten days ago, a letter written by some of our Mennonite missionaries in Vietnam came to my attention. These are our ambassadors of Jesus Christ in a war-torn land. We have prayed for their ministry and we have sent them our support. Their letter reads:

“We are concerned about the confusion of the god of war with the God of our Savior. No amount of sincerity can offset...”

the resulting harm of the U.S. Army as the arm of power for American Christianity. Isn’t it obvious that the militarism of Western nations is largely responsible for the tiny, crippled, Christian minorities in most Asian societies? Isn’t the Vietnam war only compounding the repulsiveness which turns most Asians against the religion which is encouraging such destruction? United States policy has presented American missions with a crisis we can no longer afford to ignore.”

War Identified with Christianity

This is why I am concerned. Thousands upon thousands of children of God in Asia are being turned against the gospel of Jesus Christ because the war that is destroying them is identified with Christianity.

When Jesus came back to His hometown, He was confronted with nationalistic sentiment within His home congregation. After He read the Scripture lesson of the morning which told of bringing relief to the captives, good news to the poor, and liberty to the oppressed, He cited for them what happened when an Old Testament prophet many years before had bypassed the widows of Israel to bring food and help to a Syrophoenician widow. The Syrophoenicians were hated by many Israelites. The people in Jesus’ home congregation were the pure stock that had resettled, after the captivity, in the northern part of Palestine. They had intense feelings against the impure stock, the many nationalities and racial groups that centered in Galilee.

When, in that context, Jesus applied the ancient Scriptures, His own congregation was so aroused, so hostile, that they rose up and attempted to kill Him. If we are really serious about applying the gospel, about applying Luke 4 to the 1970s, we are thinking of something that could cause a great deal of hostility in our congregations. What does it really mean to translate this ancient truth for this modern age?

Jesus had returned from forty days in the wilderness where He had struggled with and resisted the temptation to be the Messiah who would satisfy the patriotic passion of His people. Those of us who are now a part of Christ’s church are going to be faced in this decade with the temptation to equate national policy with the righteousness of God’s kingdom.

The divisions in our society and the national pressures to fall in step could present Christians with a wilderness temptation such as we have not seen. Will we simply conform, or will we struggle and overcome? Nothing less is at stake than the integrity and the credibility of the message of Christ’s church. Hopefully the church, especially those of us who identify with the evangelical wing of the church, will not succumb to the temptation to put even a pinch of incense on the altar of Caesar. In so doing, we would give encouragement to a nation to move even further in the direction of believing that it is possible to bear the sword with national righteousness. Our own Mennonite missionaries are crying out; they’re trying to tell us something.

Our Unique Calling

The Mennonite Church has an especially unique calling in this hour. In spite of the smallness of our number, we have, as a church, an unusually urgent message and mission.

In our local congregations we should plan in the next days to invite fellow Christians of other denominations, especially the evangelicals, to meet with us to explore what it really means to be obedient to a Lord who called us to love our enemies; to obey God rather than man.

Beyond our search with fellow Christians, we have a witness to make to the people in our communities, our counties, our cities. As Christians, we should lead the way in planning a kind of town meeting. There has been a lot of backlash because of demonstrations and because of many questionable ways in which the cry of peace has gone out. If the people of Jesus Christ do not have a Christian way to call a nation to repentance, and the people to a Christian way of peace, then what has happened to our mission and to our message?

We need to do our homework, even though the hour is late. If we have not yet had an opportunity to hear firsthand from those Mennonite missionaries and MCC workers who have lived with the people in the villages in Vietnam, and have spoken their language, then we must call them to our congregations and to our communities. Surely we must weigh with greater seriousness the observations and counsel of our brothers in the church, than the word of those who make a battlefield of the church’s mission field.

Finally, there are times when the Christian minority has something to say to those who sit in the seats of power. A growing number within our brotherhood feel that they must encourage our leaders in government to find a better way than to take the power of the sword, to trust in horses and chariots. Six Senators who come from states that are strongly represented by Mennonite people would be open to support legislation in the Congress that would end this destruction, this taking of life. But they have heard so little by way of support and encouragement from their people that they are not taking that stand.

Where is the voice of the church? Where is the message of those who follow the Prince of Peace? Our interest is not political partisanship, nor condemnation of one administration or another. The church dare not become ensnared this way. Our concern is that the gospel of Jesus Christ not be thwarted because men have come to trust in the sword. “He has sent us to announce good news to the poor, to bring release to the captives, and recovery of sight to the blind; to let the broken victims go free.”

Do a Little Matching

There is a simple way to put new zest in your congregational program. Unless yours is a church that has taken people, young and older, far more seriously than most, your congregation has an untapped resource that can be used of God to generate results for His kingdom in many interesting ways.

Most committees, when they are asked to liven up congregational program, start with ideas. They brainstorm ideas, read ideas, report ideas that worked somewhere else. Out of all this, they come up with a few. Then the problem is to get the ideas planted in the congregation so they will grow. Often they die when transplanted because they are not indigenous to the local congregational soil.

It just happens that often God already has something growing that, with a little watering, would turn out some unusual results. Instead of starting with ideas, how about having your planning committee start with people? Like this. The planning group recognizes that persons are God's gifts to the congregation. So they ask about George, for example. What does he like to do? What does he do during the week? What special skills does he have? It may be good, in fact, just to ask George these questions and let him speak for himself.

The point of all this is the conviction that God already has something in mind for your congregation and that He is already preparing people for the job. The sad thing is that often we go along for years grandly programming irrelevancies while we are missing the very things God has servants ready and waiting to do.

I remember talking about this once with a group of congregational leaders. One lady in the group mentioned that she was deeply interested in helping unwed mothers in the community and that she was spending a great deal of her time in this mission. She had the training, the personality, the insight, and was really God's gift for this particular mission. The only difficulty, she was working at the task as a lonely individual because the congregation had not seen her as a gift. Consequently, she had no opportunity to receive the counsel and support of her church, nor did she have the context to share her successes with the brethren and sisters. A program outcome of taking a gift like this seriously would be to put the congregation's blessing on what is being done, give the help and counsel needed, and perhaps let the church building be the center of activities for the program.

When needs are matched with people in terms of the interest and skills they already have, whole new and exciting frontiers in congregational education and mission are discovered.

"You shall receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you; and you shall be my witnesses" (Acts 1:8).

James H. McConky wrote: "I used to believe that a few men had a monopoly on the Holy Spirit. Now I know that the Holy Spirit has a monopoly on a few men."

When Leslie Weatherhead of City Temple, London, was to speak in Canada some years ago, he was prevailed upon to pass through the United States to address the ministers of New York City in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church. His boat was late, so he was taken off by a tug and then rushed up Fifth Avenue under police escort.

The church was filled with metropolitan clergy. Weatherhead stood looking down into faces of his fellow ministers for a long time. Then he said, "I have one question: Have you got Him?"

That is an all-important question for us when we seek to lead others to Christ. Do we have the power of the Holy Spirit? There is a difference between the Spirit in us and on us. Some have the Spirit in them for character, but they are not gifted by Him for service. Jesus though conceived by the Holy Spirit, stood beneath the open heavens to be anointed of the Spirit before He entered on His public ministry. So those who received the Holy Spirit tarried until they received the Pentecostal power for service. Then they were witnesses.

Fruitfulness

By Adella Kanagy

His living presence yields the Spirit's fruits:
Love that is ready to believe the best,
Love whose hopes are fadeless,
Love that suffers long, endures;
Joy that triumphs;
Peace, from Christ's rule in my heart;
Patience which is tireless;
Gentle ways, kind feeling;
Goodness that forgives;
Faithfulness today and to the end;
Meekness, humility;
Self-restraint, as purified by God;
Let us grow up in Him, in faith and hope and love,
in righteousness:
together bearing living fruit from Life within.

Leaders Prepare Leaders

A mark of leadership is that the one in a leadership role prepares another or others to take his place and puts such into position of leadership in time that the work does not suffer.

One of the temptations of persons in leadership is to attempt to assume all responsibility rather than designating responsibility. The old proverb that "It is better to put ten men to work than to do the work of ten men" is still true.

When leadership waits too long to prepare persons for leadership and to place persons in responsibility a number of things happen. First, the work suffers. And it suffers no matter how good the leadership is at present. If a leader is not doing something definite in preparing others and seeing that others assume responsibility, work will lag and diminish.

Our church has examples of areas where outstanding leaders have served. But some of these did not prepare and place younger men in responsibility. Not only did the church in such areas suffer but a whole generation of ministers is missing. The bishop became old. He did not ordain younger men. Finally, when younger men were ordained the benefit of a middle-aged generation of leaders was missing to the poverty of all.

When the majority of leadership in any conference or district is over fifty years of age the time is past due for acquiring additional young blood or the future is fixed for drastic adjustments and problems. The church always, at the same time, needs the burning fire of youth, the careful guidance of middle age, and the seasoned counsel of old age. But it cannot live with only one or two of these three without serious problems.

One other thing seems to characterize some leaders as they advance in age. Not only do some feel they need to hold on tighter to the responsibility because they feel unneeded in other areas of life as age advances, but they increasingly feel that no one else is qualified to assume their work. When we get to feeling that there are no other persons who can take our place we are likely taking ourselves much too seriously and not taking God's work and others seriously enough.

What this editorial is saying is that no leader has fulfilled his responsibility until he has prepared someone to take his place. And he better do it while he still has a mind to do it. Unless he does, he may finally hinder God's work and find great unhappiness himself. — D.

Be Filled with the Spirit

Many of us have entered into the riches of salvation from sin by the way of the cross. We have discovered that Jesus is a living Savior who desires to be our Companion. But only a few Christians, in comparison, have visited the upper room to experience and to understand the full impact of God's gift on the day of Pentecost. We have been afraid to investigate this shattering spiritual experience.

The devil is determined to have us bypass this event. Consequently, our spiritual experience has been shallow and superficial. Our understanding of God's plan and purpose has been incomplete. Our service for God has been unsatisfying and our efforts at witnessing for Christ very unsuccessful.

I can put a few drops of water into a drinking glass and I will have a glass containing water. But that glass is far from being full or running over with water, isn't it? Likewise, I believe the Bible teaches that every person who accepts Christ as his Savior receives His Holy Spirit within his life, but only as we allow Christ complete possession will we be filled with His precious Holy Spirit. I also believe that God will not fill unwilling hearts with His gift of the Holy Spirit any more than He will save a person who doesn't accept His gift of salvation.

The Bible records that the early Christians "were all filled with the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2:4). These early disciples, a baffled, disappointed group of Jewish peasants, untrained and inexperienced in the arts of communication; without political endorsement, without social or intellectual prestige, without financial resources; marched through a pagan, materialistic world proclaiming Christ as the King of kings with a power that was more than human.

The church today has all the necessary instruments for the pulling down of Satan's strongholds, but it needs the baptism of fire. You can put a powerless cannonball into a powerless cannon with some powerless powder and nothing will happen. But one spark of fire and the powder becomes a flash of lightning and the cannonball a thunderbolt.

Even so, you and I are to be channels of spiritual power. — Ray M. Geigley, editor of Youth Messenger.
The Baptism and Filling of the Holy Spirit

By John L. Stauffer

Sincere Christians want all the zeal and love that characterize the best in the apostolic church. In the Word of God we have authentic and authoritative information about the advent of Christianity and about the conditions of its founding. Various religious groups attempt to duplicate the apostolic fervor and believe that apostolic conditions must be realized today in order to experience apostolic power. Of all the different functions of the Holy Spirit, the baptism of the Spirit and the filling of the Spirit seem to receive the greatest emphasis. In this paper we submit teachings of the Word of God concerning the work of the Holy Spirit in the believer and especially as it relates to the baptism and the filling. The following points will receive attention:

1. Terms associated with the baptism of the Spirit.
2. What is the meaning and purpose of Holy Spirit baptism?
3. When does the baptism of the Spirit take place?
4. What does the Bible teach about the filling of the Spirit?

Terms Associated with the Baptism of the Spirit

John the Baptist announced that Jesus would baptize with the Holy Ghost. Matthew 3:11; Mark 1:8; Luke 3:16; John 1:33. Jesus describes the Holy Spirit baptism after His resurrection from the grave as the promise of the Father. Acts 1:4; Luke 24:49. He further announces the baptism of the Holy Spirit as imminent. "Not many days hence" (Acts 1:5). Jesus promised His followers that He would send the Holy Spirit as the Comforter, John 14:16, 26; 16:7, 13. The promise of the Father is recorded by the prophet Joel in 2:28, 29. Peter tells us that Jesus Christ has received the promise of the Father since His exaltation to God’s right hand and has shed it forth as “ye now see and hear” (Acts 2:33). Prophecy declares that this gift will come to God’s children upon the exercise of faith after Jesus is glorified. John 7:37-39. The promise is to all, as many as the Lord calls. Acts 2:39. The Gentiles received the promise of the Spirit through faith. Galatians 3:14. The Ephesians were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise. Ephesians 1:13. The reception of the Holy Spirit as a seal is also called the earnest of our inheritance. Ephesians 1:14. The Spirit falling upon the Gentiles was the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Acts 10:44-47; 11:15, 16. The baptism of the Spirit is called the gift of God. Acts 8:19, 20. The Pentecostal converts (3,000 in number) were promised the gift of the Holy Spirit upon repentance, water baptism, and the remission of sins. Acts 2:38. This was in answer to their question, “What shall we do?” One of the problems that stands out after noting what the Scriptures have to say about the baptism of the Holy Spirit and the terms associated with this divine work is, “Why do people pick out the term baptism of the Holy Spirit and ignore the sealing by the Holy Spirit, the earnest of the Spirit, and the anointing of the Spirit when they are all related to the believer’s experience according to the Scriptures?” Is there any biblical reason for believing that the baptism of the Spirit is of more importance than the other functions of the Spirit named above?

What Is the Meaning of Holy Spirit Baptism?

This question strikes at the crux of much current discussion about the baptism of the Holy Spirit. There are those who ask, “Have you received your Pentecost?” Then there are those who confuse cleaning or washing, with sanctification. It is interesting to note that cleansing and purification are definitely ascribed to faith, to the Word, and to the blood of Christ (Acts 15:9; Ephesians 5:26; Hebrews 9:14; 1 John 1:7, 9; John 15:3); while sanctification is ascribed to the work of each member of the Trinity. 1 Thessalonians 5:23; Hebrews 10:10, 14; 13:12; 10:29; 2:11; Ephesians 5:26; Romans 15:16; 2 Thessalonians 2:13; 1 Peter 1:2. A person can be unscriptural by emphasizing sanctification by the Holy Spirit if he ignores the sanctification of the Father and the Son. There are many more references to sanctification through the Father and the Son than through the Holy Spirit. It is possible to magnify the work of the Holy Spirit to the point where the work of Christ and the Father is almost unnoticed. This is erroneous because the work and the witness of the Holy Spirit is to exalt Jesus Christ. John 16:12-15. It is always a serious defect when we magnify the gift above the Giver.

There are those who recommend their own experience as the pattern of the Spirit’s working, ignoring divine revelation, and insist that unless one has the same pattern of experience he has nothing. Such a teaching has distressed many honest and sincere Christians. There are those who give the impression that the Book of Acts provides us with the whole truth about the operations of the Holy Spirit; that it gives the prescribed method of modern evangelism. They hold that if apostolic conditions were met, that apostolic results would be realized. It seems that such people overlook the fact that Acts describes the introduction of Christianity into a pagan world, and that the Epistles reveal the applications of truth for later times. In other words, we must make a distinction between apostolic experience in Acts and apostolic teaching in the Epistles. Apostolic experiences cannot be duplicated today unless we have apostolic conditions, but the same Holy Spirit operates today as in the apostolic times.

Those who teach the eradication of the old nature through a crucifixion experience hold that the Christian becomes a person of one nature, instead of the two natures so clearly taught in the Epistles. We wish such would demonstrate their teaching more humbly and lovingly.

The Apostle Paul gives a definite answer to the significance of the baptism of the Holy Spirit.

“For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit” (1 Cor. 12:13). This Scripture gives a meaning to the outpouring of the Spirit at Pentecost that is not explained in the Book of Acts. This will be noticed in more detail later in the article.

Since the Holy Spirit baptizes Jew and Gentile into the one body, the church, it will be profitable to note some Scriptures concerning the body. The body of Christ is composed of many members. Romans 12:5; 1 Corinthians 10:16, 17. Our bodies individually are members of Christ’s body. 1 Corinthians 6:15. They are also called the temples of the Holy Ghost. 1 Corinthians 6:19, 20. Christ, the Head of the body, was anointed with the Spirit as He appeared visibly in the form of a dove. Isaiah 61:1; Matthew 3:16. Christ’s body, the church, began to take form through the baptism of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost with the Holy Spirit appearing as “cloven tongues of fire” coming upon each one assembled. Acts 2:1-4. God fits the body together. Satan would disintegrate it. 1 Corinthians 12:24. God desires no schism in the body. Satan would divide it. 1 Corinthians 12:25. In Corinth we have “experience-seekers” who gathered around different men. The “sect spirit” (not the Holy Spirit) said, “I of Paul,” or Cephas, or Apollos, or Christ. They were critical of Paul the man of God and doubted his apostleship. Many other evidences of division and carnality are rebuked by Paul in the epistle. Modern “experience-seekers” like the Corinthians somehow manage to skip the charity chapter and are often schismatic in practice. Some of them become harsh, bitter, and caustic toward one who opposes their views or who does not agree with them. They have a “knowledge that puffeth up.” Such reaction nullifies their claims of a superior experience.

The body of Christ formed by the baptism of the Holy Spirit is the church. Ephesians 1:23. Through the cross both Jew and Gentile have been reconciled into one body. Ephesians 2:13-18. God seeks the edification of the body through gifts to the church. Ephesians 4:8, 11-16. Jesus Christ is to have the preeminence in the church and that is the special work of the Holy Spirit. Colossians 1:18, 24; cf. John 14:16-18; 16:7-15. Is it possible that men may attempt to magnify the Holy Spirit by saying that He is the most neglected person in the Godhead and thus obscure the Christ whom alone the Spirit seeks to exalt?

When Does the Baptism of the Spirit Take Place?

As I studied this subject, I discovered that outside of the 120 waiting disciples, the baptism of the Holy Spirit was a gift from God to born-again Christians at the time of their conversion. The apostles were told to tarry until they were endowed with power from on high. Luke 24:49. When Jesus was here, He predicted that He would build His church. After His exaltation to the right hand of God, He began the work of building His church. This work is performed by the baptism of the Holy Spirit. The apostles and the rest of the 120 were the first group to form the spiritual body of Christ, the church. Since it is clearly stated that that is the purpose of the baptism of the Spirit, we can understand the diversity of operation in connection with the formation of the body of Christ at Pentecost and afterwards, until all the discordant groups by nature were welded together through the Spirit into the body of Christ.

The 120 waited and prayed according to command. Acts 1:5, 14; 2:1-4, 14-18, 32, 33. No others in the Book of Acts were commanded to tarry for the baptism of the Spirit. Speaking in languages was a divine confirmation of that which was done by the Spirit at Pentecost.

The Pentecostal converts (3,000) received the baptism of the Spirit at conversion. Acts 2:38. Wonders and signs were wrought by the apostles (not the converts) as a divine confirmation.

The Samaritan believers were not baptized by the Holy Spirit until the apostles came down from Jerusalem and laid their hands upon them. Acts 8:15-17. No signs and wonders were performed by the Samaritans, but by Philip the evangelist. Acts 8:6, 7, 13. We can clearly understand that the laying on of the hands of the apostles was necessary in the plan of God to eliminate the enmity caused by the Jewish-Samaritan schism so that it would not reappear in the body of Christ, the church.

Saul of Tarsus was baptized by Ananias who was sent by God, thus confirming to Saul the fact that the message of Ananias was from God. Saul was also filled with the Holy Ghost. It is evident that Saul was also baptized with the Holy Ghost at this time, or else we have no record of his Holy Spirit baptism. Acts 9:6, 17-20. From the statement in Acts 22:12-16, it appears evident that Saul was not converted until the ministry of Ananias was performed with the laying on of hands.

Cornelius and his household were baptized with the Holy Ghost at conversion through the hearing of faith and not the laying on of hands. They also spoke with tongues as a confirmation to Jewish eyewitneses that God had accepted the Gentiles as well as the Samaritans and Jews, thus breaking down the middle wall of partition and making one body of

The Ephesian disciples of John the Baptist (not Christians according to the teaching of the epistles), received the Word as preached by Paul and were baptized with water and then through the laying on of the hands of the Apostle Paul, they were baptized with the Holy Spirit, speaking in tongues as a confirmation to their regeneration and acceptance by God. Acts 19:1-7. Since the significance of the Holy Spirit baptism is indiction into the body of Christ, it is evident that these disciples were not members of the body of Jesus Christ. Those who would use the Ephesian disciples of John as a demonstration of Holy Spirit baptism subsequent to conversion involve themselves in several difficulties. They must declare that these people were Christians for many years and yet were not members of the body of Christ. There appears to be no scriptural support for this conclusion. In the second place, if they were Christians, then we face the problem of rebaptism of uninstructed and unenlightened believers. We do not accept this conclusion. In the third place, if they were Christians, then we face the problem of "they spake with tongues and prophesied." If they were Christians before the Holy Spirit baptism, then the tongues were not a confirmation of their regeneration, but of their baptism by the Spirit. In other instances in Acts we have noticed that where "signs and wonders" occurred, they were a confirmation of the message that led to conversion with the baptism of the Spirit occurring with their conversion.

Since the body of Christ has been created to include Jew, Samaritan, and Gentile, and since we no longer have apostles to lay hands upon penitent sinners to receive the Holy Spirit, it would appear that all converts since apostolic times are baptized into the body of Christ by the Spirit at the time of regeneration through the hearing of faith as stated in Galatians 3:2, 3, 14; cf. 1 Corinthians 12:13; Romans 5:5.

It should be remembered that the Holy Spirit is not a sectional personality. We do well to confine ourselves to divine revelation. The baptism of the Holy Spirit is not one section or portion, the earnest of the Spirit another, the seal of the Spirit a third, the indwelling of the Spirit the fourth, and so on. These different terms are needed to give a complete picture of the operations of the Holy Spirit in born-again people. Note the following relating to the Spirit in the believer:

1. We are born of the Spirit. John 3:5.
2. We are renewed by the Holy Spirit. Titus 3:5.
3. If we have not the Spirit we do not belong to God. Romans 8:9.
4. We have no condemnation if we walk after the Spirit. Romans 8:1.
5. If sons of God we are led by the Spirit. Romans 8:14.
8. The Spirit of God dwells in the bodies of the believers. 1 Corinthians 3:16.
9. Our bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost. 1 Corinthians 6:19.

11. We are sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise. Ephesians 1:13. The Spirit of promise, we have previously noticed, refers to the baptism of the Spirit.
12. The church is the habitation of God through the Spirit. Ephesians 2:22.
14. We must not grieve the indwelling Spirit. Ephesians 4:30; cf. vv. 25, 31.
15. The cry of sonship is the result of the Spirit in our hearts and is a "birth cry." Galatians 4:6.

What Does the Bible Teach About the Filling of the Spirit?

There is a definite command to New Testament believers to be filled with the Spirit. Ephesians 5:18. The filling of the Spirit is distinct from the baptism of the Spirit, although it occurs at the time of the baptism of the Spirit; and Spirit baptism occurs at regeneration. The Spirit's filling, however, is something that is repeated. There is no more need for the repeating of Spirit baptism than there is need to repeat the sealing, the earnest, or the regeneration by the Spirit. The baptism of the Spirit is a gift, a fulfilled promise associated with conversion. The one exception is the experience of the waiting disciples at Pentecost. The filling is repeated and involves yieldedness and surrender of the Christian to the operations of the Spirit. It is said that God did not give the Holy Spirit to Christ by measure. John 3:34. By this statement we understand that our Lord was so fully yielded to the Holy Spirit that the Spirit could work through Him without any limitations. This does not mean that the Holy Spirit is given in sections or portions as we yield. The Holy Spirit in the believer is the same person that indwelt our Lord, but the usableness and yieldedness of the Christian (as compared with our Lord) places limitations upon the operations of the Holy Spirit through us. Romans 6:16.

The filling of the Spirit is associated with witnessing. It does not mean that the power of the Holy Spirit is used up by a period of witnessing and that a new supply must be received for the next filling. Such partitioning and secularizing of the Holy Spirit is a carnal viewpoint. By filling we mean there is a yieldedness in the Christian for the accomplishing of a certain task in the power of the Spirit; the whole transaction is described as "being filled with the Spirit." Human language is a feeble instrument to express clearly the operations of Deity. This very fact should make all Christians tolerant toward others in their use of terms that may not be strictly biblical.

The filling of the Holy Spirit is repeated. No other activity or operation of the Holy Spirit is thus described. The 120 were filled at Pentecost. Peter was filled after that in connection with witnessing. Acts 4:8, 31-33. The Apostle Paul was filled and refilled. Acts 9:17; 13:9, Stephen and the other six were said to have been full of the Holy Spirit. Acts 6:3, 5, 8, 7:55. Barnabas was full of the Holy Ghost.
The filling of the Spirit was also a pre-Calvary experience for the saints of God in Old Testament times and therefore must be something different from the baptism of the Spirit.
The baptism of the Spirit was predicted in the Old Testament for New Testament times (Joel 2:28, 29), but the filling by the Holy Spirit was the heritage and experience of Old Testament saints. It was for the purpose of special witnessing, testimony, prophesying, mechanical skill, and the recording of Scripture. Exodus 28:3; 31:3; 2 Samuel 23:2; 2 Peter 1:21. The baptism of the Spirit was not needed in the Old Testament because there was no body of Christ into which they were to be baptized. Men of God performed service in the Old Testament times through the filling of the Holy Spirit without the baptism of the Spirit. New Testament Christians need both the baptism and the filling of the Spirit. To the writer this is decisive evidence that much that is ascribed to the baptism of the Holy Spirit today is not sustained by the Scriptures.

John the Baptist’s ministry was the result of the fullness of the Holy Spirit and not the baptism of the Holy Spirit. Luke 3:16.

Elisabeth was filled with the Spirit and spoke without the baptism of the Spirit. Luke 1:41. Zacharias, her husband, prophesied because of the filling of the Spirit, but did not have the baptism of the Spirit.

The Spirit came upon the seventy elders in the Old Testament and they prophesied without the baptism of the Spirit. Numbers 11:24-29. Bezaleel was given mechanical skill by the Spirit without the baptism. Exodus 35:30, 31.

There are conditions involved in the filling of the Spirit. It involves asking. Luke 11:13. It involves obedience. Acts 5:32. It involves yieldedness. Romans 6:16. Certainly all of these conditions are present when a soul meets the conditions for regeneration, and we have noticed that those who were converted in Acts received the baptism and were also filled. Filling by the Spirit is also associated with special needs as witnessing during persecution. Matthew 10:20; Mark 13:9-11; Luke 12:10-12. The very fact that there is need of filling is evidence that one may remain baptized with the Spirit and still not be full or filled with the Spirit.

Witnessing and working for God is therefore to be ascribed to the filling of the Holy Spirit and not to the baptism of the Spirit.

Summarizing the facts gleaned concerning the baptism and filling of the Holy Spirit we may say that the crisis is regeneration and the process is the operations of the Spirit. Both regeneration and the later operations of the Holy Spirit depend upon meeting the conditions. Perhaps we can clarify this statement by listing the following:

A. The Crisis: (Regeneration)
1. Born of the Spirit.
2. Our body becomes a temple of the Holy Spirit — indwelt by the Spirit.
3. We become members of the body of Christ — baptized with the Spirit.
4. We receive forgiveness of sin — the witness of the Spirit.
5. We have assurance of salvation — sealed with the Spirit.
6. We have assurance of inheritance to come — earnest of the Spirit.
7. We can understand the Scriptures — anointing of the Spirit.
8. We are empowered for service — power after the Holy Spirit is come upon you.

B. The Process (The Christian Life)
1. Ability to witness — filling of the Spirit enables the Spirit to use you.
2. Walk in the Spirit.
3. Led by the Spirit.
4. Fruit of the Spirit.
5. Love of the Spirit.
6. Exercise the gifts of the Spirit as He will and we cooperate.

A Problem of Experience

The question has been raised, “How explain the fact that many church members have never given evidence of spiritual power until they sought the baptism or filling of the Holy Spirit?”

One solution is that they were never born again, or they would have had the anointing, seal, earnest, indwelling, and baptism of the Spirit together with the filling. This is an easy answer if the premise is correct. By careful questioning before coming to a final conclusion, it will be possible to determine whether they had been convicted by the Spirit and had responded to the Spirit’s call before becoming members of the visible church. If they did, then they will likewise testify to the joy of forgiveness of sin at the time. Perhaps they stopped here because of wrong teaching, or lack of teaching, or the cares of this life and lust of other things entered in and made the Word unfruitful. In many communities the ideal prevails that confession of Christ, baptism, and church membership is the extent of activity for laymen. It is very serious to try to make a person believe that he was never born again, if he had evidences of being a new creature in Christ Jesus in the beginning of his profession. Someone recently raised the question as to whether there is a possibility of “counting the blood of the covenant whereby he was sanctified an unholy thing” by denying his initial experience in regeneration.

The second solution to this question could be that they stopped growing as “newborn babes” and never yielded themselves to the continuous working of the Spirit; consequently He was grieved with their manner of life, quenched by their lack of desire to testify, and unfruitfulness followed. What they need is revival. They need to “possess their possessions.” A consecration to God, a surrendering to the authority of the Word and the operations of the Spirit of God, will produce in them the invigorated life. This may have the appearance of a new experience for them, but it is not a new life or regeneration. If they had been saved originally, then they were members of the body of Christ through Holy Spirit baptism and what they needed was the filling of the Spirit upon the basis of certain conditions. The Christian’s relationship with God is satisfying when he is yielded to God and the Holy Spirit is free to work in his life and to use him. Such need revival, but not a new salvation experience. Such can truthfully say, “I have Christ, what want I more?” Revival has a place in the program of God. The Apostle Peter wrote, “This second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance.” The three enemies of the Christian—the world, the flesh, and the devil—cool him off and render his life fruitless and weak, but there are lawful and numerous appeals from the Word of God and from the needs about us to stir up any saint from his lethargy if he will give heed.

Concluding Observations

1. The writer has found no command anywhere in the Scriptures to be baptized with the Holy Spirit, likewise he has found no Scripture commanding the anointing, indwelling, sealing, or earnest of the Spirit.

2. There is a command to be filled with the Spirit. Ephesians 5:18.

3. The baptism of the Holy Spirit occurs at the time of regeneration according to the record in Acts in connection with the other operations or functions of the Spirit as noted in the Epistles as indwelling, power, sealing, earnest, and anointing (unction).

4. The initial filling of the Spirit usually accompanied the baptism with the Holy Spirit and with water, but was repeated afterwards as often as needed.

5. While sanctification is ascribed to the Trinity, cleansing and purification from sin whether in a sinner or saint is generally ascribed to the Word of God and the blood of Christ. Without doubt the Spirit is also identified with the application of the blood and the Word.

6. There is no clear scriptural support for the teaching that the baptism of the Holy Spirit is subsequent to conversion, but there is much evidence for the baptism of the Spirit in connection with regeneration.

7. The Scriptures do not ascribe cleansing to the baptism of the Holy Spirit, but as noted above, it is ascribed to the Word of God and the blood of Christ, and the washing of regeneration through the renewing of the Holy Ghost. The renewing is regeneration.

8. There is but one Bethlehem, one Calvary, and one Pentecost. None of them need to be repeated. The baptism of the Holy Spirit was historically fulfilled at Pentecost and personally fulfilled in the regeneration of the soul.

9. There is one faith, one Lord, and one baptism. The faith was once delivered unto the saints. Jude 3. The one Lord Jesus Christ died, arose, and is now seated at God’s right hand, having completed the work of redemption; and the one baptism of the Holy Spirit that came upon the apostolical Christians at conversion and made them members of the body of Christ. When we accept the faith at regeneration, owning the Lord in repentance, faith, and confession, we are likewise baptized into the body of Christ by the Holy Spirit.

Roy L. Laurin says: “I believe that God overlooks unfortunate terminology and recognizes sincere desire and seeking. That which we really seek in this connection is a genuine redemptive experience which the Holy Spirit gives in His manifestation of Christ.

“To some this experience is a second blessing and if you have never had a second blessing then have it by all means; or if you have had the second and lost it, get the third. But in any event what God will give you is the Spirit’s infilling.

“To some this experience is consecration and if you have never yielded your life to God completely, then do it by all means. But in any event what God will give you is the Spirit’s infilling.

“To some this experience is sanctification and if you have never felt the purging, purifying influence of the Holy Spirit then seek it by all means. But in any event what God will give you is the Spirit’s infilling.

This writer agrees with Dr. Laurin that God will overlook unfortunate terminology. But why should we not avoid it and use only scriptural terms so as to establish the saints rather than confuse them?

Living Without Regrets

By Christian E. Charles

It is common for most of us at times to have regrets, and to think how our lives might have been different if we had acted in some other way. One of the most wasteful occupations in the world is brooding about what can’t be helped while neglecting what can be helped.

Regrets are defeats, so rise above them! They generally come so late in life they are of little use. There is but one way to avoid them. That is to do just as near right as you know how all the time. Live up to the light that you have (1 Jn. 1:7). “It might have been” is the cry of defeat, but what might yet be in spite of past errors and mistakes is worth living and working for.

Shed no tears over your lack of early advantages. No really great man ever had any advantages that he himself did not create. When we fill our hours with regrets over failures of yesterday and with worries over the problems of tomorrow, it is hard to be thankful today. If each day we continue to contribute our best in thought and action with no regrets, we never need to fear the future, because what happens to us will in God’s providence be the best (Rom. 8:28). Learn to know how to acquire without meanness. Regrets always carry a sting.
It Happened to Me

By Susan Weber

The following "viewpoint" is my personal testimony of the Holy Spirit’s work in my life.

I don’t mean to give a theological dissertation or necessarily to prove any points, but simply to share my testimony.

I grew up in a good Christian home. My parents taught me to love God, to take all my problems to Him, to pray about everything. My friends, teachers, and older brothers and sisters, were a spiritual inspiration to me. And God Himself led me into a meaningful personal devotion to Him.

But the time came when I faced a question: Was the baptism in the Holy Spirit for me, or had I automatically experienced it at the new birth?

At Lancaster Mennonite School I was taught that the gift of healing is doctors; the gift of tongues is the ability to learn foreign languages easily; the gift of prophecy is teaching. At that time I questioned this explanation because it seemed to me that the Spirit’s gifts would surpass the natural. A man could be a good doctor or learn foreign languages easily without even being a Christian. And prophecy in the Book of Acts was speaking revelations from God, not teaching a Sunday school lesson.

Others teach that because of the teaching of 1 Corinthians 14 (where Paul is correcting the church in their use of tongues) we should not have tongues in our worship services. But Paul himself says, “Forbid not to speak with tongues” and “I speak with tongues more than ye all” and “I would that ye all spake with tongues.”

Everyone knows that tongues are misused in our day. So is sex. Does that mean you condemn its right use?

I know that “tongues” is the point of controversy. You can talk about an anointing or an infilling, and that’s all right. But the baptism immediately means “tongues” — and that is a shunned word. Critics say, “Do all speak with tongues?” (A Bible quote which is interpreted to mean that people in the Pentecostal churches may have the gift, but no one in the Mennonite church!)

I’d like to clarify a difference in the types of tongues. The gift of tongues is the ability to give a message in public with an interpretation. The praying in tongues in private is for personal edification. It is this type of tongues that is linked with the baptism. Those who believe in the baptism as a definite experience apart from conversion, believe that the scriptural evidence is speaking in tongues for yourself, personally. Then it’s up to the Holy Spirit whether or not you’ll have a gift of giving public messages.

How do I feel about this? Let me tell you what happened to me!

During my first year at Eastern Mennonite College this issue was alive. I looked into it a bit and decided this experience wasn’t for me. The second year I investigated the issue a bit more — even went to a meeting in Harrisonburg — where I definitely was not blessed. (Guess whose fault it was!) I remember that on the way home our driver asked how I liked the meeting. I honestly told him how turned-off I felt, but added, “I’m talking like I don’t need the experience, but my devotional periods are nothing to brag about.” “Then you need it,” he said.

A few weeks later my roommate and I heard of a meeting being held on campus about the baptism. I didn’t want to go as I was already dressed for bed, but something (or Someone) changed my mind and I went. I sat at the back of the room, watching the speaker and the other students, feeling critical. After dismissal my roommate lingered to be prayed for. I went outside and up to my room in the dorm.

At that time I was engaged to a fellow I knew was opposed to this teaching. Sitting on my bed, I knew that if I accepted this experience he might break our engagement. But suddenly I wanted God more than anything else. “God,” I said, “I give Leon to You.” I knelt by my bed and began speaking in tongues! After awhile, I wanted to pray in English, but it was easier to keep on praying in this unknown language! When I stopped, I opened my Bible to 1 Corinthians 14 and read, “I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also: I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also.” That was exactly what I was doing.

My roommate came back, afraid to tell me about her experience until I shared mine! We rejoiced together and in the months left for us to room together we enjoyed a wonderful fellowship.

I won’t go into the ensuing conflict between my fiancé and me. It’s a story all its own. All I’ll say is that I often thank God for keeping us together because now we are one spiritually. It was worth waiting and believing for. It thrills me to watch a prophecy that I received from the Lord while at EMC unfold before my eyes.

My husband will be the first to tell you that the baptism hasn’t made a saint out of me. The Christian life is still one of faith and choice: Do I choose to obey the Spirit, or do I want to wallow in self-pity and irritation a while before I repent?

The baptism is not an end. It is only a door opening to new horizons in your spiritual life. I had received the Holy Spirit at the new birth, of course, but the baptism was an added dimension. Praying in tongues helps to open my spirit to God so that the Bible is alive and prayer is a blessing instead of a chore. When I want to pour out my heart in praise, confession, or intercession, tongues is a wonderful release.

Gospel Herald, September 22, 1970
I can’t claim great miracles in my life. I can’t claim constant victory. And I’ve learned the hard way that I’m no better than anyone else—including those who don’t believe in the baptism.

I think the real walk in the Spirit that has opened to me is that it is spiritual. Submission is not just wearing a veiling; purity is not just refraining from sexual sin; love is not just taking a nonresistant stand. But the laws of God become spiritual so that... well, let me explain it this way: We’ve imbibed a teaching that our obedience wins us favor with God. This is one of the hardest obstacles to overcome. Until you realize that there’s not one thing you can do to improve your chances with God, you’ll never know grace. But when it hits you that God accepts you in spite of yourself, you might even say “Hallelujah” out loud. (Let me quickly add that this spiritual walk will be an obedient one; but the obedience will be from the heart rather than a “Here’s the Law. Do it or else” approach.)

Another thing I’m learning is that emotions aren’t reserved for the ball field! I’m not talking now about the church around your corner where one’s spirituality is judged by how loud he can pray or how high he can jump. I’m talking about families and churches who actually praise God out loud and worship Him with uplifted hands—and all the time being decent about it. An open-minded reading of the Psalms will show you that raising your hands to the Lord, clapping, playing instruments glorified Him. How about that?

Did you ever hear singing in the Spirit? It’s not necessarily following the lines in the new Hymnal, but it’s a unique, unpromised harmony where everyone sings from his heart and it all blends. You have to hear it to believe it.

What I have found in Spirit-filled circles (by that I mean people who claim this definite experience), is that there is true unity. Not the modern ecumenical kind where nothing matters, but a unity where people from every background embrace each other and say “Bless God.” I have found these people to have the following emphases: the blood of Jesus, victory over the power of sin, faith, the gifts of the Spirit, and the soon coming of Jesus and the end of this world.

In conclusion let me add that now I know that the gift of healing is the ability to lay hands on or anoint the sick and see God heal them. The gift of tongues is speaking an unknown language in the power of the Spirit for your own edification or, with interpretation for a group. The gift of prophecy is giving a message from God while under the anointing of the Spirit.

I can’t answer all the questions about the baptism and the gifts of the Spirit. I want to grow in this walk and I believe the ideal is for the whole church, in body ministry, to know a personal anointing of the Spirit and to exercise all the gifts. But whatever the arguments, I’ll say I’m glad it happened to me!

Is the Congregation Central?

By Paul N. Kraybill

In pursuing its listening process, the Study Commission on Church Organization heard the voice of the brotherhood on one particular issue perhaps more than on any other combined. This was the question of the role of the congregation.

That the congregation came into focus so often is probably due to one or more of several reasons. The 1969 proposed SCCO model placed emphasis on the congregation as central in the life of the church. Many have a growing conviction that biblically the congregation should be given more emphasis than it has in recent years. Historically there is evidence that in certain conferences at least the congregation played a much more significant role. Many conferences in the early stages were in fact ministers’ conferring fellowships, whose decisions needed to be confirmed by the congregation before they were official. There is a growing eagerness throughout the church for more participation in discussion and decision making. As conferences have grown and spread geographically they became farther removed from the congregation and the resultant remoteness has led to the current eagerness for a new level of involvement.

Congregationalism has been a historic phenomenon associated with certain denominations. Inasmuch as it defined a body of believers, independent, autonomous, and self-sufficient, it has come to be considered by many in the Mennonite Church as an unsatisfactory approach to church administration.

The recent years have brought changes in Mennonite Church life and one of the more significant ones has been the renewal that is taking place at the local level. In the shift away from strong conference authority and leadership there is a tendency toward congregational autonomy as a logical alternative.

The Study Commission in its study and search for a meaningful pattern of church organization has come to the conclusion that the congregation is central inasmuch as it is an authentic meeting of God’s people in a primary relationship. It is a responsible gathering of believers who live in the same community and who share together because they are a part of the local expression of the body of Christ. The congregation, however, cannot allow itself to be independent of larger relationships. It finds meaning as it looks beyond itself and becomes a part of the larger brotherhood. In effect, the denomination never becomes more than the extension of the congregation in these successive stages, rather than an agency which dominates the congregation.

Matters of life and witness should be handled at appropriate local levels as close to the congregation as possible, yet far enough removed to assure broader participation and resource. There will always be the tension of keeping the work of the church close to the congregation and yet removing it far enough to assure broader perspective and the discipline of sharing as brethren in mutual discernment. No congregation should allow itself to become a law unto itself or to lose sight of the world beyond or to cut off the meaningful challenge of brotherly criticism and questioning.

When the Study Commission recommends an emphasis on the centrality of the congregation, it is not recommending congregationalism but rather that church life begin at its basic and most significant spot—the local body of believers. From there life moves out in widening circles of relationship and sharing, with each level representing a broader resource of brotherhood than is available in the previous one. In these widening circles the questions and issues which are discussed are those which belong to the larger group and which cannot be dealt with on the local level. At the denominational level there are always issues of significance and importance which affect the total brotherhood and which should be dealt with in a body that is representative of the total. This body does not become dominant, but rather is the servant of each preceding stage so that it exists to carry out those things the churches want to do together which they cannot effectively do alone.

This approach to church organization leaves no room for "top" or "bottom," nor does it accept the assumption that the denominational leadership becomes a hierarchy. This sees the brotherhood as a unity, meeting together in various contexts each appropriate to the question or issue to be discussed.

On the other hand, there is always the tension between the responsibility of the local gathered fellowship and the need for leadership which goes beyond it. The prophetic voice and the role of leadership are not always in conformity to the gathered voice of the congregation. The church has been given gifts by the Spirit. Any organizational pattern must recognize these gifts and allow them free expression, and yet keep them subject to the testing and weighing process of the brotherhood.

There are unresolved questions which might be asked in terms of the essential location of specific aspects of church authority. Who is responsible to validate the ministry or affirm the existence of a congregation? These are questions to which the brotherhood must address itself as it goes through a period of shift and change in the locus points of church authority.

The Study Commission has sought to symbolize the centrality of the congregation. An original proposal provided for every congregation to be represented in the General Assembly, meeting on a churchwide basis. It is noteworthy that the brotherhood in response rejected this idea as being contradictory to the idea of congregational centrality. It was pointed out repeatedly that a congregation should have the privilege of relating to intermediate stages so that it could deal with appropriate issues at appropriate levels. If the congregation has the freedom to move along this path, it is truly congregational and can match its involvement to the appropriate level of responsibility.

Thus the life of the church finds its base in the congregation and from there moves to the churchwide relationship, rather than the reverse. This centrality of the congregation assumes a new vitality that must become the goal of every gathered fellowship of believers. Anything less than this will result in a house built on sand.

"As I See It"

Readers are urged to submit material on any issue for this column. Maximum of 400 words.

I felt ashamed to be an American on the evening Dr. Martin Luther King was shot. Intensifying my reactions was the fact that at the time I was outside the United States, with a spectator's view of the excruciating event. As I sat listening to a shortwave radio in a Central American village, I wondered in disbelief at the news. The next two days brought more ominous accounts of the convulsions of rioting and looting, news which was beamed not only to me but to everyone around the world. It was an interlude to show the world that we, who were dedicated to bringing peace and love in our own gruesome way to Vietnam, had been sorely failing to accomplish the same goal at home.

I returned home several weeks later, and it was almost as if Dr. King's death had not occurred. There were a few comments about the "terrible looting" and eulogies were still appearing in the newspapers. These were sullen remnants of the tragedy which had been unleashed by hate.

Now, today, two years later, I stand at Dr. King's grave with a friend, a black Southerner. The words engraved on the tomb glow in the light of the flickering eternal flame. "Free at last, free at last, thank God Almighty, I'm free at last." The tragedy of his death becomes poignantly real. I have nothing to say; neither does my friend; we walk away in silence.

As we leave I am haunted by the question. Is freedom found only in death? May we not know a freedom to be ourselves and to share with others, in life? As if in answer to my question, a group of men march solemnly toward the tomb of their slain charismatic leader. My friend tells me they are garbage workers striking to get the promise of a more decent wage. Their signs which read, "I Am a Man," mock my furtive thought that we whites have responded at least in part in the face of the King tragedy. If we still need to be told that a black man is a man, I wonder whether we have gained more freedom in relationships now than we had when Dr. King marched with the garbage workers for the very same purpose in Memphis on the day he was shot by a white bullet. — Mrs. Robert Wyble, Lancaster, Pa.
What We Did at Convention 70

By J. Lorne Peachey

We Felt

We did more than think and study. We tried to feel too. Constantly throughout the six days of Convention 70 we were reminded that few people of the world are as well off as we and that we have some responsibility toward those who are not.

Monday morning Lawrence Hart, a Mennonite minister who is also chief of the Southern Cheyenne Tribe, told us of the plight of the American Indian. On Tuesday Manuela Garcia of south Texas voiced the frustrations of her people, the Mexican-Americans. Bob Lavelle, black realtor from Pittsburgh, Pa., spoke to us on Wednesday.

We also “felt” in seminars which met from 7:30 to 8:30 each evening. Some were about poverty, some about minority groups, some about the problems of peace and war. Others looked at ourselves, our faith, our witness, and how the Christian faith is a revolutionary stance in a discordant world of imperialism. And while these were voluntary, the seminars were perhaps the best-attended of all the activities of Convention 70.

Our “feeling” became even more real with a voluntary fast called for Thursday and Friday morning. About 10 percent of us participated in the fast, which was to help us identify with poverty-stricken persons all over the world. Beginning after supper on Wednesday evening, the fast was broken by a bread-breaking service on Friday morning just before convention ended.

We Experienced

But Convention 70 was more than thinking and studying and feeling. It was living together. The 1706 of us who stayed on the grounds were housed in 16 different motels and hotels. Most of the rest camped across the road from the Lake Junaluska Assembly. We ate our meals in seven different dining halls, the largest serving about 800.

Convention 70 was also playing together. Every afternoon was free for recreation — softball, swimming, hiking, shuffleboard, boat rides, volleyball, Ping-Pong. We took over $3,500 worth of tours to the Great Smoky Mountains, to the Cherokee Indian Reservation, and to the Biltmore House and Gardens in Asheville.

Through it all we made a lot of new friends. Many of us felt like the one girl who wrote on the last day: “I desperately don’t want to leave Convention 70. It’s hard to leave kids you like and know you’ll never see them again. I’ve never had more fun and more meaningful experiences.

For six days in August, 1735 Mennonite young people and their advisers met together at Lake Junaluska, N.C. We came from Oregon and Franconia, from Texas and Lancaster. Some were from Alberta, some from Florida. Most of us arrived and left by chartered bus—38 buses in all lined up on Friday morning to take us home when Convention 70 was over.

We Thought

What happened in the time between when we arrived on Sunday afternoon, August 16, and when we left on August 21?

Quite obviously, we thought and studied together. It was one of the main things Convention 70 had been set up for in the first place: to think together about our relationship to Jesus Christ and our responsibility to share Him with the world in witness and service. The theme of our convention: “Share Your Christ You.”

Don Jacobs, missionary to East Africa, led the thinking in the morning sessions with studies centered around four Bible characters: Moses, Jacob, Daniel, Peter. “He really made these characters live,” one of us wrote later. “For the first time I realized that Bible characters have something to offer to the youth of the 70s.”

We also thought and studied together in TIO (Talk-It-Over) groups. For an hour each day we met together in 150 of them and talked about what we had heard, what we felt, what we believed or didn’t believe. Many of us found these groups to be the best experience of the week, and we shared our feelings more intimately than we had often done before.

Gospel Herald, September 22, 1970
I'm also much closer to Christ."

We made a lot of music at Convention. Perhaps more than any other word Convention 70 was characterized by that one: music. From early in the morning until 12:00 at night there was the sound of a guitar, an organ, or a piano in Stuart Auditorium, or spontaneous group singing on the lawn.

In the public sessions the Hesston College Chamber Choir led the mass audience in singing from a songbook prepared especially for Convention 70. Bill and Ron Moore, two brothers with a great deal of experience in folk music evangelism, sang on Wednesday night. The Rebirth — students from Eastern Mennonite College who sing hard rock, blues, ballads, folk, and gospel songs — gave a concert on Thursday night. And in most public meetings volunteer groups from all over sang and played one or two numbers as their contribution to Convention 70.

The sound was different. Some of us had to get used to the idea of hearing drums or tambourines or guitars in the praise of God.

We Reacted

Many of us reacted positively: "It was the most soul-searching, fast-moving, music-making place I've been to for a long time," one young person testified.

"If anyone is wondering whether the Rebirth is reaching young people, I give my word as a 'young person' that they do reach us," another wrote. "I was very impressed by the things that the Rebirth said and the sincerity with which they spoke. I know that I grew a little closer to the Christ I love through their performance.

Not all were that enthusiastic. A sponsor-couple noted: "While we enjoy folk music, we felt much of it was not too stimulating at Convention 70. At times the kids got carried away and to us it did not seem too worshipful."

We Made Commitments

Convention 70 was also commitment. For some of us it meant a first-time encounter with Christ. For others it was renewal or a deeper commitment. More than 100 of us responded to an invitation on Tuesday night. At least two of us decided to become draft resisters through the candid discussions of our TIO groups. Several of us had our goals clarified for us.

Wrote one: "God must be thanked for helping me make several important decisions about my future plans, i.e., college and occupation. My confusion about these problems was eliminated through Convention 70, and things seem less obscure now."

Tom Skinner, black evangelist from New York, and Dave Augsburger, Mennonite Hour speaker, were the challengers to commitment. Tom spoke on Monday and Tuesday night on the need for a personal relationship with the revolutionary Jesus Christ. Being a disciple and sharing Jesus Christ through a "with-ness witness" were Dave's themes on Wednesday and Thursday nights.

Then the week was over, and we wanted to take it home with us. So we spent over $7,500 in the Lake Junaluska bookstore, gift shop, and snack shop. We also gave $4,346.64 in offerings to be used to pay the expenses of the exchange youth teams between North and South America.

We Witnessed

Finally, we witnessed at Convention 70, oftentimes not aware we were doing it. That black and white could intermingle so freely as they did at Convention 70 was a new one for some people of this part of the South. For a few hotel owners it was the first time they had ever had members of another race in their rooms.

We also witnessed about the Mennonites. Newspaper reporters came and did stories on us, most of them expressing surprise at the modernity of what they supposed was a horse-and-buggy group. Community people attended the public sessions, and a special meeting on "Who Are the Mennonites?" led by J. C. Wenger on Wednesday afternoon brought out over 100 of them.

And we witnessed about youth. "I've never had a better behaved group of young people in my hotel," one manager commented.

"You've had a great bunch of kids here with good spirit, consideration, and respect," another employee of the Lake Junaluska Assembly commented.

It was not, of course, all rosy. No group of 1,700 ever is. There was a long wait for registration on Sunday afternoon after riding 12 to 48 hours on a bus. There was the night a cherry bomb blew a phone off the wall. There were the irresponsible attitudes of a few people concerning curfew, as one girl put it, "and there was the rain that never failed every afternoon when I wanted to play tennis.

"A few times during the week, I was a little disappointed by what seemed to be an attempt to 'catch up with the youth movement,'" the same girl continued. "But I soon learned that it is not my job to judge others by what they say. Rather I must decide if what they are saying is important to me and then love them as persons."

A week with joys and disappointments, but — if what we say is true — for most of us it was a week mostly of joys. We studied, played, and thought hard. Almost all of us made a commitment of one kind or another, several hundred publicly. We all came home "dead tired," as one participant put it. And we came home, "eager to test the utility of the convention experience."

All in all, "it was the kind of week that every young person has a right to experience at least once during his life."

If all of us who were at Convention 70 were together again, we'd give that statement a loud round of applause — just as we did everything else we liked and enjoyed in our six days together at Lake Junaluska.

"What goes deep enough to help goes also deep enough to hurt."
The Middle East Revisited

The U.S. proposal for a cease-fire in the Middle East had just been presented and was being considered by Israel and the Arab countries when the Mennonite Central Committee's 1970 Peace Section study tour departed for a three-week exposure to the Middle East. This was the second traveling seminar to visit that part of the world; the first took place during the summer of 1969.

With this new peace initiative being made, it was most appropriate that the MCC Peace Section sponsor another "peacemaker tour" to this conflict area.

Nineteen persons from Canada and the U.S. traveled through the Bible Lands of Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon, and Syria. Their mission was to listen and observe in an attempt to understand in a more adequate way the cause of this bitter conflict and to consider how reconciliation might be effected.

Thirty or more lectures and briefings and many informal conversations with Arabs and Israelis allowed the study tour participants to immerse themselves into this bitter controversy which has brought Abraham's sons — Jew and Arab — to fight against each other.

Daniel Zehr, executive secretary of MCC (Canada), who participated in the 1969 Middle East tour, led this year's group. The group included persons of widely varied age and of viewpoints representing the broad spectrum of thought found within the Mennonite brotherhood.

Included were a Mennonite bishop from Pennsylvania, several housewives and mothers, a successful farmer from the prairies of Western Canada, a retired couple, several schoolteachers, a journalist, several ministers, a nurse, and a young woman preparing for the ministry.

For most in the tour, the Sphinx and Pyramids of Egypt, the Fertile Crescent, and the exodus of the children of Israel led by Moses were well-known facts of early history. The Six-Day War, the Fedaveen, and the Suez Canal called to mind events of the recent Middle East situation. However, all of the group were ignorant of the intervening centuries of history. Thus it was necessary and helpful to see the antiquities and review both religious and secular history to gain some perspective on the current dilemma.

But in addition to seeing the sights which bring millions of tourists to this part of the world each year, the study tour had an added and unique dimension. It provided the opportunity to listen and converse with individuals representing many different viewpoints. The group tried to hear all of the assorted and contradictory voices; many of these voices expressed frustration, fear, and anger. However, none could be disregarded because all are a thread of an intricately woven fabric that make up the present Middle East.

While listening and conversing were the primary assignments of the seminar participants, occasionally there was that rare opportunity to plant seeds of hope and trust which might germinate and help produce a climate where reconciliation could take place. Conversations were held with Israelis and Arabs from various stations in life, members of the Palestine Liberation Organization, ministers from the Israeli government, and the mayor of Jerusalem, to mention only a few.

Wherever possible, the group arranged to talk with the Christians of the area. These included Baptist pastors, an archbishop of the Anglican Church, and representatives of the Coptic and Greek Orthodox churches. Among these contacts were discussions with the Mennonite missionaries and relief workers in several Middle East countries. The group was impressed with the significance of the ministries being carried on through MCC and Mission Board programs, but unanimously agreed that efforts at reconciliation at many levels should be escalated.

Having had the enriching experience of a study tour in the Middle East, the tour participants have pledged themselves to share with their families, congregations, and communities the insights which they have received. Their hope is that this can help to bring about trust and understanding which is necessary for reconciliation.

Persons interested in having someone from the tour group share his experiences should contact the MCC Peace Section, Akron, Pa. 17501. — Walton Hackman, MCC Peace Section.

Missionary to Ghana on Furlough

Erma Grove, missionary to Ghana with Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, Ind., arrived in the United States on July 24 for an approximate one-year furlough. She is attending the Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Elkhart to complete studies for the Master of Religious Education degree.

Miss Grove, a native of Greencastle, Pa., was first appointed to Ethiopia in 1949 to teach home economics. Her three-year assignment, however, gradually evolved into teaching English. In 1957 she was assigned to Ghana for Bible and domestic science teaching and some instruction in nutrition in the villages.

For the past nine years Miss Grove has carried out evangelistic work in the villages. More recently her work has shifted to leading and promoting Bible study among Christians.

In her village work Miss Grove saw a need for a permanent facility for the Middle school. Each term the children would have to spend three to four weeks building a temporary bamboo school. Shortly before her furlough a new four-room concrete block school building was officially opened.

For the past four years Miss Grove also carried some administrative responsibilities for the mission work in Ghana. She acted as treasurer and secured visas and income-tax clearance for mission personnel.

Board Financial Status Noted

Contributions from Mennonite congregations for the work of Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, Ind., are 2 percent less for the first five months of the current fiscal year as compared to the same time period last year, David C. Leatherman, treasurer, said on Sept. 7. The fiscal year begins on April 1, and Leatherman's report had been prepared through Aug. 31.

Leatherman told the Mission Board's executive committee that expenditures are down 1.8 percent for the same period this year compared with last year. Expenditures were $967,915 in 1969 and $979,637 in 1970 for Apr. 1 through Aug. 31. Contributions for planned program during this period in 1970 totaled $605,252 compared to $618,072 in 1969.

Because of the urgent needs among minority group communities, Mennonite Board of Missions began an effort in 1969 scheduled to run for several years called the Compassion Fund. Leatherman noted that the Compassion Fund had accumulated $76,525 in its first year of operation.

Concern was expressed about evident confusion within the Mennonite Church regarding the Board's contributions request of $35 per member beginning Oct. 1, 1970. The question is being raised how the $6 per member Compassion Fund contribution relates to the $35 request.

Ernest Bennett, Board executive secretary, pointed out that the $6 suggested figure is handled as above-budget giving. The Compassion Fund, he said, is to be used in black, Spanish-speaking, Indian, and Appalachian communities for both General Board and district conference projects that could not be carried out unless these funds become available. Projects are approved by the Minority Ministries Council working in cooperation with the executive committee of Mennonite Board of Missions.

GC Enrollment Up

Carl Kreider, president of Goshen College, announced that tentative registration statistics show that the college’s enrollment of full-time students is 1,167 for the fall trimester.

The number is 22 higher than last fall’s full-time enrollment of 1,145 and is the highest number of full-time students ever enrolled in the 77-year history of the school.

In the freshman class are 321 full-time students, six more than last year. Part-time students number 97.

MCC Relief Goods Shipped

Large shipments of relief goods left the Ephrata Material Aid Center of the Mennonite Central Committee for the piers in Baltimore, Md., and Philadelphia, Pa., during the last part of August. VS-ers Erwin Siemens, Saskatoon, Sask., and Rudy Classen, Beatrice, Neb., both working at MCC headquarters, reported hauling loads on six consecutive workdays. A total of 118 tons valued at $250,000 was sent to destinations in Algeria, Jordan, and Tanzania.

An inventory of goods shipped consists of 22 tons of bedding, including approximately 12,000 homemade comforters and quilts, 9,100 Christmas bundles, 5,700 layette bundles, 2,900 bundles for leprosy patients, 10,000 yards of new material, three tons of school supplies, 8,000 towels, 500 sheets, 16 tons of soap, nine tons of canned chicken, five tons of tomato paste donated by the Carnation Company, 1,800 sewing kits, 17 cartons of medical supplies valued at $3,000, and 14 sewing machines.

A recent letter from Algeria indicates that children’s homes there are especially interested in receiving bedding, soap, and school supplies.

Harold F. Miller, coordinator for relief supplies in Tanzania, writes that the churches there need domestic science centers, and that the more successful projects in these Centers are invariably related to sewing lessons. Ready-made clothing is expensive in Tanzania, and machines are not readily available for the average housewife. Women who attend the churches’ domestic science centers learn to make their own clothes and eventually help support their family by sewing for others. The Singer treadle or hand-operated machines are widely needed and serviced in Tanzania.

The used clothing is en route to Jordan for winter distribution in the East Bank area. Nine thousand Christmas bundles are also going to Jordan as part of the 22,000 requested by MCC staff for distribution there.

“At this time of the year,” said MCC Material Aid Director John Hostetler, “a special effort is made to reduce statewide inventories to assure arrival of goods abroad in time for the winter months when the need is greatest.”

Will Celebrate Anniversary

Penn View Christian School, 420 Cow-path Road, Souderton, Pa., will celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary this fall. Important activities are being planned to commemorate this occasion.

On Sunday, Sept. 27 at 2:20 P.M. the public is invited to attend an open house at the school and a dedication service for the proposed new gymnasium.

At 6:30 P.M., Monday, September 28, a dinner meeting will be held at Christopher Dock Mennonite High School. Following the meal, a presentation entitled “This Is Your Life, P.V.C.S.” will be given, depicting the school’s 25-year history and growth. All alumni, former teachers, and students are invited.

Penn View Christian School, formerly Franconia Mennonite School, serves the Franconia Conference area. Its present enrollment numbers 191 in nursery school through grade eight, indicating approximately a 10 percent increase over the 1969-70 school year. P.V.C.S. has a staff of 10 full-time teachers and 5 part-time staff members. Principal is Miss Kay Fredmore.

Bethany Has Slight Increase

Bethany Christian High School, Goshen, Indiana, began its seventeenth year of operation on Monday, Aug. 31. There are 223 full-time students enrolled in the high school, 2 part-time students, and 8 students from Goshen High School are registered for a German course. This enrollment is a slight increase over last year’s enrollment. The enrollment for each class is as follows: senior, 77; junior, 54; sophomore, 50; freshman, 42.

Prior to the opening of school the 20 members of the faculty and administration met for a two-day conference and orientation. William D. Hooley, superintendent, and L. Wade Bollinger, principal, gave the keynote addresses to the faculty during the conference.

Five new teachers have joined the faculty at Bethany Christian this fall. James L. Derstine, a 1970 graduate of Goshen Biblical Seminary, joins the faculty as a Bible teacher. Prior to enrolling in Goshen Biblical Seminary, Mr. Derstine studied at Eastern Mennonite College and Philadelphia College of Bible and graduated from Eastern Baptist College. Mr. and Mrs. Derstine have spent two years in Voluntary Service and he has served as a minister in the Franconia Conference. The Derstines are the parents of two children: Jodi, age 8, and James, age 5.

Carolyn Horst graduated from Goshen College in April 1970, and is teaching health, physical education, and world history. Miss Horst was employed in the Student Activities Office at Goshen College during her senior year. She has spent one summer at Little Eden Camp and one summer at Rocky Mountain Camp as recreation leader. Miss Horst is from Greenecastle, Pa.

Larion Swartzendruber, the industrial arts teacher, attended Hesston College and graduated from Bethel College in 1970 with a BS degree in industrial arts. He is originally from Wellman, Iowa, and is married to the former Nancy Bachman of Pomeroy, Iowa.

Timothy Schrock received his BA degree from Goshen College in 1967 and the MST degree from the University of Illinois in 1970. Mr. Schrock spent two years in Voluntary Service at Camp Rehoboth, St. Anne, Ill., where he taught at Pembroke Central School. Schrock is teaching mathematics.

Allen R. Peachey is teaching English and Spanish and will also serve as the track coach and the assistant basketball coach. Peachey is a graduate of Eastern Mennonite College and has spent two years in VS in Costa Rica.

Grandma Martin Dies

Mrs. Savilla Frances Martin, Waynesboro, Va., better known as "Ville" to readers of the book, Danne of Cedar Cliffs, died on July 31, 1970. Grandma Martin would have been 102 years of age on Sept. 29, 1970.

The book, Danne of Cedar Cliffs, by Christ- mas Carol Kaufman, is primarily the biographical account of Grandma Martin’s late husband, Daniel Roth Martin, and was published just after his death in April 1950.

However, as is often true, behind every great man is a great woman. Kaufman’s book describes Grandma Martin and her husband so vividly for "their kind and gentle manners and their loving services. There was no night too dark or cold for them to venture out where there was death or sickness or accident" (p. 209).

Grandma’s days were described as “full and often strenuous, but never would she say they were too full or wish to exchange her place with any other. She too sang as she went about her work, and invariably the children would catch the strain and join her. She seemed to have a thousand streams of inspiration to draw from” (p. 235).

Seminaries Open

The Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries fall semester was opened by a service of worship held in the Chapel of the Sermon on the Mount. J. J. Enz, professor of Old Testament and Hebrew, gave the address.

Speaking to the needs of many of those present, Enz asserted his faith that God can and does fulfill His will through the lives of those seeking it, even in time of failure and discouragement. “We must learn to see,” he said, “that the glorious city of God arises out of the ashes of our Babels.

“Of the greater church community,” he continued, “the goal of our activity is not to be disciples in the ingrown sense but to be apostles with a relevant message for the contemporary issues of the church and a needy world.”

This is the thirteenth year in the Association of Goshen and Mennonite Biblical Seminaries. It is the second year in which all activities have been held jointly on the Elkhart campus.

While most of the student body come from the major Mennonite groups, other Protestant groups are also represented. Foreign students this year come from Indonesia, Japan, and Korea.

Called to Integrate Faith and Knowledge

Educating youth within the framework of Mennonite philosophy was the focus of Eastern Mennonite College’s annual fall faculty conference which ended on September 4.

EMC’s program attempts to achieve this objective by combining courses from religion, fine arts, and natural and social sciences in a seven-course series required over a four-year period.

J. Herbert Martin, director of EMC’s interdisciplinary studies program, noted that there is “something unifying in the campus community when more people have something in common at the same time.” He expressed hope for a “community of learning” among the faculty as they cross departmental lines as members of faculty teaching teams.

Martin emphasized the need to integrate faith and knowledge. History is the foundation of this wholeness, he said, “The past is present in the now and man’s nature will not change through the process of civilization or through his own efforts.”

EMC’s science faculty suggested that “survival, plus quality of life for the survivors, are the central goals of Christian effort.”

Truman Brunk, pastor of students at EMC, stressed the need for a greater sense of community among the faculty. “We must realize that we are models for the students and we cannot expect things of them that we do not have ourselves,” he said.

Myron S. Augsburger, president, expanded this emphasis in his concluding address. “Today’s problems call for our best. We are called on to build the kingdom of God—notthing ethnic, nor sectarian—but a church. EMC should do serious thinking about new types of missionary outreach. We have moved into the post-Colonial period and done little that is significant aside from a few programs for youth service.”

He stated a need for Mennonites to unite with other evangelical groups. “We’ve moved over a whole dimension of strength. We have a peace position and social concern to share with them, and they have more spontaneous Christianity to share with us.”

The faculty voted to recommend the introduction of a physical education major to the Trustees. EMC now offers 19 majors.

The college began its 53rd year with its opening convocation on Sept. 9.

Fellowship Group Locates in Atlanta

About one and a half years ago, a small group of Goshen College students started meeting together to search for what it meant for them to be part of the “God movement.” As the group continued to meet together for Bible study, worship, and mutual admonition and discernment, they felt called to stay together as a fellowship and move to an urban environment rather than split up after they graduated from college.

Because many of the members came from Mennonite backgrounds and because much of the impetus for the formation of the small believers’ church-type fellowship came about as a result of a college seminar on Anabaptism, the fellowship was interested in continuing to relate to the Mennonite Church. The question of the draft status of the male members of the fellowship was discussed and members seriously considered the option of noncooperation. By last spring, however, most of the men had registered as conscientious objectors.

In July, representatives of the group met with the Voluntary Service department leaders of Mennonite Central Committee to discuss the possibility of the group receiving the sanction and support of MCC. They had decided to move to Atlanta and desired a working partnership with a church agency for those engaged in alternative service.

At the July 24, 25 Executive Committee meeting of MCC, the following action was taken concerning the group: That we (MCC) recognize the group as they make plans to establish themselves in Atlanta, and that we offer our services in counsel and help as requested in accordance with our purposes and ability to assist. MCC will assist those members of the group seeking alternative service when requested and possible.

In looking for a place to live, the group chose Atlanta because of the educational facilities available, the racial and social climate of the city, and the city and state government situations.

The fellowship focuses its life around the commitment that Jesus is Lord and that this lordship must be proclaimed verbally and through life-style. The members are committed to a continual process of discernment with each other to discover what those commitments mean in their individual lives and their life together. Mutual discernment directly affects the process of their decision making. Instead of each individual trying to arrive by himself at a knowledge of God’s will, the members counsel together, making decisions by consensus.

Their concerns are those of Christians everywhere — war and militarism, nationalism, poverty, materialism and racism in areas in which men and women are oppressed and enslaved. In response to those aspects of American society which alienate and place emphasis on materialistic accumulation and extreme individualism, the fellowship has experimented with a pattern of living which includes sharing of possessions. They maintain two households, one for the two married couples and one for the single men and women.

In Atlanta, initially, fellowship members will be working in the traditional service occupations such as teaching, nursing, social welfare, and probation counseling, as well as continuing schooling and theological training. Some within the fellowship also plan to become involved in peace work, draft counseling, free universities and other experimental forms of education, community organization, and men and women’s liberation.

At least six members of the group are ready to move to Atlanta now. More will join them in December and the rest of the group will move to Atlanta next April.

The fellowship sees the move as a learning experience, as well as an opportunity to serve. Since urbanization is a part of America, 1970, they are seeking the answers to several questions: What happens to a person when he must cope with overcrowding, noise, air pollution, and the other frustrations of inner-city life? Is it possible to live humanely in the urban situation? What are the humanizing and enriching aspects of urban culture? Does a Christian communal group have some distinctive contribution to make to the church?

I-W Reunion Held

Camp Friedenswald in Michigan was the site of the 1970 reunion of men who served in the Fairfield State Hospital I-W Unit from late 1952 to 1954. Sixteen men and their families, a total of 73 people, spent time Aug. 21-23 getting reacquainted and worshiping together.

The Fairfield State Hospital Unit began in September of 1952 when Lewis Good of Pennsylvania was the first man to enter alternative service at Newtown, Conn., and ended in April of 1955 when Vernon Becker of South Dakota finished his term of service.

This I-W unit was comprised of 55 men from the states of Virginia, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Indiana, Kansas, Maryland, Ohio, and Arkansas. These men represented 36 different congregations: 33 were of Old Mennonite background, 3 were of the Mennonite Brethren, 3 were Church of the Brethren, and 16 represented General Conference congregations.

Three of the group are presently pastors: Peter Neufeld (Ohio), Norman Shenk (Pensylvania), and Lewis Good (Maryland). Stan Kreider (Pennsylvania) was one of the few men in the United States who had also served in CPS prior to also doing I-W service time.

In addition to those mentioned above, the following were present for the reunion: Ben Leaman, David Nafziger, Clyde Root, Marcus Rosenberger, Glen Rutt, Elvin Sangrey, and Elvin Weber of Pennsylvania. Alvin Neufeld of Kansas, Glenn Schrag, Illinois, and Dean Berkey and Richard Martin of Ohio.

VS Study Under Way

After 25 years of operation, the Voluntary Service program of Mennonite Board of Missions is undergoing a thorough examination, it was announced recently at the Board’s Relief and Service Office in Elkhart, Ind. The philosophy, present operations, and future of the VS program are receiving major consideration.

The VS study, initially conceived by Relief and Service staff members, is being implemented by two task forces comprised of Relief and Service Committee members who carry administrative responsibility for the General Board’s Volunteer Service operations. A first group is scrutinizing the "basic assumptions undergirding the Mennonite Church’s Voluntary Service program," while a second is concentrating on "new service projects" that should be pursued to meet the changing needs of the seventies. The task forces were appointed during a July 4 Relief and Service Committee meeting at Mission ’70 near Lansdale, Pa.

Basic assumptions committee members are: Eldon King, chairman, West Liberty, Ohio; Newton Gingrich, Tavistock, Ont.; H. Ernest Bennett, Elkhart; Lee Roy Berry, Goshen, Ind.; and Kenneth Seitz, Jr., Elkhart. Personnel considering new program ideas include John Eby, chairman, Harrisonburg, Va.; Samuel Weaver, Harrisonburg; Art Smoker, Scottsdale, Pa.; Atele Beechy, Goshen; and Gene Yoder, Elkhart.

MARS Meets Critical Toronto Housing Needs

In an attempt to seek a preventative approach to the deteriorating housing conditions in their area, the city of Toronto approved a bylaw in 1968 requiring homeowners and landlords to improve housing to meet a “minimum standard.” As a result, many families were told that they had only a certain period of time to get their homes fixed to meet these standards.

Many people in Toronto are physically or economically unable to maintain their homes at the minimum standards. From July 14 to Aug. 1, 1969, a community project called Demonstration on Community Rehabilitation of Housing (DECOR) was established to show that by the use of voluntary labor, houses could be repaired at a minimal cost to the owners. Unfortunately, project DECOR did not last long and many homeowners still needed help.

At this time, the Wood Green, Community Centre and the Mennonite Central Committee (Canada) met with the Housing Standards Division to discuss and plan a continuation of project DECOR. As a result of these meetings, Maintenance and Repair Service (MARS) was established in September 1969 to help additional homeowners. Volunteers for the MARS project were recruited through the Mennonite Disaster Service. Most of the volunteers came from the Waterloo, Markham, and Niagara Peninsula areas.

Nick Dick, project director for MARS, has been quite pleased with the skilled plumbers, electricians, carpenters, bricklayers, roofers, and helpers who have volunteered their time and energies to make this program a success. Unfortunately, appeals for help from the people in the Toronto area have yielded disappointing returns. Only two local tradesmen have contributed their time to help with the project, although many agencies in the area have contributed supplies and materials.

During the first six months, the volunteers completed 10 houses and they are currently working on seven more. The MARS directors draw up detailed specifications on each house they plan to work on to determine exactly what must be done to bring the house up to the city's standards. One house required over $1,100 worth of materials and 610 hours of volunteer labor to meet the minimum standards.

People who seek the help of MARS are expected to pay back the cost of materials and also make a contribution toward the labor if possible. The money for the labor is used to help buy tools, supplies, and transportation for the workers. Some of the people are unable to pay for anything, while others pay as much as they can from their limited incomes. The payments are small but no interest is charged. The city of Toronto has given the project a substantial grant. Individual organizations have also contributed.

On Dec. 1, the MARS project as administered by MCC and the WoodGreen Community Centre will come to an end. "It is hoped that the contributions of the Mennonite volunteers will be replaced by contributions of volunteers throughout the city, regardless of their background," Dick said.

At this time MARS is hoping for union involvement in the program, although the unions have shown little response to date. MARS has also been investigating possibilities through the Canadian Labor Congress. Some interest has been shown by student leaders at the George Brown College of Applied Arts and Technology, but no commitments have yet been made.

Those involved with the MARS project feel that the service they have provided the people has been a means of entering homes and referring the residents to other helpful agencies. Their work has also been a stimulus of new hope for the homemaker who sees little future in a house with faulty plumbing, a leaking roof, and a sagging porch.

New Principal Goes to Beit Jala School

David Osborne is returning to the Mennonite School for Boys, Beit Jala, in the Israeli-occupied West Bank. Osborne served in Pax at the Beit Jala school from 1966 to 1968. Beginning this school year, he will be directing the school program as principal.

Osborne is a member of the Hesston Mennonite Church, Hesston, Kan. Before going into Pax in 1966 he had studied two years at Hesston College. When he returned from Pax, he went on to Kansas State Teachers College to earn a BSE degree in English and special education.

In the summer of 1970 he was married to Sena Miller from Kokomo, Ind. Sena is a member of the Sante Fe Mennonite Church. She has had two years of nurse's training at Hesston College, and will serve as school nurse at Beit Jala, as well as being involved in other aspects of the MCC program in West Bank.

Other MCC personnel presently serving at the Beit Jala Mennonite School for Boys are Robert Moyer, Souderton, Pa., and John Kaufman, Barlow, Ore. Robert is director of the sports program and is in charge of maintenance. John teaches English as a second language to the Arabic-speaking students.

The student body is made up of Arab boys from the West Bank areas of Hebron, Beit Jala, Bethlehem, Jerusalem, Aboud, Gaza, and other villages, plus a few from East Bank. Students for the preparatory and secondary classes are chosen according to their ability and their need. Though the West Bank is a relatively prosperous area, there are pockets of poverty and refugee camps.

The Beit Jala Mennonite School for Boys is located on the highest peak of the Judean range, just beside Bethlehem. Summers are hot and dry. Winter brings rain, wind, and cold that creeps in through the thick stone walls of the flat-roofed houses. Heating is a problem in the winter. Water supply is a problem in the dry months of the summer when water must be trucked in to replenish the huge cisterns for winter rain beneath the building. The school is situated in a grove of fir trees twisted and leaning with the perpetual wind.

The school presently has class space for eighth through twelfth grades. Beginning in tenth grade, the students study commercial subjects such as bookkeeping, Arabic and English typing, business correspondence, English and Arabic language, and related commercial subjects. An attempt is made to prepare the student to run his own business or trade and to support himself and his family.

In keeping with the MCC philosophy, the school attempts to alleviate physical need by housing, feeding, and clothing the students, and to leave a strong Christian witness to the Muslim and Christian boys. There are regular classes in religion, daily chapel services, and evening prayers. The teaching staff is carefully selected to include only those local Arabs who are qualified as educators and as spiritual influences on the boys. Presently the Arab teaching staff includes eight evangelical Christian young men. Boys regularly attend a local evangelical church.

All classes are taught in Arabic. The students are prepared to live and work in their home area and in their own language and culture where this contribution is most needed.

David and Sena will serve three years at the Mennonite School for Boys in Beit Jala. Plans are being implemented to train a local Arab to work with the present North American staff in an administrative position at the school. The Osborne will replace Joseph and Elaine Haines who were unable to return to Beit Jala following illness in their family.

Friedmann-Sakakibara Library to Be Established

Dr. Gan Sakakibara, eminent Anabaptist scholar and historian from Japan, is in the process of establishing an Anabaptist-Mennonite library to be housed ultimately in the Union Seminary Library on the campus of the International Christian University of Tokyo. The large collection of source materials, monographs, and other scholarly works covering the whole spectrum of Anabaptist history and thought will be available to anyone interested in sectarian Christianity.

The library ranks as a significant development within Anabaptist scholarship. It results out of years of planning and hoping by Dr. Sakakibara, who has been interested in Anabaptism since the 1920s and 30s, when he first came across the Hutterites in his study of economic history while in Germany.

Sakakibara has written two scholarly books on the Hutterites and other Anabaptist-Mennonite groups. He has published many articles on the Anabaptists, and is well known throughout America, due to his annual trips to the U.S.A., leading groups of Japanese students into a deeper understanding of the fabric of American life. Dr. Sakakibara believes that the Amish and Mennonites tell outsiders just as much about the nature of U.S.A. as do American parks, city pleasures, and toll plazas.

A breakthrough for Dr. Sakakibara in establishing his library has been the purchase of the Robert Friedmann library, a solid collection of Austrian and South German Anabaptist materials. The library is also to be named in honor of Friedmann, in light of his lifetime of work in Anabaptism, a life and work which came to an end just this past summer.

The Friedmann volumes will serve as a core collection for the library, to which many other books will be added. Some duplicate copies at the Goshen and Bethel Mennonite historical libraries will be sent, but other donated books are also being sought out. Leonard Gross, Executive Secretary of the Historical and Research Committee of the Mennonite Church, is coordinating this extensive project.

Gospel Herald, September 22, 1970
H. L. Swartzendruber, Executive Secretary of Mennonite Mutual Aid, has moved to Kalamazoo, Mich., for the 1970-71 school year. He will spend a minimum of two days per week at the Goshen MMA office plus such other time as necessary to carry on his executive responsibilities for MMA. He has been granted a partial leave of absence. He can be reached at Goldsworth Valley, Apartment T-2, Western Michigan University, Kalamazoo, Mich. 49001. Telephone: 616 344-5380.

Twenty-first Annual Men’s Chorus Reunion at Black Rock Retreat, Quarryville, Pa., Sept. 20, at 2:00 p.m.

Eastern Mennonite High School, Harrisonburg, Va., has a 1970-71 enrollment of 226, a drop of three students from 1969-70. The senior class is largest with 69 members. Juniors follow with 63, sophomores with 38, and freshmen with 35. The eighth grade enrolled 21.

Seven international students from Australia, India, Nigeria, Trinidad, Japan, and Jordan contribute to the interaction at EMHS. This is the greatest number of international students in EMHS history.

The Bay Shore Mennonite Church of Sarasota, Fla., extends a cordial welcome to all Northern people visiting the South during the winter months. We have appreciated the contribution these folks have made in the past to our church program and anticipate future blessing from our fellowship together.

New members by baptism: two by baptism and two by reinstatement at Mountain View, Lyndhurst, Va.; sixteen at Weaverland, East Earl, Pa.

Change of address: Paul T. Guengerich from Harrisonburg, Va., to Nishi 2 jo, 8 chome, Tsukishamu, Sapporo, Hokkaido, Japan 062. Paul Kratz from Box 468 to Box 377, Georgetown, Guyana, S.A. Roy D. Roth from Sileet, Ore., to 2345 Patterson St., Apt. 4, Eugene, Ore. 97406. Tele.: 503 345-1425. Peter Sawatsky from Albany, Ore., to 4200 S.E. Jennings Ave., Portland, Ore. 97222.

Jewel Kurtz, daughter of Somalia missionaries, Chester and Catherine Kurtz, is improving normally after a ten-foot fall on Aug. 28. She suffered serious head injuries, and was hospitalized in Mogadiscio.

J. Clyde and Miriam Wenger Shenk, on furlough from East Africa, will spend the next several months in special deputation work for Eastern Board. From Oct. 19 to Nov. 30 they will be visiting churches and VS units in Georgia, Florida, and Alabama.

Dan and Evanna Hess, Lancaster, Pa., are the new unit leaders at W Street, Washington, D.C. They began a two-year assignment on Sept. 1.

Omar and Lois Stahl returned to Europe on Sept. 11 after a three-month furlough. This is the fifth term for the Stahls; they will be resident at 71 route de Kav, Dudelange, Luxembourg.

Titus Peachey and Maynard Shirk, mission associates under Eastern Board, arrived in Saigon on Sept. 10 and 12 respectively. Their address is Box 991, Saigon, Vietnam.

The Amzie Yoder family are now at home at Apartment 340, San Pedro Sula, Cortez, Honduras. The Honduran Mennonite Church has assigned the Yoders to give leadership to an emerging congregation in this growing modern city. During their recent furlough Amzie was enrolled at the Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries, Elkhart, Ind.

Negash Kebede has been appointed by the Meseric Kristos Church to the staff of Nazareth Bible Academy, Nazareth, Ethiopia. Ato Negash, who had a useful ministry in Menno Bookstore, Addis Ababa, was recently chosen as secretary of the church. Dwight Beachy is serving as Director of the Bible Academy during the furlough of Calvin Shenk.

A missions conference has been planned for Oct. 9-11 at the New Holland (Pa.) Mennonite Church. Jointly sponsored by the Groffdale district congregations and the Mission Board, the conference will draw upon local laymen and Eastern Board workers.

The Levi Hurst family are now at home at 5222, Orange Blossom Lane North, St. Petersburg, Fla. 33714. Levi and Mary are assisting in the Tabernacle Church, St. Petersburg. Jewel is employed by the local rehabilitation society. The Hursts are on retirement from Tanzania and Oak Drive, Ala.

Edgar and Esther Denlinger, Eastern Board home missionaries on retirement at East Brewton, Ala., were honored by colleagues and neighbors on the occasion of their 50th wedding anniversary on Aug. 18. They were given a reclining chair. One hundred and fifty persons called on them at a "drop-in" party.

The LeRoy Petersheim family, on furlough from Tanzania, have moved to 100 Corl Street, State College, Pa. 16801. In further preparation for his work in agriculture and community development, LeRoy has enrolled in Penn State University.

Larry Bardell was licensed and installed as the pastor of the Logsdon, Ore., congregation, on Sept. 6.

Many persons are discovering Mission Investment Loans as an opportunity for personal investment in the mission program of the Mennonite Church. Six percent interest is paid on investments made for three years or longer (or payment on demand at 5 percent). For more information call or write David C. Leatherman, treasurer, Mennonite Board of Missions, Box 357, Elkhart, Ind. 46514.

Be a Christian, a long-playing album recorded by Barbara Sowell of Maywood, Ill., is available from Mennonite Board of Missions, Box 357, Elkhart, Ind., for a $5 or more special contribution to the Compassion Fund. The album includes original lyrics and spiritual themes set to popular television tunes of the day, with instrumental backing by the Behr of EMC. The June 30 Gospel Herald carries additional information.

Veteran missionaries Nelson and Ada Litwiller left Goshen, Ind., on Sept. 2 for a three-month teaching/preaching ministry in northern Europe and Spain. They are sponsored by Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart. The Litwillers would appreciate prayer support for their contacts and assignments there. They anticipate returning in early December.

The Roy Kreider family arrived safely in Tel Aviv, Israel, on Sept. 3 for another service term.

The Overseas Missions Committee is planning its next meeting at Mission Board headquarters in Elkhart for Sept. 22-24. Overseas Committee members are: Mrs. Clifford Amstutz, Calvin J. King, John Koppenhaver, Carl Kreider, Mrs. David Lehman, David Mann, Emerson McDowell, Glenn E. Miller, Paul M. Miller, John H. Moseman, and John R. Muma.

Two Overseas Mission Associates under appointment are still awaiting their visas — Robert Bishop, Doylestown, Pa., who is to teach at the Colegio Americano in Caracas, Venezuela, and Stanley Freyen-

Obituaries

May the sustaining grace and comfort of our Lord bless those who are bereaved.

Gnagey, Esther Cora, daughter of Shem and Nancy (Marner) Swartzendruber, was born in Johnson Co., Iowa, June 3, 1859; died at the Huron County Medical Care Facility, Bad Axe, Aug. 25, 1970; aged 81 y. 2 m. 22 d. She was married to Simon D. Gnagey, who preceded her in death on May 12, 1962. Surviving are 5 children (Mrs. Mary Forman, Mrs. Salina Eberly, Mrs. Nannie Linder, Orie, and Fred), 22 grandchildren, 5 great-grandchildren, one sister (Salina — Mrs. Milo Stutzman), and 6 brothers (Levi, Earl, Frederick, Omar, George, and Herbert). She was preceded in death by one brother (Thomas). She was a member of the Pigeon River Church, where funeral services were held Aug. 29, with Earl Maust and Luke Yoder officiating; interment in the church cemetery.

Kreider, Clara M., daughter of Oswell and Annie (Gochnauer) Hersh, was born near Lancaster, Pa., May 7, 1892; died in the Lancaster Pa., General Hospital, Aug. 12, 1970; aged 78 y. 3 m. 5 d. On Dec. 10, 1913, she was married to John L. Kreider, who survives. Also surviving are 2 daughters (Violet — Mrs. Leon R. Buckwalter and Emma — Mrs. Walter M. Miller), 6 grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. She was a member of Mellingers Church, where funeral services were held Aug. 13, with Harry Lefever and Nelson Landis officiating; interment in the Mellingers Cemetery.

McGhee, Marjorie, wife of Ed McGhee, was born in Escambia Co., Ala., Apr. 15, 1893; died at her home in Pocah. Atmore, Ala., June 9, 1970; aged 77 y. 1 m. 24 d. Surviving in addition to her husband are 2 daughters (Mrs. Mable Jackson and Mrs. Martha Jackson), 3 sisters (Mrs. Alice McGhee, Mrs. Mollie Pressley, and Mrs. Eliza Walker), and one brother (Tracey Rollin). She was a member of the Pocah Church, where funeral services were held with Fred Brown and Paul Dagen officiating; interment in the Pocah Indian Cemetery.

Yutzy, Emery, son of Nicholas R. and Tenia (Hochstedler) Yutzy, was born at Plain City, Ohio, Jan. 3, 1902; died of a stroke while traveling in Berlin, Germany, Aug. 27, 1970; aged 68 y. 7 m. 24 d. On Jan. 8, 1924, he was married to Florence Kramer, who survives. Also surviving are 11 children (Ralph, Homer, Katherine, Daniel, Norman, Ada — Mrs. Levi Schlabach, Lula — Mrs. Robert Thomas, Valentine Paul, Allen, and Esther — Mrs. Kenneth Zeitz), 36 grandchildren, one great-grandson, 5 brothers, and 2 sisters. He was an ordained minister in the Beachy Amish Church, and served in that capacity for many years. He was a member of the Oak Grove Church, West Liberty, Ohio. Funeral services were held at the Maranatha Church, Aug. 31, with Eldon King officiating, assisted by Melvin Yutzy; interment in the Plain City Amish Cemetery.

Zimmerman, Clara, daughter of Albert and Letti (Thornwell) Meekins, was born in Lafayette, Ind., Sept. 1, 1900; died at her home in Secor, Ill., Aug. 15, 1970; aged 69 y. 11 m. 14 d. On Apr. 14, 1928, she was married to Theo Zimmerman, who survives. Also surviving are 2 sons (Eugene and Raymond), 3 daughters (June — Mrs. Frank Buergin, Geraldine — Mrs. Eugene Zoss, and Gladys — Mrs. John Ulrich), 19 grandchildren, one brother (William Meekins), and 2 sisters (Mrs. Laura Davis and Mrs. Emilene Hinckman). She was preceded in death by 4 sons, and one sister. She was baptized in the United Brethren Church, but the past few years she had been attending the Roanoke Church, where funeral services were held with Harold Zehr officiating; interment in the Mackinaw Dell's Cemetery.

Man: Earth's Deadliest Peril

By Robert J. Hastings

Frank K. Kelly recently wrote, "Man lives on a beautiful colored ball, traveling at high speed through enormous darkness toward the fires of countless suns."

But the "beautiful colored ball" which we call earth is in peril. Grave peril. Like Apollo 13 which limped back to earth with dangerously low levels of oxygen, fuel, and water, so that spaceship Earth is literally running out of room, food, air, and water for its burgeoning population, which is destined to leapfrog from the current 3 1/2 billion souls to 7 billion by the year 2000, less than 30 years away.

Alarmist or realist? You be the judge, based on the following evidence, which can be multiplied endlessly:

One of the Great Lakes — Lake Erie — is already dead, the victim of acidic wastes from surrounding industry. Only sludge worms and a mutant of the carp can exist in its murky waters. This once beautiful lake — now only a septic tank — produced 75 million pounds of fish in 1955. No one in his right mind would eat a Lake Erie fish today, if one could be found.

• Sewage pollution in Raritan Bay, New Jersey, infected the clams, which in turn led to an epidemic of hepatitis, with the result that the clamming industry was closed down.

• Not far from Tampa and St. Petersburg, fluorides from phosphate plants affect the bone structure of cattle so severely they cannot support themselves, but sink to their knees.

• The Gulf of Mexico, the dumping ground for two-thirds of the nation’s waterborne waste, could become a dead sea, like Lake Erie, unless remedial action is taken. So predicts James M. Sharp, president of Gulf Universities Research Corporation.

• Airline pilots report that whisky-brown miasmas, visible from 70 miles on all sides, shroud almost every U.S. city, including remote towns like Missoula in Montana’s "big sky" country.

• Almost every other day, schoolchildren in Los Angeles are forbidden to exercise lest they inhale too deeply.

Reid A. Bryson, a scientist at the University of Wisconsin, says, "Our grandchildren may never see a blue sky." A thickening shield of man-made dust is enclosing the earth, bouncing back the sun’s rays, and dropping temperatures around the globe. The dustiest air, the noted meteorologist says, is billowing out of the deserts of northern India and Pakistan, where generations of intensive farming has de-vegetated the land.

• In the early 1980s, air pollution combined with a temperature inversion will kill thousands in some U.S. cities. For the first time, the car census in the U.S. passed the 100 million mark in 1969, and these cars pour 90 million tons of pollutants into the air each year, to say nothing of the noxious fumes from jet aircraft. (It is estimated that a four-engine jet at full takeoff throttle produces the per-minute equivalent pollution of 6,000 automobiles!)

• Smog from Los Angeles, swept east by wind, is killing the majestic ponderosa pines in the San Bernardino National Forest, fully 80 miles away, at the rate of 3 percent a year.

DDT, which is airborne throughout the world regardless of where used, accumulates in the fatty tissues of the human body. The DDT content in the milk of many nursing mothers is already two to six times the amount allowed in milk for commercial sale. A growing menace of DDT is cancer of the liver.

Respiratory ailments are multiplying at alarming rates, such as asthma, bronchitis, and lung cancer, with emphysis leading the way as the fastest growing cause of death in the U.S.

Two Major Causes

The ecological crisis has two major causes: man’s technological skill, and man’s desire to reproduce himself.

The industrial revolution has raised the standard of living, bringing untold luxury, convenience, and pleasure. But technology has given birth to effluence as well as affluence. When we upset the balance of nature, we must pay the price. We cannot endlessly blacktop more parking lots, clear more forests, strip more mines, blanket more land with highways, build more pollution-bathing factories, and raise the heat level of rivers and streams.

"Progress" means that to run our air-conditioners, we will strip-mine a Kentucky hillside, push the rock and slate into a nearby stream, and burn coal in a power plant whose smokestack contributes to a plume of smoke massive enough to cause cloud seeding and premature precipitation in Gulf Clouds, which should be irrigating the wheat farms of Kansas.

is that "Too many cars, too many factories, too much detergent, too much pesticide, multiplying contrails, inadequate sewage treatment plants, too little water, too much carbon dioxide—all can be traced easily to too many people."

Ehrlich compares runaway population to a cancer. "A cancer is an uncontrolled multiplication of cells; the population explosion is an uncontrolled multiplication of people," he says.

The Stanford University population expert sees only two alternatives: slow the birthrate or increase the death rate. Unless we find methods to control births, Ehrlich says, the "death rate solution will find us. He sees three of the apocalyptic horsemens as the ultimate "solution"—war, pestilence, and famine—unless we put a brake on runaway births.

On the CBS program, 60 Minutes, Harry Reasoner predicted that at the present rate of growth, every square foot of America will be used as a cemetery in the year 2470!

Public Reaction

"The great question of the '70s is: Shall we surrender to our surroundings or shall we make our peace with nature and begin to make reparations for the damage we have done to our air, to our land, and to our water?" With these words in his January 1970 State of the Union Message, President Richard M. Nixon set the stage for a massive "Teach-In" on Earth Day, April 22, when on college campuses across the nation, millions debated the question, "Can man survive?" Even the U.S. Congress recessed, since so many of its members were involved.

But for all the evidence that earth is truly a plundered planet, some have shown negative attitudes.

The Daughters of the American Revolution resolved that Earth Day was "subversive" and that reports of an environmental crisis were "distorted and exaggerated."

In a similar spirit, James L. Bentley, State Comptroller of Georgia and Republican candidate for governor in that state, sent out $1,600 worth of telegrams at taxpayers' expense, pointing out that Earth Day fell suspiciously on Lenin's birthday. (Campaign advisers later persuaded him to pick up the tab.)

Several newspapers also took note of the fact that April 22 was Lenin's birthday. The Richmond News-Leader said, "The date was not selected by chance. Here we have a classic example of how the communists pervert idealism and worthwhile causes to their own purpose."

Several industrialists in Georgia, including Glenn Kimble, an official of the Union Camp paper mills in Savannah, have complained vigorously about "hysteria" over ecology. Kimble's plant is the largest of its kind in the world and one of Georgia's largest single sources of pollution, according to William K. Stevens of the New York Times.

By contrast, Sen. Gaylord A. Nelson (D. Wis.) claims that "No administration has understood the size of the issue. It is much more important than space, weapons systems, or the money we're wasting in Vietnam."

What Churchmen Are Saying

Where do church leaders stand on the issue of the environment? Do they feel the threat is real, that it is "hysteria," or that it is irrelevant to spiritual matters?

Sherwood Wirt, editor of Billy Graham's Decision magazine, says the evangelical churches have largely met the problem with silence. He warns that environmental pollution "is a social issue of the first magnitude...yet somehow the evangelical churches have not considered it their problem." Wirt believes that whether the Christian likes it or not, "he is bound in stewardship to take care of this earth until he gets a better one." As evidence, he quotes Numbers 35:34, "Defile not therefore the land which ye shall inhabit, wherein I dwell: for I the Lord dwell among the children of Israel."

At the opening rally of his eight-day crusade in Dortmund, West Germany, in April of 1970, evangelist Billy Graham said the world seems to be moving toward suicide. "We are building gigantic armaments, pollution is destroying our water and air...Despite all technology, more people than ever are starving...Despite modern medicine, various new diseases are sweeping the world. All over the world there is a population explosion and all of these problems are besetting us at the same time."

At their twenty-eighth annual convention in Kansas City last April, the National Association of Evangelicals passed a resolution asking for "every legitimate effort to maintain balance in ecology, preservation of our resources, and avoidance of the cluttering of our natural beauty with the waste of society."

Dr. Cynthia Wedel, president of the National Council of Churches, has warned that "the church boldly proclaims that 'the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof,' but her actions give little credence to this affirmation.

At least one denomination—the United Church of Christ—has established an office in charge of ecology. John Moyer of New York City will head the office in the Board of Homeland Ministries. His goal is to make specific proposals on what churches can do nationally and locally to combat pollution.

In its General Conference in St. Louis last April, the United Methodist Church recognized the problem of population control, and went on record as favoring legalized abortion, voluntary sterilizations, and the two-children family.

And at the eighty-third assembly of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) in Ft. Worth last spring, Donald E. Moore of San Antonio labeled pollution as one of the nation's most pressing problems. He said it is not surprising that where "60 percent of the taxed national wealth is expended on the weapons of death...the remaining 40 percent is inefficient to maintain and improve the quality of life."

And speaking to the American Baptist Convention last May in Cincinnati, U.S. Circuit Court Judge Frank M. Coffin of Portland, Me., called for an "impartial international body" to regulate ecology on a global basis. He said all nations must find an alternate to spoilation in their development of natural resources.

Is the Bible to Blame?

Strangely, some are quoting the Bible as a contributor to the spoilation of the environment. This is particularly true of Genesis 1:26, in which God says man is to have "dominion over the earth." Steven Schomberg of the University of Minnesota campus ministries, speaking at a university Earth Week teach-in, accused Judeo-Christian teaching of leading men to see themselves as superior to nature, with the earth created solely for their enjoyment and use.

Old Testament scholar Walter Brueggemann disputes this interpretation of Genesis 1:26. Brueggemann, who teaches at Eden Theological Seminary in Webster Groves, Mo., says that "to have dominion" clearly means "maintenance of order, i.e., control of the forces which injure and threaten." He does not visualize "dominion" as a license for tyranny or exploitation. "To subdue and have dominion is not a charter for abuse, but rather a command to order, maintain, protect, and care for," he says. The seminary professor cites such Scriptures as Leviticus 24:43, 46, and 53 which warn the slave owner not to rule or have dominion with harshness. He sees in Ezekiel 34:4 the antithesis of harshness: "Strengthen the weak, heal the sick, bind up the crippled. Bring back the strayed, seek the lost, . . . ."

The Old Testament has much to say about personal cleanliness, sanitation, and hygiene. For example, Leviticus 14:8, 9 gives detailed instructions for washing and shaving after illness. Exodus 29:14 tells how "the flesh of the bullock, and his skin, and his dung, shalt thou burn with fire without the camp." Before God gave the Law on Mt. Sinai, He instructed the people to "wash their clothes" (Ex. 19:10).

The blood of slain animals and fowl was to be covered "with dust" (Lev. 17:13). To insure that their camps would be fit for God's presence, the Israelites were instructed to carry a trowel or paddle with them. "When you squat outside" the camp, orders Deuteronomy 23:13 (NEB), "you shall scrape a hole . . . and cover your excrement."

When God finished the Creation, He saw that "it was very good" (Gen. 1:31) and placed man in the garden "to dress it and to keep it" (Gen. 2:15). This does not mean that man is to act like a hog. He is to be a good steward of life's resources. And as Proverbs 13:22 predicts, "A good man leaveth an inheritance to his children's children." If man exploits the earth and pollutes the atmosphere, what inheritance will he have for his children, to say nothing of his grandchildren?

Will Job's prediction come true, that "the heavens are not clean in his sight?" (15:15) Dirty skies are hardly a worthy inheritance for succeeding generations.

The land laws of Israel illustrate a basic principle of man's trusteeship of spaceship Earth. In Leviticus 25:1-23, God told the Jewish people to let the land rest every seventh year. (Any farmer knows how the land is depleted if planted over and over, year after year, with the same crop.) In addition, the land was to lie idle the fiftieth year, which was the jubilee. In that year, all land was to revert to its original owners, and all slaves were to be freed. The price of land and of slaves was set on the basis of the years remaining until the jubilee. Land bought the fortieth year was much cheaper, e.g., than land bought the fourth year. In a sense, the land was leased for a period not to exceed 49 years.

"For the land is mine" is the way God expressed it in Leviticus 25:23. I don't know how rightly the Jewish people observed this law in Old Testament times. I am not advocating a return to the year of jubilee. But this land is not ours forever. To exploit the soil, foul the air, or pollute the water is contrary to God's will, for this, too, is His.

If God numbers the hairs of every person (Matthew 10:30), this tells us of the exact inventory He keeps of earth's resources. God is not the author of waste, of destruction, of negligence. Jesus expected the fig tree to be productive (Matthew 21:19). He condemned the faithless steward who had no profit to show, but had buried his talent in the ground (Matthew 25:25). After feeding the 5,000, Jesus asked His disciples to gather the fragments, which filled 12 baskets. Not only was this a lesson in conservation, but an anti-litter demonstration as well!

John may not have had environmental pollution in mind when he wrote Revelation, but there is an eerie relevancy to 1970 in the words of Revelation 11:18, "... and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth."

"The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein" (Psalm 24:1). Who can say that God is unconcerned with the care of what He has created? And if He is concerned, His children should also be concerned.

The New Earth

The Environmental Teach-In Committee of the city of Milwaukeee has prepared what they call "Ten Commandments of the New Earth." They are worth thinking about, but most of all, worth practicing. Here they are:

You shall live in harmony with all the earth and with every living thing.

You shall return to the earth all the organic treasures she freely gives you.

Do not put greed above duty, nor wealth above wonder.

Do not demand useless things or trade for unnecessary things.

Every man shall have his fair share of the earth and no more.

You shall fight to protect the earth; it is your home.

Be masters of technology and not its slaves.

You shall make beautiful and enduring whatever is to be made.

You shall keep faith with future generations and be wise guardians of their inheritance.

When all this is done, come together with all your brothers and sing the joy of earth.

All Resisters and More

We need those who will openly and fearlessly resist every kind of evil. Every Christian in this sense ought to be a resister. Yet more than mere resistance to wrong is needed. Christianity is creative and positive in turning things right side up. It is redemptive and restorative. And history proves pretty well that it was those who gave the helping hand, who sacrificed in a personal way, and who built bridges of reconciliation rather than tore down bridges who made a lasting contribution for good in the world.

Suspicion soon grows strong that all is not well when one dwells continually on the negative. The carping critic is often one who seeks to cover some personal sin by attacks on other persons or situations. The one who lives by a long list of "don'ts" will never accomplish much in a positive help. The resister, even though against some evil, can so soon become a person pressing for all kinds of ego props for attention with little or no thought of contributing to anyone.

No one can doubt that a negative, reactionary mood is running rampant in our society. The church is also bombarded with the same blasts. To some, being against something is the same as Christianity. Many people measure their orthodoxy by the things they are against. But the world waits for those who are really for something.

So, also, there are some young people who are using every imaginable method to demonstrate their disagreement with society and the church. In many of their concerns they are correct. Yet they often hurt their cause by the fact that they are almost totally negative. They make little if any positive contribution. We know what they are against but not what they are for.

Some are clear in saying what they resist but not what they accept. They are clear on what they don't believe but not as clear on what they believe. They are clear on what they will not do but not as clear on what they will do. They are certain in what they want but foggy on what they give.

Some expect support of all kinds from the very institutions they will not give any kind of support. They may condemn institutionalism and political maneuvering yet unite and put every conceivable pressure on others to get their way. They do not want to be told anything but want everybody to listen to them. They expect others to remain turned on, no matter what they do or say, but want everybody to know how turned off they are. It's rather hard to communicate this way.

Some make every possible use of the establishment's meetings, programs, and equipment while condemning the establishment for having such. They deny to others the very freedom they demand for themselves.

Resisters of all kinds along with all the rest of reactionaries of today could rest assured of much more real support if they could demonstrate more how those who resist wrong help to restore right, how those who resist the present church help build a better one, how those who resist falsehood and sham restore truth and holy living, how those who resist bondage restore freedom to all, and how those who resist evil persons remake such to be better persons.

So one wishes, to begin with, that better terms could be adopted than draft resisters, nonresisters, and all the other kinds of negative words. Somehow we must, if we are to be effective for Christ, catch more of the positive in Christianity. Above all we must demonstrate the dynamic of Christian living and service in the spirit of Philippians 2 and Matthew 5:1-12, 43-48. — D.

Planting and Picking Fruit

A Scottish minister dreamed he saw a new shop on the main street. He went in and inquired what the shop sold. The angel with whom he spoke replied, "Everything your heart desires." The minister said, "I want peace on earth, an end to sorrow, famine, and disease."

"Just one moment," the angel answered. "You haven't quite understood. We don't sell fruit here, only seeds."

Youth has the tendency to want everything and want it immediately. It is inclined to cast aside all which has gone before. It seeks immediate gratification.

Something is to be said about learning from the past. As James McBride Dabbs says, "The past is a powerful source of strength to those who have accepted and conquered it: to those who have not it is a heavy burden."

While few things are more meaningless than words or postures which have long since lost their true authority, nothing is more pitiful than a shallow cry to be contemporary which regards all past findings as useless. Particularly at the present time of rapid change and crisis we ought to be reading history carefully and taking examples for our learning.

Our fathers in the faith do speak to us. Tradition is not the dead hand of the past pressing down upon the living present, but that which our fathers have left us as their testimony as to how Christians should live and think and do. It is difficult to imagine the vacuum we would experience if we had not the fellowship and insight which transcends the time barriers of the generations. Without the planting of those who have gone before we would starve without food. It is our task not only to pick the fruit of their planting but also to sow the seeds which will rid the future of its sorrows and sin and give sustenance for a better life in every respect to those who follow. — D.

A Litany for the Earth, Man, and God

By John Esau

John Esau, pastor of the Faith Mennonite Church, Minneapolis, prepared this litany and used it in the church.

"The great question of the '70s is: Shall we surrender to our surroundings or shall we make our peace with nature and begin to make reparations for the damage we have done to our air, to our land, and to our water?"

— President Nixon

"The earth is emptied clean away and stripped clean bare. For this is the word that the Lord has spoken. The earth dries up and withers, the whole world withers and grows sick; the earth's high places sicken, and earth itself is desecrated by the feet of those who live in it, because they have broken the laws, disobeyed the statutes and violated the eternal covenant. For this a curse has devoured the earth and its inhabitants stand aghast. For this those who inhabit the earth dwindle and only a few men are left."

Isaiah 24:3-6

"The problems of nuclear warfare, of population, of the environment, are impending planetary disasters. We are in trouble as a species. We are seized by a kind of paralysis of the will. It is like a waking nightmare."

— John Gardner

For everything its season, and for every activity under heaven its time:
a time to be born and a time to die;
a time to plant and a time to uproot;
a time to kill and a time to heal;
a time to pull down and a time to build up;
a time to weep and a time to laugh;
a time for mourning and a time for dancing;
a time to scatter stones and a time to gather them;
a time to embrace and a time to refrain from embracing;
a time to seek and a time to lose;
a time to keep and a time to throw away;
a time to tear and a time to mend;
a time for silence and a time for speech;
a time for love and a time to hate;
a time for war and a time for peace."

Ecclesiastes 3:1-8

"Another ready assumption is that nature is endlessly bountiful. In fact the supply of both land and resources is finite. 'We've already run out of earth, and nothing we can do will keep humankind in existence for as long as another two centuries.'"

— TIME and Martin Litton

God is our shelter and our refuge, a timely help in trouble; so we are not afraid when the earth heaves and the mountains are hurled into the sea, when its waters seethe in tumult and the mountains quake before his majesty."

Psalm 46:1-3

"The essential cause of environmental pollution is overpopulation, combined with an excessive population growth rate . . . antipollution measures can be used temporarily, but so long as the central problem is not solved, one can expect no lasting success."

— Jon Breslaw

"The point then is not how many people one can feed on this planet, but what population can best fulfill human potentialities. One is interested not in the quantity but in the quality of human life. From that point of view the world is probably already overpopulated."

— George Wald

"I will increase your labour and your groaning, and in labour you shall bear children. You shall be eager for your husband, and he shall be your master."

Genesis 3:16

Although the United States contains only 5.7 percent of the world's population, it consumes 40 percent of the world's production of natural resources. In 70 years of life, the average American uses 26 million gallons of water, 21,000 gallons of gasoline, 10,000 lbs. of meat, 28,000 lbs. of milk and cream."

— TIME

"The earth is the Lord's and all that is in it, the world and those who dwell therein."

Psalm 24:1

"Every day we produce 11,000 calories of food per capita in the United States. We need only 2,500 calories."

— Barry Commoner

"The earth is the Lord's and all that is in it, the world and those who dwell therein."

"The result of massive production is massive filth. Every year, Americans junk seven million cars, 100 million tires, 20 million tons of paper, 28 billion bottles, and 48 billion cans."

— TIME

"The earth is the Lord's and all that is in it, the world and those who dwell therein."

"Lake Erie is dead. The beaches at Santa Barbara are deserted. The air in New York is dangerous to breathe. We are drowning in a sea of swill."

— Robert Heilbroner

"The earth is the Lord's and all that is in it, the world and those who dwell therein."

"If you wanted to design a transportation system to waste the earth's energy reserves and pollute the air as much as possible, you couldn't do much better than our present system dominated by the automobile."

— Garrett De Bell

"Coming into this new knowledge which proves so distressing—that our dearest companion, the automobile, is completely incompatible with our health and well-being—how long will we cling to it in this embrace of death?"

— Robert Rienow

"The earth is the Lord's and all that is in it, the world and those who dwell therein."

"Each year the United States alone paves over 1,000,000 acres of oxygen-producing trees."

— TIME

"The earth is the Lord's and all that is in it, the world and those who dwell therein."

A recent scientific analysis of New York City's atmosphere concluded that a New Yorker on the street took into his lungs the equivalent in toxic materials of 38 cigarettes a day."

— Robert Rienow

"The earth is the Lord's and all that is in it, the world and those who dwell therein."

"According to the Food and Drug Administration, at least 800-1,000 people die each year from pesticide poisoning and another 80,000-90,000 people are injured from these chemicals. There have been massive kills of fish, birds, and beneficial insects. But worse yet will be the slow but increased number of human deaths caused by the carcinogenic, mutagenic, and teratogenic effects of chemicals like DDT or 2,4,5-T after a lifetime of exposure."

— Steven H. Wodka

"Because you have listened to your wife and have eaten from the tree which I forbade you, cursed shall be the ground on your account. With labour you shall win your food from it all the days of your life. It will grow thorns and thistles for you, none but wild plants for you to eat. You shall gain your bread by the sweat of your brow until you return to the ground; for from it you were taken. Dust you are, to dust you shall return."

Genesis 3:17-19

"We are naturally concerned with the unpleasant effects that the environmental crisis has for us in the here and now, but these are trivial when compared with the distant effects that it will have on the human beings who are being exposed to it throughout their development."

— Rene Dubos

"Never again will I curse the ground because of man, however evil his inclinations may be from his youth upwards. I will never again kill every living creature, as I have just done. While the earth lasts seedtime and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter, day and night, shall never cease."

Genesis 8:21, 22

"If the present excitement about the environment is to produce more than emotion, platitudes, and attempts to take us back to the good old days when the poor knew their place, it will have to stimulate us to an analysis of social dynamics both more realistic and more appealing than any we now possess."

— Kenneth Boulding

"Thou dost visit the earth and give it abundance.

Gospel Herald, September 29, 1970
as often as thou dost enrich it with the waters of heaven, brimming in their channels, providing rain for men.
For this is thy provision for it, watering its furrows, levelling its ridges, softening it with showers and blessing its growth.
Thou dost crown the year with thy good gifts and the palm-trees drip with sweet juice;
the pastures in the wild are rich with blessing and the hills wreathed in happiness, the meadows are clothed with sheep and the valleys mantled in corn.
so that they shout, they break into song."—Psalm 65:9-13

"What we do about ecology depends on our ideas of the man-nature relationship. More science and more technology are not going to get us out of the present ecologic crisis until we find a new religion, or rethink our old one.”
—Lynn White, Jr.

"For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth.
Former things shall no more be remembered nor shall they be called to mind.
Rejoice and be filled with delight, you boundless realms which I create;
for I create Jerusalem to be a delight and her people a joy.”–Isaiah 65:17, 18

"The Lord is my shepherd; I shall want nothing.
He makes me lie down in green pastures, and leads me beside the waters of peace;
he renews life within me, and for his name’s sake guides me in the right path.”
—Psalm 23:1-3

"The battle of the environmentalists is to preserve the physiological integrity of people by preserving the natural integrity of land, air, and water. The planet earth is a seamless structure with a thin slice of sustaining air, water, and soil that supports almost four billion people. This thin slice belongs to all of us, and we use it and hold it in trust for future earthlings. Here we must take our stand.”
—Ralph Nader

"Then I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth had vanished, and there was no longer any sea. . . . Then he showed me the river of the water of life, sparkling like crystal, flowing from the throne of God and of the Lamb down the middle of the city’s street. On either side of the river stood a tree of life, which yields twelve crops of fruit, one for each month of the year; the leaves of the trees serve for the healing of the nations.”
—Revelation 21:1; 22:1-3

Missions Today

A Case for Community Churches

By Vern Miller

For 12 years I have seen firsthand what Christians can do when they work together. Baptists, Mennonites, Methodists, and assorted other "brands" comprise the Lee Heights Community Church in Cleveland, Ohio. We decided at the outset that our relationship to Christ should hold supreme importance.

When Christians in a given community unite around a common cause competition is reduced. Perhaps in the past some competition has been good. Too many churches, however, do not produce "fishers of men." About all they succeed in doing is stealing from each other’s aquariums. Christians united can stress one theme: "God loves you and cares for you regardless of your need!" No one has to waste time defending a particular sect or confuse proselytizing with evangelism.

The community church eliminates "class congregations" and "ethnic cliques," that is if it stands on the proposition that it serves all men equally regardless of color, income, or affiliation. It serves members as well as nonmembers. Its facilities are open and available for community use. Here is a church that truly cares for all!

Denominations are bad not only because they are outdated.
These "accidents of history" are also condemned by Scripture. Granted they are divisive, competitive, and sectarian.
But the clincher is that they never should have begun in the first place. (See 1 Corinthians 3:1-7; Galatians 2:11-15; and Romans 14.) For "from the beginning it was not so" aptly characterizes these clear passages.

Perhaps the most overt force that undergirds the divided church is the tendency to uphold the status quo. I suggest that denominations begin no more sectarian churches but rather unite in forming neighborhood churches. The community church, cooperatively sponsored, can spark the beginning of a serious movement back to Christian unity. As long as Christ is at the center there is nothing to fear and everything to be gained — including new credibility for the Western church.

Perhaps one day black and white, rich and poor, Protestant and Catholic can be welded into one redeemed body. "One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of us all."

Vern Miller is pastor of the 251-member Lee Heights Community Church in Cleveland, Ohio.

The overseas missionary directory appears twice each year—in the last issues of Gospel Herald for March and September. Included on this list are missionaries of all boards of the Mennonite Church.

For your convenience the directory may be lifted off the staples and inserted in your personal devotional material, or in your correspondence folder.

Postage rates are included on the last page. Write to your missionaries, and above all, pray for them.

With the sizable number of overseas missionaries and constant movement of missionary personnel, it may happen that these addresses will be changed toward the end of this list's use. Gospel Herald attempts to keep these changes clear in its Church News pages.

The numerous names make it difficult to pray meaningfully for them, but if you keep the directory handy as you read mission news or prayer requests in Gospel Herald, you will be able to pray for those in the country and circumstances you are reading about, and by name. Perhaps more than anything else, those whom we send out as a church appreciate our prayer support.

Additional copies of this list are available at no charge from Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, Elkhart, Indiana 46514.

Dear Mennonite Parent,

I just spent a week living intimately with your children at Lake Junaluska. Thought you may be interested in knowing how I felt about it. I'm in your class, 42 years old, bifocals, thinning hair, and the rest. And I'm on your side of the communications gap. When I was asked a few months ago to lead the Bible studies at the MYF Convention I felt like playing the turtle and forget it. But God wouldn't allow that.

But why me, I don't know their language. And I don't look like they look. When they see a 42-year-old father with short hair and a white shirt whose language is twenty years old stand up to, of all things, "conduct the Bible studies" only a small miracle will keep them from turning me off. I did not find the idea very appealing. But God whispered some kind of words to me which I knew meant, "You're just afraid of failure." He was exactly right and so I went to Convention 70 ready for about anything.

Jesus Driving

The first night Dave Augsburger and I did a little dialogue, sort of an ice breaker, before all those youth who were lined up on the other side of the communications gap. I couldn't find words. I was shaking. After it was all over and I was walking to the hotel I confessed to a fellow who was walking next to me that I felt like 94 years old up there. Then he bowed me over. "That's how you came through to us, too," he replied.

So there, Lord, how's that for failure? I had it. When I got up to my room I knew that I couldn't do it but I knew one thing — Jesus could — so I gave up my seat from behind the wheel and bowed out. Jesus graciously scooted over and took the controls.

From there on the week was one of the best I've ever spent. I felt that Jesus was putting life into the Bible studies and that the kids were getting what I was trying to say. And I could feel them respond. I never can get over the way the Holy Spirit gets through in spite of the gaps and barriers which keep generations and tribes apart. And every time this happens I am humbled until my knees melt.

No Spirit Gap

I communicated in the Spirit with your children. And they responded to the same Spirit that I responded to. At least at this level we understood one another. This itself was an exhilarating experience and I began not to notice bare feet and frayed jeans. And I began to feel something of what they were experiencing in their music. And by the way, the music was the pegboard on which almost everything was hung at Convention 70. While the music was not as specific as I would have wished, it did make sense to me.

To move graciously between "Christian rock" and "Rock of Ages" is not easy except "in the Spirit." What I am saying is when I dropped my defences and began to love the youngsters for who they were, then those symbols of the generation gap faded in significance. There may be a generation gap but there is no Spirit gap, and it is precisely in the area of the Spirit that we met.

You ask, "Yes, they are Christians, but are they Mennonite?" I hardly know how to handle that one. By their responses in meetings it is clear that they are acutely aware of a conflict between Christian discipleship and the spirit of the age, especially as it has to do with nationalism and materialism. They are as clear on this point if not more clear, than my generation.

I suppose right now this generation is looking for a way to express their separation from the age, maybe it's already here in VS, a more simple style of living, or, in a few, perhaps in noncompliance in draft or war taxes. They've got the idea even though they have not symbolized it as well as, say the CPS-ers, or the regulation garb movement. Is this new generation Mennonite? I think they are.

Not everything went right at Lake Junaluska. I suppose there will always be a fringe on every group who must go along for the ride and then they don't enjoy the ride or what goes on when they get there either, so they flake off, bait the cops, and make a general nuisance of themselves. There were a few of these, to be sure, but their effect on the group was practically nil.

I am writing this in Europe on my way back to Kenya — home. It was a good summer in the States. I learned quite a few new things about myself and others — helpful things. But that week at Convention 70, just stands out like Jungfrau here in Switzerland. I honestly feel warm inside when I think of it. (Somehow I feel that is not the adult way to say it but I think you know what I mean.)

Why should that be? I think it was because I entered into the world of your children and found Jesus there. I found myself loving them and found them responding to me. And for one of Jesus' missionaries what greater joy could there be! After all, this is what life is all about for me. I share this with you for your encouragement.

Items and Comments

Both "liberals" and "conservatives" are among the dropouts in the ministry, according to a study conducted by the United Methodist Church in the Alabama-West Florida Conference.

Dr. Robert L. Wilson, research director for the denomination's Board of Missions' National Division, disclaimed the generally accepted idea that the only dropouts were "young, liberal clergymen" leaving a "hopelessly conservative" church.

The Alabama study showed that the church's losing ministers from both conservative and liberal ranks. The common factor in both groups was that all have "a fairly rigid view of what the church ought to be," Dr. Wilson explained.

"When reality does not coincide with their views, they are unable to adjust and they move into another career."

"Please forgive me. God has."

This note accompanied one check among hundreds of thousands of "conscience money" payments received by the treasurer of the United States. Since 1811, over $3 million has come in from citizens wanting to make themselves more honest.

An Ohio Baptist minister recently mailed Treasurer Dorothy Elston $50 to pay for items he had stolen from the Army years ago. An ex-Navy man, who said he took some tools during World War II, wrote to say he had figured out from a catalog the value of the tools came to $120, which he enclosed.

The money sent in ranges from pennies to thousands of dollars, and in myriads of ways accompanying explanatory letters indicate the remitters' consciences won't give them peace of mind until they make amends.

The Upper Room, the world's most widely used daily devotional guide, is currently making an appeal for meditations from writers whose ages are under 30, to be submitted by Sept. 1, 1971.

Russell Q. Chilcot, managing editor said, "We are really inviting the youth of the world to write meditations because the Upper Room reaches readers in 120 countries."

Homefront recently listed characteristics of extremism.

1. -- Extremists live in "closed rooms." They read their books; listen to their leaders; refuse to consider arguments from the outside world.

2. -- They take orders gratefully. None of this democracy stuff. Let those up front set the line. They imitate.

3. -- All evil flows from a "conspiracy." They are a part of a group being persecuted by that "conspiracy." It is responsible for everything that goes wrong.

4. -- They are "ideologues." Your problem had well better fit their solution.

5. -- They are fighting a "holy war." They are so sure they are right that their ends justify their sometimes sinister means.

6. -- They rewrite history and news. Everything must fit into their pattern. Outside news media are always corrupt so they develop their own.

7. -- They must control or discredit. You can't have "outside" groups producing evidence which refutes the "true" facts, stimulates "incorrect" attitudes.

8. -- They are haters, not lovers. They are not really "for" much of anything, but they "know" where to assign blame, and how to vent their spleen.

9. -- They feed on whipping boys. They must have those they feel superior to and can rally against. Racism, however, subtle, and/or character assassination are standard characteristics.

10. -- They must change systems. Pragmatic answers to problems are never considered. Out with the old; in with the new.

11. -- They work behind camouflage. They set up front groups. They keep their membership rosters secret, and their motives obscured.

12. -- Their movement yearns for power. It shows a group-sense of self-interest. Are these extremists of the far left or far right? The answer: Both. At both extremes, people act the same. It isn't so much what they believe as how they believe it.

Because a state supreme court decision in December opened the way to tax some church property, county assessors have put back on tax rolls certain summer camps, parking lots, and church buildings.

The state of church appeals stems from the court's decision denying tax exemption to the Warm Beach Camp and Conference Center of the Pacific Northwest Conference, Free Methodist Church. Because of that, it is probable that every church-owned facility, other than sanctuaries and parsonages, will come under the scrutiny of county tax assessors.

Even the church buildings may not escape — if they are used for purposes other than worship, such as day-care centers.

A British evangelist has attributed his country's increasing suicide rate to witchcraft and other occult practices.

Dr. Eric Hutchings, visiting Toronto to speak at the Evangelical People's Church, said Britain has been invaded by demons.

"Your craze here is drugs," said the preacher. "In Britain it's demons. How it has all happened or why I don't know. Perhaps we turned God out of England. Only seven out of every 100 people still go to church."

Dr. Hutchings said he thought "all the churches in England have failed" but he had no explanation as to why.

The clergyman claimed to have converted only one witch to Christianity, though he said many "witch possessed" people came to his crusades.

The 1970s will be the "decade of the large Sunday school," according to a prediction made by Elmer Towns, Sunday school editor of Christian Life magazine.

In the third annual survey of large U.S. Sunday schools, published in the August issue of the monthly publication, Mr. Towns reported that the 75 biggest Sunday schools in America increased their weekly attendance more than 10,000 over last year.

"There seems to be no secret or 'inside' information that causes these Sunday schools to grow," he said, adding:

"They simply apply the New Testament pattern of soul winning, prayer, teaching the Word of God, and constant revival. They are led by an aggressive, gifted pastor, who heads up a militant program of evangelism."

The FBI is continuing to tap the telephones of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC) and of "just about anyone who stands up for justice in this country today," Ralph David Abernathy charged.

The successor to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., as SCLC president responded to questions about FBI taps on Dr. King's phone conversations in 1963. The issue was raised by an article in the Aug. 10 issue of Time magazine.

Asked how he knew phones were tapped, Mr. Abernathy said: "You just pick up the telephone. You don't have to be a Philadelphia lawyer to know that someone is listening."

The Baptist clergyman added that the SCLC had nothing to hide. "We have the right to stand up and fight for those rights which are guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States. We will continue to move forward in spite of these acts (of wire tapping)."
Hurricane Rebuilding Under Way

The Mennonite Disaster Service rebuilding operations in Corpus Christi, Texas, are under way to help victims affected by the Aug. 3 Hurricane Celia. Over the Labor Day weekend three volunteers flew from Lancaster, Pa., to Texas by private plane. Another group from Pennsylvania went in a camper, and a carload from Indiana was to arrive in Texas the first week of September. Kansas and Virginia MDS units worked in Texas the week earlier.

The American Red Cross has applications for help from over 25,000 families, many of whom need help in repairing and rebuilding their homes. The Red Cross has already spent several million dollars in emergency assistance and expects this figure to reach 10 million dollars by the time the south Texas communities have recovered from the hurricane.

The need for help arises at a time when farm work is particularly heavy in most Mennonite communities. The immediate post-disaster response was made by Kansas and Oklahoma Mennonites, who expect to return to the disaster after the completion of wheat planting. Manitoba and Ontario units are also lining up volunteers for a later date. In the meantime, small units volunteering from MDS Regions I and II will attempt to help the most needy families recommended by the Red Cross.

The Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities has temporarily loaned Ralph King, a Voluntary Service leader, to the operations in Texas. Volunteers are presently staying in homes in Robstown and Corpus Christi. During the last week in August they worked on homes in Robstown, Mathis, and Corpus Christi. The eye of the hurricane passed through Aransas Pass, north of Corpus Christi. Many homes in this area need repairs. MDS men hope to find a center there from which to operate. Many people will need help until winter and it is hoped that volunteers and emergency funds will be available to sustain the operation that long.

Early investigations and responses to the hurricane were handled by MDS Region III director, Marvin Hostetler of McPherson, Kan. The first volunteers came from Kansas and as other states contributed to the work, Hostetler asked that the Akron, Pa., office of MDS secure help from the other regions and coordinate the program from Akron. Delmar Stahl was in Corpus Christi Sept. 9-12 to plan the ensuing program with Ralph King and local pastors and to establish goals as to the volume of work to undertake and number of volunteers to secure.

All volunteers wanting to go to Texas should contact their regional MDS director who will report the arrival time of each group to the coordinator's office.

Hershey to Direct Minority Education Program

Lynford Hershey, formerly of Lincoln City, Ore., began an assignment on Sept. 14 as Director of Minority Ministries Education. His office is located at Mennonite Board of Missions headquarters in Elkhart, Ind.

Hershey’s assignment, initially conceived by the Minority Ministries Council of Mennonite Board of Missions and the Office of Social Concerns Committee of Mennonite General Conference, will focus on improving racial attitudes within the Mennonite constituency. Hershey will meet with district conference personnel and individual congregations who want to understand the dynamics and prevailing moods of minority communities. The program is operating under the direction of the Minority Ministries Council and its executive secretary, John Powell.

While much of his assignment will be shaped by actual experience, Hershey envisions making personal congregational contacts, planning exposure tours and seminars, and writing articles for church journals to initially promote the minority education program across the Mennonite Church.

Originally from Paradise, Pa., Hershey spent the past 4 1/2 years as program director at Drift Creek Camp, a facility near Lincoln City primarily serving members of Pacific Coast Conference. From 1961 to 1966 he pastored the Tenth Street Mennonite Church, an interracial congregation in Wichita, Kan.

Hershey and his wife, Jennie, from Lebanon, Ore., were instrumental in starting a Voluntary Service unit in Portland, Ore., where they served as program directors for three years before moving to Wichita.

The Hersheys have five children—Mark, 11; Dannie, 10; Terry, 9; Ronnie, 7; and Lynette, 4—and reside at 114 Cleveland Ave., in Elkhart.

On Aug. 28, 1969, while serving at Drift Creek, Hershey was severely burned when sparks ignited a generator he was repairing. He underwent extensive skin graftings and spent two months in the hospital and eight months in convalescence before successfully recovering. A report of the accident in Gospel Herald drew letters of concern and prayer support from across the Mennonite Church.

Persons wishing to obtain Hershey’s services or to learn more about the Minority Ministries’ racism education program should write directly to him at Box 370, Elkhart, Ind. 46514.

Board Appoints Sixteen

Sixteen persons were appointed for overseas mission service by the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions on Sept. 9.

Fourteen missionaries were reappointed: Dorothy Sauder, to Honduras; LaMar and Kathryn Stauffer, to Honduras; Paul Z. and Ella Martin, to British Honduras; Omar and Lois Stahl, to Luxembourg; Don and Anna Ruth Jacobs, to Kenya; Nezin and Barbara Krajcik, to Tanzania; Velma Eshleman, to Tanzania or Somalia; J. Paul and Erma Lehman, to Ethiopia.

Board Chairman Lloyd Eby made the appointments. Board members Adam Martin and Elmer Leaman followed with prayer in their behalf.

Labels Are Deceiving

The Canadian Congress on Evangelism may well mark several significant points in Canadian church history.

About 50 Mennonite delegates attended this five-day meeting, Aug. 24-28 at Ottawa. Some 600 delegates were present to represent 46 Canadian church-groups. Never before has such a representative church body met in Canada.

Things got off to a slow start, but it appeared to this delegate, that some historical developments did develop.

Theological labels will have to be revised. Again and again, speakers would try to clarify what they meant by “evangelical.” Some people spoke of “fundamental” evangelical; others of “conservative” or “liberal” evangelical. Finally, one speaker declared that these adjectives are all “nonsense.”
Somewhere, evangelicals had to face rather dramatically that one theological position is not universally accepted by evangelicals to mean the same thing.

Ecclesiastical labels are also due for re-evaluation. In times past, we seemed comfortable with the assumption that mainline churches like the Anglicans, United Church of Canada, and Roman Catholic were generally "liberal." Churches like the Mennonite Brethren, Evangelical Baptist, Alliance, etc., were assumed to be generally "conservative.

At the Canadian Congress, some of the most radical dissent came from within the "conservative" groups. And some of the most striking testimonies of "Early Church Acts" style of evangelism came from "liberal" groups.

Most of the 600 delegates stayed at one hotel. Roommates usually consisted of people from distinctly different denominational backgrounds. Many people were surprised to find how much they had in common with each other.

Early morning prayer meetings were frequently spearheaded by people who weren't even expected to attend such functions.

Films to Portray Latin-American Church

Harold Weaver, Elkhart, Ind., began a two-month assignment on Sept. 16 on behalf of five Mennonite Church agencies that are cooperatively producing three 15-minute motion pictures as the basic input for the 1971 mission study theme, "The Church in Latin America." Weaver is director of the Audiovisual Department at Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities.

Ken Anderson, Winona Lake, Ind., is writer and producer for the Latin America film trilogy. Film team members accompanying Weaver are Roy Martin of Elkhart as cinematographer and Heinz Fussle of Ken Anderson studios as director. Martin, who terminated employment with Mennonite Board of Missions on Sept. 1, is being employed by Ken Anderson on a free-lance basis.

Honduras, Colombia, and Brazil were chosen as film sites in an effort to present a representative rather than a comprehensive picture of missions and church life in Latin America. Concerns that are common to both North and South American Christians will receive major emphasis in all three films.

Martin and Fussle are scheduled to complete their filming itinerary on Nov. 9, while Weaver continues on to Argentina, Uruguay, and Puerto Rico to gather still photography for a film-strip currently in production. He will return to Elkhart on Nov. 23.

Cooperating agencies for the film project are Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart; General Conference Mennonite Commission on Overseas Missions, Newton, Kan.; Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions, Salunga, Pa.; Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pa.; and the Mennonite Brethren Missions/Services, Hillsboro, Kan. Leighton Ford, Scottsdale, Pa., and Faith and Life Press, Newton, Kan., will supply printed materials for the 1971 mission study to supplement and reinforce the film message. Anticipated completion date for the entire project is June 1, 1971.

VS-ers Initiate Special Project

Eight hours a day is not enough for Voluntary Service workers in New Haven, Conn., to reach their goals for their work with youth.

VS-youth workers promised to send seven community fellows to Camp Deer Park in New York. But the $200 they needed was not available through the VS program.

The youth workers initiated a money-raising effort that captured the interest of the whole unit. The VS-yers waxed cars, baby-sat and wrote to their home youth groups and congregations. Richard Landis, the unit leader, said, "Already we have far surpassed our goal. The enthusiastic support and group spirit encouraged Jim and Adam." The group raised $500.

Jim Landis manages a youth center for teenage fellows in the "Hill" - a section of New Haven with critical needs in housing, education, and medical assistance.

Adam Esbenshade, who with Jim, has worked with the local youth, is pastor of the Bible Fellowship Center in New Haven.

Tours Still Open

Very soon Menno Travel Service will be closing out seat availabilities on the first of its "Holy Land Highlights" tour programs. This departure is scheduled for Nov. 21-30, 1970. Air carrier is SAS. Stops are planned in Copenhagen, both coming and going.

Jet air accommodations, comfortable tour buses, first-class hotels, and three meals a day are all part of the low tour cost of $559.

Similar tours are scheduled for Dec. 26, 1970, and March 6, 1971, departures.

MTS offices can provide further information. Or you can write to the Head Office, Menno Travel Service, 102 East Main Street, Ephrata, Pa. 17522.

Building Begins at Bienenberg

Ground was broken at the European Mennonite Bible School, Bienenberg, Switzerland, on Aug. 25 for a new dormitory and new education building. Earlier that day, an old barn which stood on the site where the new buildings are to be built had been demolished and burned. The groundbreaking ceremony was held at 7:30 P.M. with Samuel Gerber, principal of the school, leading the service.

Persons from Germany, France, and Luxembourg, as well as Switzerland, came for the occasion. One family traveled from Taberthausen, Bavaria (550 kilometers), with their children to introduce them to their future Bible school.

Gerber welcomed the many guests and told them, "We rejoice in the knowledge that you are going to think, speak, and build along with us, but most of all, that you are going to pray with us." The Schanzeli Church choir sang and Brother Hans Rufenacht gave a short message.

After the message, the groundbreaking ceremony took place. Walter Hofer, chairman of the Mennonitische Gemeinschaftswerk was the first to turn the sod. Then several of the responsible brethren and representatives of various interested groups and churches took their turn. Gerber, a former student, a current student, and representatives from eight different countries also participated.
FIELD NOTES

Gerald L. Shenk, 2541 Marietta Ave., Lancaster, Pa., has been appointed Assistant Secretary of Personnel and Assistant Secretary of Home Missions of Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions, Salunga, Pa.

In his work half time as Assistant Secretary of Personnel, Shenk will assist Personnel Secretary Larry Newsanger in the recruitment of youth for the Voluntary Service program.

Shenk, 30, is a graduate of Eastern Mennonite College, Harrisonburg, Va., and holds a master’s degree in counseling from the University of Virginia, Charlottesville. For the past two years Shenk was Dean of Men at EMC.

Guy F. Hershberger, professor emeritus of history, Goshen College, Goshen, Ind., is among the more than 8,500 living contributors to the 1970 edition of Encyclopaedia Britannica. He is author, in part, of the article on conscientious objectors.

Encyclopaedia Britannica is the oldest continuously published reference book in the English language. It was first published in Edinburgh, Scotland, 202 years ago, in 1768.

Hershberger taught at Goshen College 41 years, 1923-1966.

The Virginia Board of Nursing granted full accreditation to Eastern Mennonite College’s nursing program on Sept. 9.

The Virginia Board based their decision on a review of the program in April and the state board of examination results of the first nursing graduates. Sixteen women took degrees this May. Approximately one fourth of EMC’s women students enroll in the nursing curriculum. The program features team teaching and an integrated approach to clinical courses.

Marvin D. Yoder was ordained to the ministry for the Casselton congregation, Sept. 13. Floyd E. Kaufman was the officiating bishop with Elmer D. Hershberger bringing the message. Bro. Yoder’s address is: 132 12th Ave. N., Casselton, N.D. 58012.

Eastern Mennonite College athletes will have a new team name, three new coaches, and the option to enroll as physical education majors during the current academic year.

Arthur L. Mullet, athletic director, announced that EMC teams will be referred to as “Royals” in the future. The Physical Education Department chose the name after polling student opinion. The new coaches are Byron S. Shenk, Luke M. Drescher, and John H. Hess.

Eastern Mennonite College has named a new instructor in home economics. Mary Schrag, formerly from Goshen, Ind., will teach courses in clothing construction and home economics education. EMC offers four sequences in home economics — general, education, dietetics, and nutrition science.

On Sept. 3 Nelson Good, originally from Lititz, Pa., began serving as Eastern Mennonite Mission Board’s Voluntary Service Administrator for Washington, D.C. Good’s half-time job will include developing new projects, assisting unit leaders in job placement, and maintaining contacts between the VS units and local churches.

In the past, all VS administration came from the Salunga office. The area administrator posts were created to place VS leadership in the hands of people living in the area of the VS units who understand the local needs.

Luke and Dorothy Beiderer began a second term of service in Saigon, Vietnam, Sept. 20, under EMBMC. Their address is Box 991, Saigon, Vietnam.

James Metzler, EMBMC worker in Saigon, Vietnam, reported on Sept. 8, “Buddhist leaders, students, newspapers, and peasants continue to cry for immediate peace in increasingly bold ways. Buddhist peace candidates drew the most votes in last week’s senatorial elections. Cries are arising now because of the spiraling living costs — especially food — resulting directly from America’s program of Vietnamization. The suffering of these people is far from over and woe to those who are determined to continue it!”

Graduation exercises at Nazareth Hospital, Nazareth, Ethiopia, were held on Sept. 5. Twelve primary and twelve secondary dressers graduated. Shamsudin Abdo was the graduation speaker. Dressers serve as medical assistants and nurse aides in medical institutions throughout the area. The Dresser Bible School has selected a new class and will reopen on Sept. 21.

The new address of EMBMC’s Lancaster Voluntary Service unit is 36 Green St., Lancaster, Pa. 17602.

Readers Say

Submissions to Readers Say column should comment on printed articles.

I read the article on "What the Well-Dressed Woman Isn't Wearing" at least three times. In fact, I cut it out of the magazine so my parents wouldn't need to do it for me. It is the first article on the subject that made me think about it without building up resentment. I guess the statement that got to me was: "If you're not selling something, please don't advertise it." I appreciate Kerry Elliot's emphasis on modesty, not on how many inches can show and how many can't. I'm glad I have the freedom to put my hems down. I'm glad I can finally put them down because I understand why it is necessary instead of because Mom. Dad, or the minister is telling me or I'm using some 90s-era 'experts' article. Keep printing those that are necessary even when they tramp on toes (or knees or whatever). — Joan Johnson

The article "Beloved, Beware Lest Ye Also..." in the July 28 issue, follows what seems to be a popular pattern; that of placing all Christians into two or three groups. Though I don't think this was the writer's intention, he seems to put them into three groups, namely, the long-haired artists protesting war and racism, the "Kill Commies for Christ" group, and the uninvolved, unconnected person who thinks only of himself and his material possessions. Are there not others? Where do the funds come from to support the many church programs, such as our schools and colleges, the MCC relief and mission programs, Mennonite relief projects? To name only a few? Do they come from the long-haired artists, the "Kill Commies for Christ* group, or the unconnected, selfish, uninvolved persons?

I am not suggesting all is well and as it should be, but are there not some concerned individuals serving "in the name of Christ" while engaged in an honest profitable job or business? Is it really that bad to have a white middle-class Anglo-Saxon American? Yes, "the per member" giving figure is much too low but it is an accepted fact that a small percent of the members give most of the money. Our church publications are full of articles condemning the establishment, but we need only turn the page to find another plea for more funds to support another committee, seminar, or study group. I am not condemning these projects as they are necessary for the total church program but doesn't it take a combined effort by all individuals? Perhaps our youth would have more respect and appreciation for parents and church if they were told the complete story. Let's tell it as it is! — Amos J. Miller, Goshen, Ind.

I agree with Gerald Studer's letter of Aug 25 in which he states, "I am inclined to regret that the Mennonite Church ever accepted earning service as a legal or moral "option" for fulfilling the laws of the U.S. in regard to two years of service. Gerald's letter emphasizes the effect of the I-W earning service program on discipleship and on our efforts to be a disciplined church. His point is a good one: I want to emphasize an additional point. If I were a Baptist, or a Presbyterian, or a Roman Catholic, or an unchurched person, and if my son was serving in Vietnam, or had been crippled or killed there, I think I would look with resentment toward the Mennonite neighbor boy who was safe in the U.S. (and perhaps only 25 miles from home), earning a regular wage, paying for a car, and perhaps driving home every weekend to see his girl. Even if I would be convinced that the Mennonite boy was sincere and consistent in conduct, and efficient in his work, I think I would consider that the Mennonite boy was on the receiving end of a church and government policy that is far too lenient—and that there is not even a semblance of equality between the sacrifice of my son and that of the son next door. And if (I repeat the if and underline it) I had reason to suspect that the Mennonite I-W was drinking and fornicking his way through his two years of service, I would be angry—and understandably so.

On the other hand, if I knew that Mennonite neighbor boy to be a person of character, and if he was serving in some distant location for 15 or 25 dollars a month, I would be much more likely to say, "I can see that." — Stanley C. Shenk, Goshen, Ind.

I would like to say that the article by Kerry Elliot, "What the Well-Dressed Woman Isn't Wearing," in the Sept 8 issue of Gospel Herald is very well done and meets with my hearty approval. We have been passing it around and plan to further do so. Is there any way we could get some more copies? I would like to suggest it be printed in tract form. Many other articles and editorials would take also of time, and I would like to take this opportunity to say, "Thank you." — Mrs. Paul Morris, Franklin, Pa.

Puerto Rico:
A Time of Transition

By David Helmuth

Here in Puerto Rico the Spirit is seemingly leading the church through a crisis which has yet to reach its greatest intensity. There is no doubt that God’s Spirit is at work in the process. However, the Spirit’s working in and through "clay vessels" makes it difficult to discern when specific events and happenings are truly "fruits of the Spirit."

There is an increased awareness that the future of the Puerto Rican Mennonite Church lies with her own membership and not with the Mennonite Board of Missions.

While this awareness does not reflect a negative attitude on the part of the Puerto Rican Church toward the Board and its missionaries, it does indicate a changing role and relationship. In a special way during the past year the church has been reminded of this reality. A change of government after 28 years has led to political polarization on the issue of ultimate Puerto Rican cultural identity and political status.

This problem has been debated for many years. With the coming of a government which is actively pushing for statehood, the opposing political parties are strongly attacking statehood. This means among other things that the North American in Puerto Rico finds himself in a dilemma. Increasingly the Puerto Rican wants to decide his own future, make his own decisions, and become responsible for all areas of his life. This has serious implications for the missionary role in the life of the church. A mutual awareness and a good amount of understanding has characterized missionary and Puerto Rican leaders in the face of the changing missionary role. Open and frank dialogue is going on at various levels.

The mind of the Spirit is not always easy to discern. In general it seems that the era of the missionary as pastor of a single congregation is over. At present only one missionary serves part time in the pastorate. Some act as general resources for the church-at-large and some relate as counseling pastors to a number of churches. Two missionaries are working full time in the area of leadership training and Christian education.

Puerto Ricans have taken increased responsibility for leadership in the conference executive committee. The possibility of a Puerto Rican serving full time as general secretary of the conference is presently under consideration. The conference through its Bible Institute has sought to invest personnel and finances in an intensified program to reach the membership with a leadership training program which will prepare the church for this time of transition.

There is an increased awareness that the problems of society at large affect the life and ministry of the church.

In an island of 3,421 square miles and 2,700,000 people (tentative 1970 census figures) the problems of society at large press upon us individually and collectively. An unusually rapid growth of our urban areas, plus rapid industrialization, has intensified the problems often related to such processes. With over 800 Puerto Ricans per square mile, one might imagine the reason for increased concern for ways of controlling population growth.

The reality of social injustice is beginning to dawn upon us. According to a Labor Department study in 1963, 9 percent of Puerto Rican families share 45 percent of the island income. While per capita income has risen to $1,200 a year, nevertheless 43 percent of Puerto Rican families have less than $2,000 yearly income; and 77,000 families receive less than $200 a year.

Destruction of natural resources (especially sand taken from beaches for construction purposes); transportation (500,000 cars jam the roads), and drug addiction are top priority concerns in Puerto Rico. Drug addiction threatens to get out of control, with some estimates of the number of addicts running as high as 17,000.

As a church we really have done very little in response to these concerns, but a "moving of the Spirit" among us is jarring us to action. The government needs our support and our initiative. I have hope that as a brotherhood we will begin to realize that such a situation calls for a real ministry of love and compassion to meet the total needs of Puerto Rico.

The continued and increased atrocities of the Vietnam War have made us further aware of our passive and dormant peace witness.

All wars are terrible, but the news media has impressed the Vietnam situation upon us in a way that I believe God's Spirit can use to stir us concerning our relation to war and violence. The number of draft resisters has grown rapidly during the past year. Recently Chief U.S. District Judge Hiram Cancia ruled in effect that draft resister Edwin Feliciano Grafals qualified as a conscientious objector on the basis of his belief that the U.S. legal relation to Puerto Rico is not sufficiently clear to allow the military draft to be extended to Puerto Rico without further clarification and the specific consent of the Puerto Rican people.

This decision will likely increase the number of draft resisters in addition to making a significant impact upon the status debate. The time is ripe for a clear testimony concerning our position as a historic peace church. Other denominations have been somewhat disillusioned at our failure to take leadership in a concern which many share. The ROTC building at the university was burned, resulting in injuries and death. Seeds of violence are being sown. But, I am sad to report, we have done little more than talk.

We have talked about presenting our peace stance in the local newspapers, but the Spirit has not sufficiently moved us to do it. We are increasingly saying to each other: "We ought to do something about this. We ought to orient our youth concerning revolution and violence." Then we make a few general pronouncements and little more.

The Secretary for Christian Education and the Secretary for Youth did reproduce in Spanish the three-month Sunday school series on Peacemakers in a Broken World which was used in all our churches for the youth and adult classes during the first three months of 1970. We do need a mighty working of God's Spirit to further activate us in this area.

Love Casts Out Fear

I was a conscientious objector in the backwaters of World War II — a dairy tester in Maine. It was at the height of the Battle of the Bulge and I was in the Hutchins' home. Sitting around that quiet table we listened to the radio, knowing that Erwin and Mark were with the First and Third Armies, facing the brunt of Rundstedt's attack. Yet, in that setting, these concerned parents accepted me with Christian grace. In fact, a friendship grew between this pious Baptist family and a Brethren in Christ widow in far-off Pennsylvania.

The years passed — with an annual exchange of Christian greetings between the two mothers. And then, a quarter of a century after the Battle of the Bulge, a telephone call came from Maine. "We wanted you to know that Anna Hutchins went to be with the Lord today." After all these years this family cared enough about me to share the news of their mother's passing!

Come to think of it — that's been the story of my life. I never quite got over the occasion when the late Bishop J. T. Ginder came to me and said, "Young people like you thrill me." He had lost one son in overseas missionary service. He certainly sensed that I had gotten things in my head that challenged his own ideas. Yet, he let me know that he had confidence in God's ability to lead me into a life of usefulness. How could I forget the incident? A day before he died, Brother Ginder wrote me a letter enclosing "only one dollar" to help the mission work among the Navahos.

Along with the traditional sentiments I want to speak in praise of those who go out of their way to love young people and find a way to express it. I am convinced that the moral and spiritual authority of a patriarch transcends physical prowess or temporary political advantage.

In the Philippines it was my privilege to teach science, math, and history in a "non-Christian" tribe with a head-hunting tradition! While the G-stringed and bare breasted "aged ones" watched from the sidelines, their offspring were learning things that were a direct challenge to their way of life. Yet I was teaching there at the invitation of Lubuangen, their aging chief who talked little but had the genius to distill the wisdom of his people. These people loved their children enough to welcome change at the expense of their own traditions.

There is a classic example in the Bible on how to make way for the upcoming generation. King David lived a full life with great triumphs, and some bad blunders. As he neared the end of his days, he became obsessed with making preparations for the work that would fall to Solomon. David's real vision went beyond his lifelong desire to build the Temple. "I know, O my God, that thou dost test the heart and that plain honesty pleases thee; with an honest heart I have given all these gifts willingly, and have rejoiced now to see thy people here present give willingly to thee. O Lord God of Abraham, Isaac and Israel our fathers, maintain this purpose for ever in thy people's thoughts and direct their hearts toward thyself. Grant that Solomon my son may loyally keep thy commandments."*

How do you suppose Solomon felt? I think I know how he felt! And I know a great crop of young people who need just such a gift of love, and deserve that vote of confidence.

Let the Fire Burn

A smoky little fire is struggling to stay alive as it licks away at the damp half-burned sticks left from a former fire that didn't quite make it. More somber is the possibility that that earlier fire was snuffed out by something deliberately hostile and too big to challenge successfully. It is in the cave of the Anabaptists in the foothills of the mountains of Switzerland, a cave large enough for 150 and inaccessible enough for the hunted to be relatively safe from the hunting.

This time there are about thirty. A high level of anticipation is shared by all, for today, in addition to the preaching of the Word and the corporate worship of a committed disciple group, there is to be a communion service. Christ is among all these who have made their way up the slippery path in a nasty rain to reaffirm their commitment to Him and to each other. Christ is present; each is well aware of it.

A 75-year-old man, eager-eyed, among the first to arrive at the cave today, absorbs all he can of the atmosphere and the mood of the moment, for although this is his first trip to the cave of the Anabaptists, he is well aware that it may also be his last. There are young people, one or two perhaps, less knowing what it is all about than their elders who have experienced the anticipation of meeting God deeply before, yet young and old alike are well aware that here in the cave of the Anabaptists many a man or woman received the needed courage to go out, ready to die for what he believed.

The rain falls more vigorously as if it is intended for a screen to hide the worshipers from whatever unappreciative eyes might try to see. A second screen, a gentle waterfall, drops off the face of the cave into the valley below. Its approving murmur mixes with whatever sounds might be heard from within the cave and successfully muffles them from outside ears.

The worship proceeds. It is amazing that without symbols, except the supreme symbols, the bread and the wine, without pulpit or pew, and without even the simplest structures, a group of brethren, unaware of distinctions like clergy and laity, worship God with an authenticity hardly ever achieved behind stained-glass windows. They sing meditatively a praise song from the Ausbund, written by their brethren in the prison of Passau. And they conclude full-voiced and vigorously with "Faith of Our Fathers."

It is still raining. The group largely silent makes its way down into the valley. One person holds the hand of the old man at the most dangerous places. And they arrive at a farmhouse where a large modern bus is waiting. For these

"Woe is me! for I am undone" (Is. 6:5).

In the Scripture we are called upon to have a proper estimate of ourselves. We are not to think of ourselves more highly than we ought to think. We are to love others as we love ourselves. This implies that we are to love ourselves in the best sense of the word. One who does not love himself cannot love others. So the cry today for a proper self-image needs to be heard and profited from.

Interestingly enough, when we come to the Scripture, we find that a proper self-image does not come from the sources we usually think of. Often ego strength is spoken about as essential for a good self-image. This, along with such things as capacity and opportunity to accomplish things, a solid financial foundation, and good interpersonal relationships, we are told give a strong self-image.

Scripturally, a proper self-image seems to arise out of one's own inefficiency and unworthiness and God's sufficiency and grace. These factors, God's enabling and forgiveness through grace, makes one undismayed even in the face of shortcomings and sins. So Martin Luther could utter the thankful cry: "Lo, to me an unworthy, condemned, and contemptible creature, altogether without merit, my God of His pure and free mercy has given in Christ all the riches of righteousness and faith, so that I am no longer in want of anything except faith to believe this is so."

So we do not gain a proper self-image by lifting ourselves up or having others lift us up as much as by faith recognizing that Christ lifts us to a life redeemed.

O God,
When we are complacent — shake us.
When we are disturbed — cool us.
When we are satisfied — stir us.
When we are restless — calm us.
When we are faithful — guard us.

are the Anabaptists of the twentieth century, a group of Americans, who are trying earnestly to recapture in conscious experience what they can of the Anabaptist vision.

Oh, Proud Generation!

A large part of Mennonite preaching in the past was against pride. Although much of such preaching applied the warning to a very narrow area of concern yet the warning was and is important. Pride is a deadly sin. It raises its hand in the face of God and robs Him of His glory, grace, and goodness. It places self before God and others. Pride pushes all others out of the way when they seem to hinder its own progress or position.

A subtle expression of pride which has suddenly struck us in the last few decades centers around our achievements. We are very, very proud of how we made it. The pattern of this pride goes like this: We were poor. We struggled and worked real hard. We had many things against us. But because we worked hard we made it. We are now in the middle- or even upper-middle class. Therefore, anyone else can make it also if they work and do as we did. We are a proud generation.

You see, as Mennonites, we were only a generation or two ago, a very poor, sometimes oppressed, and practically all a struggling people. Then we had great empathy for the black slaves, the new immigrants, and the poor of our communities. But we did work hard and now we find ourselves, like the children of Israel when all went well, with a great desire to be like the other people around us. We admire the gods of the surrounding people. We accept their values and worship in their high places. We find ourselves in the groves and gatherings of the surrounding society. We want above everything else to be accepted. Our country has treated us so well we should not say anything against it lest we might suffer in some way. We have reached middle-class status and are trying our utmost to make it upper-middle. Reading of the deliverance from Egypt and the restoration of God’s people in the Old Testament and relating it to our own history makes extremely relevant reading.
